In the firſt ſtorie in Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 21. there is no manner of mention of ſuch wares. In Theodoret mention is made of a deuill which would not ſuffer any fire to burne the Temple of Iupiter, where we omit firſt to ſpeak what ground the Paſtor had to aduenture vpon ſuch a meane. Secondly, that if he had ground, yet the ſame being by ſpeciall direction, and not by ordinary rule of the Church, cannot without like extraordinary direction be followed: eſpecially conſidering that Euſebius teſtifieth, that the gift of miracles, and namely of caſting out deuils was gone in his time, and if there were any ſuch miracle, it was extraordinarie, as may euidently appeare by the ſtorie, in that the Biſhop of the place being a godly man knew of no ſuch way to driue away the deuill, ſo that a Paſtor that dwelt in the South was fain to do the feat that was done. Howbeit yeelding here whatſoeuer the Ieſuites can demand, yet will it not warrant their ſorcery: for firſt it is not of caſting

out the devill out of any man, but out of a place, which we never remember to haue been done either of Christ or of his Apostles. Secondly, the Pastor gat the victorie which he had against the devill by prayer unto God, and not by coniuring the devill, and talking with him rashly without calling thereunto, as you do coniure. Thirdly, the ground of his prayer is, for that he lived amongst a sort of infidels which abhorred the name of Christ, which you cannot alledge for ground of your exorcisme: for whether you consider your own sect, which in truth and substance hating not Iesus, make more of the bare letters of the name of Iesus then we do: or whether you consider our sort that giue more to Christs vertue and power then you can patiently beare, it is evident that you haue not that warrant that the Pastor there had.

Last of all the holy water there spoken of by the crossing and putting it vnder the altar obteineth the vertue onely which is ordinarie and vsuall, that being sparingly put into a great fire it reenforceth the fire and causeth to burne more eagerly then before: where you ascribe vnto your holy water a vertue which is not ordinarie nor naturall. If therefore a man may beleeue that the blacke Deuill, as he is there termed fled when the holy water was put in the fire; yet it is to be reasonably intended that he departed by vertue of the prayer made by the Pastor, that the water might haue the accustomed strength, then by vertue of the water it selfe; vnlesse it like better the Iesuites to cut the sinewes of prayer, which is said to haue great vertue; to the end they may adde force vnto their weake water. Last of all who can be ignorant of that sophome which concludeth that the Diuell tooke his heeles and ranne away as soone as the water came, therefore hee ran away because of the water; which he could not be afraid of, vnlesse the poore Diuell (as the cat) hauing been before scaulded in hot water euer after feared the coald. That of Epiphanius hæres. 30. Ebionit. maketh as little for the holy water: for there the author of the miracle is an obstinate infidell and newly drawen to Christ, which wee thinke you will not make exorcists. Hee with his crossed water restoreth a madde man, which as wee are sure that you cannot doe: so wee remember not that you make profession of it. In all which and like miracles, not to ouerthrow their credit: wee yet further answer that the good successe that these meanes had, proue no more the lawfulnesse of them, then the sacrifices of liuing men amongst the Gentils vnto their Idols, accompanied with some desired issue out of their troubles wherein they were: proue the lawfulnesse of that horrible and most detestable worship of their God. What Pope Gregorie exhorteth Austine the Moncke to doe touching the hallowing of temples, skilleth not vs, which neither make Gregorie our example to command by, nor Austine our patterne to obey by. Wee well remember that Elizeus applied salt to the healing of waters 4. King. 2. and pray you to remember that your vnabilitie to doe the like, can not let you forget that hee did it extraordinarily in that the spirit of Elias was doubled vpon him: as appeareth in that the sonnes or schollers of the Prophets (which would haue thought scorne to haue had you for sonnes or schollers) could not do it. Tobit 6. of the liuer of a fish driuing away the Diuell, carrieth a marke of vntruth in the forehead of it, for it ascribeth itto the nature of the liuer, where there is no such power of any creature against the power of the Diuell, not to speake of other the follies and vntrueths of that booke. Howbeit both salt and liuer are expresly against you. For if the Diuell and power of the Diuell be in the creatures, as you say, how can they haue force to expell either the Diuell, or his power: considering that here the creatures without hallowing were applied vnto the vses whereunto they are supposed. And also that is declared that if any vse the liuer, it shall haue that effect of expulsion of the Deuill, where your exorcismes haue no strength but in the Priests hands Dauid 1. Reg. 16. striketh no stroke for you on his harpe, for the quieting of the euill spirit in Saul commeth of a naturall cause, which is that exquisite and laboured musick doth draw minds to the affection of anger or mildnesse according as it is set and tuned.

Indeed the place of the Actes 19. touching casting out of Diuels in the name of Iesus and Paul, becommeth you very well: for they were sorcerous Priests that used those names without lawfull calling as you do, which had their reward accordingly: for the man in whom the Divell was, set upon the seuen Priests, and prevailed against them by wounding them and putting them to flight. And therefore it is said, that they went about to exorcise the Divell, but could not driue him out. And it is a token that the evill spirit haunteth you and blindeth you marvellously, that you are so ignorant and senseleese in the word, as to seeke remedy where your bane groweth. Neither ought it to offend you, that we call them sorcerous Priests: for being the sonnes of a Priest, they must also be intended to be Priests, unlesse there were some lameneese or other defect of body or minde that barred them from that whereunto they were borne.

That of Iames 5. oftentimes alledged, commeth after to be answered. Ierom. ad Theodoret. of relickes and the Crosse, haue been answered. The place of Augustine, lib. de Levit. 22. 8. receiueth the same answer that Theodorets and Epiphanius holy water doth: Beside that Augustines owne words confessing in the beginning of the chapter that the miracles often depended of the credit of particular persons, giue us sufficient warrant that a man may haue nevertheleese Christian faith which beleeveth them not.

Gregorie the Popes witnesse is not current in any court of record, but onely in the Popes Chappell. And now the Iesuites haue sought, not onely into all the garners of the holy Scriptures, but ransacked all corners and farmed the fouleest places (as it were the stables) of good writers: yet what food haue they found in the one to preserue their famished cause of Crosse, haly water, & haly bread. Or what lowlage haue they raked together in the other able to make this cockle & darnell of their ceremonies to come up in such sort as they would haue it. We grant that in the Apocrypha & good mens writings, there are found sentences that nourish weeds, but the Popish weeds which they seek the soyle of, finde they not. And yet not able to bring so much as one place fully maintaining their cause, but divers making for them nothing, and some flatly against them; notwithstanding they are not ashamed to say, they haue armed their Popish Knight with grounds of Scripture and Antiquity, to whom they haue giuen neither buckler of good defence, nor sword of the word of God, whose edge is not either turned from vs, or towards them.

In the cloze they would gladly make a diſtinction betweene conjuring Necromancers, and conjuring Prieſts, but they are ſuch Menichmiſſes, and reſemble ſo one another, that he that hath acquaintance with the one, can be no ſtranger vnto the other: for they both command the Divell, both muſt haue hally water, both certain ſet prayers, certaine words of Scripture, certaine croſſes in odde number, according to the rule of Sorcerers. And where they ſay for difference, that the Divels by them are forced and tormented, which are by Witches and Sorcerers pleaſed, honoured, and couenanted with: that is it wherein the queſtion ſtanding, hath no manner of aſſiſtance but of your bare word. But ſeeing your principall weapons are common, what reaſon is there that the Divell ſhould be more forced or tormented when you uſe them, then when they, if he be afraid of your hally water, he will be afraid of theirs, which is often the ſame with yours: if your Croſſe doe crucifie him, why ſhould not the Sorcerers and Witches croſſes croſſe him alſo? neither will it bee eaſie for you to proue, but if hee goe away by your prayers, he goeth intreated as well at theirs; if they conjure for gaine, you doe it not for nought: if they to appeare ſome body, as Simon Magus in the Acts, the world ſeeth that you had rather the Divell were exalted then you ſhould be put downe. Well, aſſured we are, that in what other things ſoeuer you differ, yet in the principall you fully agree, in that you both doe it without calling, both without and contrary to the word and commandement of God. And if there be ſome differences, wherein the Sorcerers in impietie goe beyond you: yet heerein you farre paſſe them, that where they ſeek the night and ſolitary places to hide their impiety in, you commit your abhominations in the gates and before the Sunne.

Act. 8. 9. 10.

Verſe. 14. Neglect not the grace that is in thee: which is given thee by propheſie, with impoſition of the hands of prieſthood.

RHEM. 16. [14. The grace.] S. Auguſtine declareth this grace to be the gift of the holy Ghoſt giuen vnto him by receiuing this holy Order, whereby hee was made fit to execute the office to his own ſaluation and other mens. And note withall, that grace is not onely giuen in or with the Sacraments, by the receiuers faith or deuotion, but by the Sacrament, per impoſitionem, by impoſition of hands, for ſo he ſpeaketh 2. Tim. 1. which is here ſaid, cum impoſitione, with impoſition.

Grace giuen in the Sacrament of Orders.

RHEM. 17. [14. With impoſition.] S. Ambroſe vpon this place, implieth in the word Impoſition of hands, all the holy actions and ſacred words done and ſpoken ouer him when hee was made Prieſt. Whereby (ſaith he) he was deſigned to the worke, and receiued authoritie, that he durſt offer ſacrifice in our Lords ſteede vnto God. So doth the holy Doctor allude vnto the words that are ſaid now alſo in the Catholicke Church to him that is made Prieſt: Accipe poteſtatem offerendi pro viuis & mortuis in nomine Domini. That is, Take or receiue thou authoritie to offer for the liuing and the dead in the name of our Lord. for the which S. Hierom alſo (as is noted before) ſaith, that the ordering of Prieſts is, by impoſition of hands and imprecation of voice.

Conſecration of Prieſts by impoſition of hands.

In Eſay 58.

RHEM. 18. [14. Of Prieſthood.] The practiſe of the Church giueth vs the ſenſe of this place, which the auncient Councell of Carthage doth thus ſet down. When a Prieſt taketh orders, the Biſhop bleſſing him and holding his hand vpon his head, let all the Prieſts preſent lay alſo their hands on his head by the Biſhops hands &c. Who ſeeth not now, that holy Orders giuing grace by an externall ceremonie and worke, is a Sacrament? So all the old Church counteth it. And S. Aug. (cont. ep. Parm. li. 2. c. 13.) plainly ſaith that no man doubteth but it is a Sacrament, and leſt any man thinke that he vſeth not the word Sacrament properly and preciſely he ioyneth it in nature and name with baptiſme. Againe, who ſeeth not by this vſe of impoſition of hands in giuing Orders and other Sacraments, that Chriſt, the Apoſtles, & the Church may borrow of the Iewiſh rites certain conuenient ceremonies & ſacramentall actions, ſeeing this ſame (as * the Heretickes can not deny) was receiued of the manner of Ordering Aaron and the Prieſts of the old law or other heads of the people? See Exod. 39. Num. 27. 23.

Holy orders Sacraments. Conc. Carth. 4. c. 3.

Beza in cap. 6. Act.

CARTVV. 16. [14. The grace] That grace is given by and with the ordination of the Miniſters, when it is duely given and receiued, wee willingly yeeld, becauſe the words of the Scripture beare it. But that it is giuen in either impoſition of hands, or in any ſacraments, it is a Popiſh dreame. As alſo it is a franticke deuice to imagine that by the very worke of impoſition of hands, grace is giuen, which is onely the inſtrumentall meane whereby it is given. The reaſon alſo and proofe thereof, is a palpable ſottery, ſeeing the prepoſition [διὰ] conſtrued with a genetiue caſe, noteth an inſtrumentall working onely, unleſſe it be in very few caſes, as when it is applied to the ſon, the father, or ſuch like, where the thing it ſelfe is ſuch as will not admit that ſignification. Wherefore to gather of the prepoſition which the prepoſition yeeldeth not, but holdeth backe, is too much to truſt to the ignorance of the world. For S. Paul when he would take all from himſelfe, and other Miniſters touching the giving of grace, to giue it unto God alone, uſeth this manner of ſpeech, ſaying, Who is Paul? or who is Apollo? but the Miniſters by whom ye haue beleeued. I haue planted, Apollo hath watered, but God it is that giveth the increaſe. So that the gift of the Spirit commeth no more from his hand then from his mouth into the heart of the receiver, but from heaven directly, and without any other receptacle intercepting it before it come to him upon whom it is beſtowed; neither can this bee the ignorance of the tongue onely, but, as it is to be feared, a malitious wreſting of the words of the Apoſtle, ſeeing not onely in other places, but even in this ſame place and verſe, from whence they would ſuck this poyſon, they are evidently confuted: for it is ſaid, that the gift or grace was given by Propheſie: yet is it ſo farre that the act of propheſie conferred the grace that it was not ſo much as given at that time, but after it was propheſied that Timothy ſhould bee an excellent miniſter, otherwiſe could it not be a propheſie.

1. Cor. 3. 5. 6.

In the next Section Ambroſe (as other fathers) calling the Sacrament of the ſupper a Sacrifice, maketh nothing for the Popiſh ſacriledge, as ſhal appeare in the proper place. Further, to proue that the ordination of Miniſters is a Sacrament, is brought Conc. Carth. 4. c. 3. which proueth againſt the Ieſuits, that by the Presbyterie, or (as they terme it) Prieſthood, is meant not the ordination which is conferred ferred, but the company of the Elders that doe conferre it, but that it is a Sacrament, there is not a word. Neither doth it follow thereof that it is a Sacrament, because by it is given grace, unlesse it be the grace of eternall life, which is not given by this signe. And therefore although Augustine calleth it a Sacrament, as hee doth baptisme, yet it hath been shewed, then when hee speaketh properly of the nature of the Sacrament, hee maketh but two Sacraments onely, Baptisme and the Eucharist. Vpon Gal. 4.

Last of all, where they would proue that the Church may translate Iewish ceremonies from the Law unto the Gospell, because the laying on of hands used under the Law, is also used under the Gospell, they be foolishly arrogant. For the authority which became the Apostles, beseemeth not them: much lesse may they for one ceremony which they tooke from the Law, borrow, as they doe, a great number. Last of all, is it meet to ordaine those which the Apostles by leaving the use of, haue declared to be abolished. Beside that the laying on of hands is of greater ancientie then the Law of Moses: so that it ought not to be so much marvell if the ceremonies of the Law ceasing, it was retained, especially seeing it being a most easie and most simple ceremonie, it was most agreeable to the simplicitie and sinceritie of the Gospell. Gen. 48. 14

Verse 16 Attend to thy selfe and to doctrine: be earnest in them. For, this doing, thou shalt ‖ saue both thy selfe and them that heare thee.

RHEM. 19. [16. Saue both thy selfe.] Though Christ be our onely Sauiour, yet the Scriptures forbeare not to speake freely and vulgarly & in a true sense, that man also may saue himselfe and others. But the Protestants notwithstanding follow such a captious kind of Diuinitie that if a man speake any such thing of our Lady or any Sainct in heauen, or other meane of procuring saluation, they make it a derogation to Christs honour, with such hypocrites haue we now a dayes to do. Men also are called Sauiours without derogation to Christ.

CARTVV. 19. [16. Saue both thy selfe] Wee professe freely, that wee giue to no earthly creature this honour, to be any proper cause of our saluation. To those which God hath ordained to be ministeriall and instrumentall causes of it, we giue that which the Scripture giveth, esteeming that as it is a superstitious niceness and folly not to dare to giue that to men which the Scripture giveth: so to be bold aboue that which is written, and to giue them more then either the rule or example of holy Scripture doth afford, it is an intollerable pride and prophanesse. And this iudgement if yee count hypocrisie in us, we had rather be counted Hypocrites of you, which having long sithence denied the power of godlinesse, now also begin, not to care so much as for the very shew thereof; then to prouoke the Lord against us, which requiring truth, especially in the inward parts, taketh pleasure also in the honest shew and face thereof. Tit. 1. Psal. 51. 6. 1. Thes. 5. 22. Rom. 12. 17

CHAP. V.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 5 But she that is a Widow indeed, and desolate: let her hope in God, and continue in obsecrations and ‡ prayers night and day.

RHEM 1. [5. Prayers night.] Because of this continuall prayer which standeth not with coniugall and carnall acts of matrimony (as the Apostle signifieth 1. Cor. 7. 5.) therfore were these widowes to liue in the state of perpetuall continency.

Verse 17 The Priests that rule well, let them be esteemed ‡ worthy of double honour: especially they that labour ‖ in the word and doctrine.

RHEM. 2. [17. Worthie of double honour.] Double honour and liuelyhood due to good Priests.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3, Honour widowes which are ‖ widowes indeed.

RHEM. 3. [3. Widowes indeed.] S. Ambrose calleth them widowes and desolate indeed, that might marrie, but to make themselues better and more worthy of God, refuse marriage, which they know to be but once blessed, imitating * holy Anne, who in fasting and prayers serued God night and day, neuer knowing but one husband. Such professed widows then are to be honored and succoured. Neither doth he onely speake of the Churches widowes (of whom specially afterward) but of all that by profession kept their widowhood, exhorting them to passe their time in prayer and fasting v. 5. Which was an honourable and holy state much written of, and commanded in the primitiue Church, namely by S. Ambrose, and by S. Augustin, who wrote books intitled thereof, and make it next to virginitie. Amb. de viduis Aug. de bono viduitatis.

CARTVV. 3. [3 Widowes indeed.] The Apostle meaneth onely widowes destitute of maintenance, as appeareth manifestly by his standing upon the etimologie or force of the word, which he interpreteth after in the fifth verse to be of one, which being left alone and destitute of the succour of friends, hath need to be releeued by the almes of the Church. And therefore they say false, saying that he speaketh not of the Church widowes alone. Beside that, if he had spoken of other widowes, as they pretend, which to lead a better life abstaine from second marriage: there was as good cause that he should haue willed Timothie to haue honoured the Widowers as Widowes, it being as great a grace in men to abstain from second marriage, as for the women: and so much the more as womens flourishing yeares haue a shorter course then mens. They also falsifie Ambrose, whom they pretend to enlarge the Apostles meaning to other then Church widowes, where Ambrose after speaking of the triall of this same widow, saith that she ought first to be found worthy (in seeking to assist the discipline of the Church, rather then her gaine) or ever shee bee a Χήρας λέγει ἀπὸ τῆς χηρεύσεως.

Church Widow. But let the Reader obſerue whether the Ieſuites do condemn ſecond marriage or no, when they ſay it is not bleſſed. Surely if it be not bleſſed, it muſt needs be curſed: and if it be not lawfull for the Miniſter to pray to God to bleſſe it, it is evident that it is an unlawfull marriage, ſeeing a lawful may be bleſſed & prayed for. If they ſay that it is Ambroſe iudgment as well as theirs, the Reader may eaſily ſee what hatred they haue againſt marriage, which are ſo ready at one mans bare ſaying, without reaſon to receiue ſuch a ſhamefull report of it. Wee acknowledge that the eſtate of Widow head (as is alſo ſecond marriage) is holy, and that in ſome, whom it better fitteth, then marriage doth, it is alſo better and holier then marriage would be. But that it is holier, ſimply and in it ſelfe, we vtterly deny, whereof let the Reader ſee before vpon Math. 13. & 19. & 1. Cor. 7.

Verſ. 8. But if any man haue not care of his own, and eſpecially of his domeſticals, he hath denied the faith, and is worſe then an Infidell.

RHEM. 4. [8. He hath denied.] Not that by this or by any other deadly ſinne (except incredulitie or doubtfulneſſe in beleefe) they loſe their faith: but that their facts be not anſwerable to their faith and Chriſtian religion, which preſcribeth all ſuch dueties.

Verſ. 9. Let a widow be choſen of no leſſe then three-ſcore yeares, which hath been the wife of one huſband.

Widowes called Diaconiſſæ and their office.

RHEM. 5. [9 Let a widow be choſen.] Now he ſpeaketh more particularly and ſpecially of ſuch widowes as were nouriſhed and found by the oblations of the faithfull and the almes of the Church, and did withall ſome neceſſary ſeruices about women that were to be profeſſed or baptized, for their inſtruction and addreſſing to that and other Sacraments, and alſo about the ſicke and impotent: and withall ſometimes they had charge of the Church goods or the diſpoſition of them vnder the Deacons in reſpect whereof they alſo and the like are called Diaconiſſæ. Euſebius lib. 6. c. 35. reciteth out of Cornelius Epiſtle, that in the Church of Rome there is one Biſhop, 40. Prieſts, fiue Deacons, ſeuen Subdeacons, Acoluthi 24. Exorciſtes, Lectors, and oſtiarij 52. widowes together with the pore 150. all which God nouriſheth in his Church, See Act. Apoſt. c. 6. S. Chryſoſtome lib. 3. de Sacerdotio prope finem. S. Epiphanius in hæreſ. 77. Collyridianorum, Now then, what manner of women ſhould bee taken into the fellowſhip of ſuch as were found of the Church, bee further declared.

CARTVV. 4. 5. [8. 9. He hath denied.] Here is ſomewhat vnworthy the truth, but not worthy the confutation. In the next ſection there is nothing that requireth anſwer, but that the Church widowes were vſed about ſeruices of women which were to be profeſſed and baptized, wanteth proofe, eſpecially of the Scripture.

Theſe widowes muſt haue had but one huſband whereof many Catholick concluſions are deduced. chap. 3. 2.

RHEM. 6. [9. The wife of one husband.] If you would haue a plaine paterne of Hereticall fraude, corruption, and adulteration of the natiue ſenſe of Gods word, and an inuincible demonſtration that theſe new Gloſers haue their conſciences ſeared and hearts obdurated, willingly peruerting the Scriptures againſt that which they know is the meaning thereof, to the maintenance of their ſects: marke well their handling of this place about theſe widowes of the Church. S. Paul preſcribeth ſuch onely to be admitted as haue been the wiues of one husband, that is to ſay, once onely married, not admitting any that haue been twiſe married. By which words the Catholikes proue firſt, that the like phraſe *vſed before of Biſhops and Deacons, that they ſhould bee the husbands of one wife, muſt needs ſignifie that they cannot be twiſe married, nor admitted to theſe and the like functions, if they were more then once married before. Secondly, wee proue by this place againſt the Aduerſaries, that the ſtate of widowhood is more worthie, honourable, decent, and pure in reſpect of the ſeruice of the Church, and more to be releiued of the reuenewes thereof, then the ſtate of married folkes, and that not onely (as the Aduerſaries perhaps may anſwer,) for their greater neceſſitie, to more leiſure, freedome, or expedition to ſerue, in that they be not combered with husband and houſhold, but in reſpect of their viduall continency, chaſtity, and purity, for els ſuch as were widowes with intention and freedom to marry afterward, might haue been admitted by the Apoſtle, as well as thoſe that were neuer to marry againe.

Thirdly, we proue that ſecond marriage not onely after admiſſion to the almes or ſeruice of the Church, but before alſo, is diſagreeable and a ſigne of incontinencie or more luſt and fleſhlineſſe then is agreeable or comely for any perſon belonging to the Church: and conſequently, that the Apoſtle in the laſt Chapter treating of the holy functions of Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and of the Churches refuſing generally bigamos or twiſe married perſons, muſt needs more meane that no man twiſe married ſhould bee receiued to holy Orders; and further, that as none were admitted to bee widows of the Church, that euer intended to marrie again, ſo none ſhould ever be receiued to miniſter the Sacrament (which is a thing infinitely more, and requireth more puritie, and continencie, then the office or ſtate of the ſaid widowe,) that intended to marrie againe, To receiue the body of Chriſt (ſaith S. Hicrom in Apol. pro lib. cont. Ion. Ep. 50. c. 6.) is a greater and holier thing then prayer, and therefore Prieſts that muſt both continually pray and alſo bee occupied about the receiuing or miniſtring the holy Sacrament daily, muſt liue continently.

Fourthly, we proue that it is not vnlawfull to annex, by precept or the parties promiſe, ſingle life or chaſtitie to a whole ſtate or order of the faithfull, becauſe the Apoſtle and the whole Church in his time ioyned to this ſtate of the Churches widowes, perpetuall continencie. Fiftly, we proue hereby that to refuſe and not to accept twiſe married, or ſuch as will not liue ſingle, into the ſtate of widowes or holy Orders, is not to condemne or forbid ſecond marriage, or once and often marrying, with the Manichees according to the doctrine of Diuels, as the Proteſtants (and before them the old condemned Iouinianiſts) doe blaſpheme the Church, for then did S. Paul allow and teach doctrines of Diuels, who refuſeth a twiſe married woman, and hindeth others by their entering into this state neuer to marrie againe: as no doubt hee did the Clergie men much more in the third chapter before. Thus loe we catholikes conferre and conster the Scriptures, and for this meaning wee haue all the doctors without exception. What shfit then haue the Heretickes here? for marrie and remarry they must, let the Scriptures and all the doctors in the world say nay to it. In truth they do not expound the word of God, but flee from the euidence of it, some one way and some another way.

RHEM. 6. And of all other their extremest and most shamefull tergiuersation is, that the Apostle here forbiddeth not the admission of such widowes as haue been twise married, but onely them that haue had two husbands at once. Which was a very vnprobable & extorted exposition before, concerning Bishops and Deacons c. 3. and (as S. Hierome saith ep. 83.) malo nodo malus cuneus: but here that an exception should be made onely against widowes that had had two husbands together) which was a thing neuer lawfull nor neuer heard of) that is a most intollerable impudencie, and a construction that neuer came to any wise mans cogitation before: and yet these their fansies must bee Gods word, and bigamus or bigamia must against their old natures and vse of all writers, be all one with Polygamus and Polygamia. They giue an example of such widowes in women diuorced iustly for their husbands in the old law. As though S. Paul here took order for the Iewes widowes onely, or that had been such a common ease among the Iewes also, that the Apostle needed to take so carefull order for it. Finally, they let not to say that if the Apostle should bee vnderstood to refuse a widow twise married at sundry times, it were vnreasonable and iniurious to second mariages, which haue no more indecencie or signe of incontinencie, (say they) then the first. Thus bold they are with the Apostles and all antiquitie.

CARTVV. 6. & 7. [9. The wife of one husband] These Popish frogges comming out of the mouth of the Dragon and beast, can do nothing else but make a hollow sound and confused noyse in the eares of men, thinking to make it up with clamours which they cannot gaine by reason: for they cry out of force, that we expound these words of the Apostle, a Widow that hath been the wife of one husband, to be vnderstood of her that hath had but one lawfull husband at once: whereas these buzzards, how blinde soeuer, cannot but know, that it is the phrase of the Scripture, which when it saith, that euery man should haue his owne wife, and euery woman her owne husband, meaneth nothing else but that they should haue but one at once. And also when it saith, that they shall be two in one flesh, it meaneth onely that they shall be two in one flesh at once. But thy are able to bring neuer a place in all the Scripture, where this phrase, the wife of one husband, without further addition or circumstance, is taken for her that hath had but one husband. If they alledge 1. Timoth. 5. the husband of one wife: First, the same is beggery. Secondly, wee haue manifestly and invincibly shewed, that by that phrase is vnderstood such a one as neuer had but one lawfull wife at once. And therefore if it had been shewed sufficiently that the holy calling of a Bishop doth not thrust out second marriage, it is much more certaine, that there is no such holynesse in the estate of a Church Widow, which accordeth not well with her that hath been married twice. And if marriage be honourable so oftentimes as it is lawfully repeated, it were against all equity that a woman for doing that which is honourable amongst all men, be put from an honour in the Church which aboue all other men honoureth marriage.

1. Cor. 7. 2
Gen. 2. 24.
Math. 19. 5

Amongst Montanus Waspes, a widow that hath been twice married, may well bee dishonoured: but in the Churches hiue they are not so stung, nor haue such injury offered them. Againe, if the Iesuites were asked, whether there be more shew of incontinencie for a woman which being sixteene yeeres old, liveth two yeeres in matrimony with two husbands, and the rest of her life vntill the age of ninetie, passeth ouer in a commendable and vnrebukeable Widowhood, then if a Maiden marrying a husband at a age of fiftie, liue some yeeres with him. Here, if the Iesuites will keepe their standing, they must say, that the former Widow shall for incontinencie be repulsed from this honour of being the Church Widow, and the latter received to that honour. But is there any so senceleſſe, as to thinke that Paul, or the holy Ghost by him, doth so determine, yet thus the Iesuites make him to speake.

Againe, who knoweth that women oftentimes marry the second time, not for remedy of incontinencie, but for desire of posteritie which they haue not, or for better education and aduancement of the children they haue in marriage, or in a loue and liking of some singular vertue and pietie that they see in him with whom they ioyne in a second marriage: so that if the want of the gift of continencie driving them to a second marriage, should depriue them of this honour; yet forsomuch as the same is not vniuersall in all second mariages, it were a wrong to reward those that are not like.

Last of all, if the Apostles minde were to seclude from this Church dignity all Widowes that haue been twice married: why doth he exhort the yonger Widowes to marry, thereby partly to bar themselues from this honour, partly to dry up the fountaine and to destroy the seed of Church Widdowes, that there should be hardly found any that might put their hand to the Church in this service. The onely reason that they bring, that it was never heard that a woman had two husbands at once, is a meere trifling. As if because no law suffered her to haue two husbands at once, therefore shee could not haue more then her owne husband at once. For first it is well knowne, that many things were done and permitted against law. Then it is knowne that many women during marriage commit adultery, having knowledge of another bed then their husbands. Thirdly, it is knowne that both Iewes and Gentiles marrying many wiues at once, those wiues that were ioyned vnto them after the first, could not haue the man with whom they were coupled, for their lawfull husbands. Fourthly, when being reiected for some other cause then fornication, they married againe, the second was no lawfull husband.

Math. 5. & 19.

Last of all, this rule tooke hold when shelived in fornication either before shee was married vnto a husband, or after her husbands death, whereby all vnderstand how good cause there was that the Apostle should require this at the Churches Widowes hands, that shee should bee such a one as had had but one husband at once. And withall, that the honour and good report of the Gospell is of the

Apostle

Apoſtle better ſeene unto and provided for, by thruſting out from this Church miniſtery, all Widdowes that had lived with any man out of the ſtate of holy matrimony, as we doe interpret it, then by barring Widdowes, which had been either more then once married, or had married a Widower. Therefore it is either a groſſe ignorance, or a malicious reſiſtance of a knowne truth, to ſay that this caſe could not be ſo common as that the Apoſtle needed to take ſo carefull order for it: for when men by corrupt nature are prone of themſelues to put away wiues that they like not, and the other which are put away, to marry againe (there being alſo a permiſſion by Law ſo farre as that it was not puniſhed, ſo that in the Iewes opinon it was lawfull) who doth not ſee that this ſinne muſt needes be rife, which they might commit generally without puniſhment civill or Eccleſiaſticall, and which alſo for the moſt part was thought lawfull. Or are they ſo ſhameleſſe to ſay, that the Apoſtle needed not to take order for that for which the Prophets in their times, but eſpecially our Saviour Chriſt in his time, did ſo often and ſo diligently labour againſt. And if this ſinne was ſo common amongſt one nation of Iewes, being alſo the onely people of God: how greatly was it multiplyed in the reſt of the nations of the whole world, which had been lately ſtrangers from the common wealth of God, and without God in this world? And if there were ſo many offenders in this one caſe, how much more was the number exceeding great by all the reſt of the caſes before remembred: ſo that unleſſe Paul had beene as careleſſe of the good eſtate of the Church as the Pope is, who careth not whether it ſinke or ſwimme, goe to hell or heaven, ſo that hee haue faire weather, hee could not let paſſe this caution.

Deut. 24. Malach. 2. Math. 5. & 19. Luk. 16.

Thus alſo are your firſt, ſecond and third gatherings out of this place ſcattered, and the contrary unto them further ſtrengthened: For if heere, by the wife of one huſband be underſtood ſhee that never had company with any but her own lawfull husband, firſt, or ſecond, &c. Then it followeth, that when it is ſaid that a Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, the Apoſtles meaning is, that none may be choſen unto that office, which hath not chaſtely lived in the holy eſtate of Wedlock, whether once or oftentimes contracted and experienced. And it followeth alſo, that ſecond marriage before admiſſion is no ſuch note of incontinency as may ſhut out an able man for the office of a Biſhop from the exerciſing thereof; whereupon alſo your ſecond collection lyeth in the duſt: for if the ſtate of marriage in a Biſhop or Paſtor, which is the higheſt ordinarie function in the Church, doth not diſable him, either by exerciſing his office to be imployed in the ſervice of God, or to be releeved of the revenewes of the Church: then it followeth, that the holineſſe of a ſolitarie life in the Widow, which is the loweſt, is not heere conſidered, but ſome other cauſe, as that if ſhe had been married, being at the commandement of her husband, ſhe could not haue been at the Churches commandement, nor haue given that attendance, either to waite upon the poore, and ſick, or to waſh the feet of the poore Saints, that by divers occaſions, eſpecially of perſecution paſſed through Epheſus where Timothy was. And therefore your note upon the ſide of your paper that otherwiſe and without this ſolitarie life ſhe could not haue acquitted her ſelfe of the duty of continuall prayer required of her, might well haue beene cleane beſide it: For by the ſame reaſon you may barre all Chriſtians marriage, to whom it is commanded expreſſly, that they ſhould pray continually, And it having been ſhewed upon 1. Cor. 7. that the Biſhops perſeverance in his office, may well ſtand with his marriage ſecond and third, if need be, it may much more ſtand with the widowes, if ſome other cauſes ſtood not in the way thereof. For further anſwer whereunto, as alſo to Ierome, look before.

1. Theſſ. 5. 17.

Your fourth collection that is grounded upon this place, that you may annex by precept or the parties promiſe ſingle life to a whole eſtate or order of the faithfull, is worthy ſuch Collectors as you are, which thus make your ſelues equall in authority with the Apoſtle, yea with God himſelfe, with whoſe pen the Apoſtle wrote this Law. Neither is this your ſinne onely, that you match your Churches authoritie with the Apoſtles, which hath been oftentimes confuted, but that you thus wroug the Apoſtle ſhamefully, as if he had not delivered unto the Church by writing, and ſo as it might be aſſured of it, that which was neceſſarie for the good government of the Church. Secondly, who but you would conclude that, for that it is lawfull to binde from marriage, perſons which are ſixtie yeare old at the leaſt, therefore you may bind them from marriage at 24. becauſe it is lawfull to reſtraine them in whom not onely the flower of age is withered, but alſo the ſtrength of nature is decayed; therefore it is lawfull to reſtraine them of flouriſhing yeares and of ſtrength by courſe of nature daily increaſing. Of the contrary part, ſeeing that the Apoſtle would not binde the yonger widowes with any bond of continent life, but rather exhorteth them to marry, you ought to haue been aſhamed of your ſaucy malapertneſſe of tying that which the Apoſtle would haue looſe. Laſtly, if it be ſaid it followeth not that you may make this Law in the higheſt Miniſterie of the Church if the Apoſtle made it in the loweſt; it is more then you will anſwer without your wonted begging of that in queſtion. Your firſt collection declareth that Manichiſme followeth you hard at the heeles which heere cannot run from it, but with ſuch a lame reaſon; for being evident that ſhee may be a Church Widdow which hath been twiſe married, it followeth that the crime of Manichiſme, which you cannot otherwiſe avoide but in ſhutting ſuch a Widow from ſuch a calling cleaveth ſtill unto you. And indeed what is it to condemn marriage as an unholy thing, if this be not? to ſay that women twice married are not ſo pure as thoſe that are once onely: For if by the act of ſecond marriage they leeſe of their pureneſſe they had before; it muſt needs follow that there is ſome infection and foule thing in it which cauſeth the perſons that uſe it to carrie away the brand of uncleanneſſe contrary to the Apoſtles words, which affirmeth that even in marriage the veſſels are kept both honourable and holy, and that the bed is pure and undefiled. And if the print of Montaniſme and Manichiſme were not already deep enough in your fore-head, you haue by your filthy ſpeech, as it were laid more inck upon it, that a man may run and reade it: for you haue out of the ſtore of your uncleane heart pronounced the eſtate of marriage to be an unchaſte life, your language and words are theſe: It is not unlawfull by precept, &c. to annex single life or chastitie to a whole state or order of the faithfull: where confounding a single life and chastitie as things all one, you make no better of marriage then of an unchaste life, directly contrarie once againe to the Apostle which giveth the title of chastenesse to yong women that are married: Contrary to Paphnutius, who in the Councell of Nice calleth Matrimonie Chastitie, and contrarie to Ambrose, who making three sorts of Chastitie maketh Marriage one of them. Tit. 2. 5. Socrat. lib. 1 cap. 8. Edit. Basil. 1587. Socr. 1. lib. 11. Ambros. de viduis.

We let passe your words, that second marriage is not agreeable or comely for any person belonging to the Church, which albeit they flatly uphold the errour of the Montanists and are most shamefull; yet because your meaning is to note Church Officers, we had rather releeue you by favourable construction of your intent, then to aggravate things against you by the advantage of your foule and uncircumcised lips: albeit a man may heere smell your old Pharicisme of base and vile estimation of the people? For as the Pharises esteemed the common people cursed; so you know there are of you that make no more account of them then of hogs and dogs: which indeed they must needs be if it be true which you say, that they do not so much as belong unto the Church? yea, you are far worse then the old Pharises, who therefore esteemed them cursed because they had no knowledge of the Law of God, and were ignorant; where you were wont to place their felicity with a sect of Epicures, which hold it the sweetest life to know nothing; unlesse peradventure you are ignorant of this voice, that ignorance is the mother of devotion. Verse. 11. But the yonger widowes auoid. For when they shall be ‖ wanton in Christ, they will ‖ marrie.

RHEM. 7. [11. Wanton in Christ.] Widows waxing warme, idle, and well fed by the Church lust after husbands as also Apostate Priests and Superintendents marry, specially after they haue gotten good Ecclesiasticall liuings, which is to waxe wanton in Christ, or against Christ, καταχεῖσι. *The Greek word signifieth to cast of the raines or bridle, that is the bond or promise of continency which they put vpon them. * καταστρηνιᾶσι.

CARTVV. 7. [11 Wanton in Christ.] It is absurd to say that one waxeth wanton in Christ, in whom whosoever is, and according to the measure that he is in him, mortifieth the lusts of the flesh, and that as in other actions, so also even in the bed of holy marriage. Wherefore the other interpretation of waxing wanton against Christ, mentioned, but not preferred of the Iesuites, must needs haue place, whether the vulgar Interpreter will or no: not onely because the sense, but because the words do inforce this translation, considering the verbe without this preposition could not governe a Genitiue. καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ χριστοῦ the same with στρηνιάσωσι κατὰ τοῦ χριστοῦ.

Now how falsly it is drawn unto those widowes, which after bond and promise of continency do marry againe, shall appeare by and by in the next verse, and may appeare even out of this: for seeing the Apostle speaketh heere of yong widowes, of whom no such bond could be either giuen or taken lawfully, it is manifest that in marrying they could not break that bond, with which either they had been never tyed, or at least not lawfully tyed: For considering that the Apostle will haue them marrie againe, who is he in the Church that would receiue that promise or band that should shut them from this liberty of marriage that the Lord had set them in? Or what availed it that other admitted the yonger widowes to this Church Office, when the Apostle commandeth that they should haue no accesse thereto? Being therefore heere bound to avoide second Marriage, which depended of her being a Church widdow: it followeth that the same authority of the Apostle, which holdeth her from the honour of the one, keepeth her from the bond of the other. Ver. 14. 15.

RHEM. 8. [11. They will.] In the chastitie of widowhood or virginitie (saith S. Augustin) the excellencie of a greater gift is sought for. Which being once desired, chosen, and offered to God by vow, it is not onely damnable to enter afterward into mariage, but though it come not actually to mariage, onely to haue the will to mary is damnable. Aug. li. de bono vidui. c. 9. The very will to break the vow of chastity is damnable, CARTVV. 8. [11 They Will.] Augustine lib. de bono viduitat. c. 9. is not Augustine by Erasmus iudgement. If he were, yet will he not stand by you in your shamefull out-rage against the marriage of vowed persones, which you account no otherwise of then of adulterie; for hee saith, that they are not condemned for marrying after their vow, but for that they breake their vow of continencie: And that the Apostle would not say that they were damned, for that after vow they marrie, least the mariage it selfe might seeme to be condemned, but because they haue broken their first faith, where you condemne the marriage that is after vow, not onely the breach of the vow. And how Augustine will not haue the marriages after the vow to be accounted adulteries, it hath been before declared. The Councell also of Ancyra accounteth them in the order and ranke of those which were twice married. Can. 13.

Verse. 12. ‖ Having damnnation, because they haue made voide their ‖ first faith.

RHEM. 9. [12. Hauing damnation.] It signifieth not blame, checke, or reprehension of men, as some to make the faulte seeme lesse, would haue it: but * iudgement or eternall damnation, which is a heauie sentence, God grant all married Priests and Religious may consider their lamentable case. What a greuous sinne it is, see S. Ambrose ad virginem lapsam c. 5. & 8. * κρῖμα. 1. Tim. 3. 6. 7.

CARTVV. 9. [12 Having damnation] The word doth not yeeld this signification of damnation so pressingly and pregnantly, as the Iesuites ignorantly say; for it is used before in a softer and milder signification, and is there the same with another word noting reproach or blame. There wanted not another word, used other where of the Apostle, which carrieth with it a stronger and sharper processe against them then this: Howbeit the truth is, that the word having in it selfe a more generall signification, seemeth by circumstance of place (noting the word and wages of an heynous sin) to force this particular signification of damnation. Make it as heavie as you list, yet hath it already and further shall appeare, that it maketh nothing for condemnation of marriage after vow, not so much as by Ambrose ad Virgin. lapsf. 5, c. 8. otherwise more addicted to virginitie, then the virginitie of κρῖμα the same with ὄνειδισμος. κατάκριμα.

the word of God will beare out: for he ſpeaketh againſt a virgine which had defiled her ſelfe with fornication, otherwiſe he would haue condemned the breach of promiſe and not of marriage.

RHEM. 10. [12. Their firſt faith.] All the ancient fathers that euer wrote commmentaries vpon this Epiſtle, Greeke and Latine, as S. Chryſoſtome, Theodorete, Oecumenius, Theophylactus, Primaſius S. Ambroſe, Ven. Bede, Haimo, Anſelme, and the reſt: alſo all others that by occaſion vſe this place, as the 4. Councell of Carthage, c. 104, and the 4. of Toleto c. 55. S. Athanaſius li. de virginitate. S. Epiphanius her. 48 S. Hierome cont. Iouinianum li 1. c. 7. & in c. 44. Ezech. prope finem. S. Auguſtine in exceeding many places: all theſe expound the Apoſtles of the vow of Chaſtitie, or the faith and promiſe made to Chriſt to liue continently. What is to breake their firſt faith; ſaith S. Auguſtine. They vowed, and performed not. in Pſal. 75. prope finem. Again in another place, They breake their firſt faith, that ſtand not in that which they vowed li. de Sancta virgin. c. 33. Again he and all the fathers with him in Carthage Councell before named: If any widowes, how yong ſoeuer they were left of their husbands deceaſed, haue vowed themſelues to God. left their Laicall habite, and vnder the teſtimony of the Biſhop and Church haue appeared in religious weede, and afterward go any more to ſecular mariage, according to the Apoſtles ſentence they ſhall be damned, becauſe they were ſo bold to make void the faith or promis of chaſtitie which they vowed to our Lord. So ſaith hee and 215. fathers moe in that Councell.

Breaking of their firſt faith is (by the conſent of all antiquity) when they break their vow of chaſtity.

And this promiſe of chaſtity is called faith, becauſe the fidelity betwixt married perſons is ordinarily called of holy writers, faith: & the vow of chaſtity made to God, ioyns him & the perſons ſo vowing, as it were in marriage, ſo far, that if the ſaid perſons break promiſe, they are counted and called in the laſt alleaged Councell, Gods adulterers. In the third to the Romanes alſo and often elſewhere, faith is taken for promis or fidelitie. And that it is ſo taken here, the words irritum facere (to fruſtrate and make void) do proue, for that terme is commonly vſed in matter of vow, promiſe, or compact. Gen. 17. Num. 30. This promiſe is called here prima fides (the firſt faith) in reſpect of the later promiſe which vowbreakers make to them with whom they pretend to mary. So ſaith S. Auguſtine li. de bono viduit c. 8. and 9. and Innocentius 1. Epiſt. 2. c. 13. tom. 1. Conc. And this is the onely natiue, euident, and agreeable ſenſe to the circumſtances of the letter, and the vaine euaſion of the Heretickes to ſaue the Apoſtate Monkes, Friers, Nunnes, and Prieſts from damnation for their pretended marriages, is friuolous: to wit, that firſt faith here ſignifieth the faith of baptiſme or Chriſtian beleefe, and not the promiſe or vow of Chaſtitie. But we aske them if this faith of Baptiſme be broken by mariage or no. For the text is plain that by intending to mary, they break their faith, & by breaking their faith they be damned, if they die without repentance. In trueth which way ſo euer they writh themſelues to defend their ſacrilege or pretended mariages, they looſe their labour and ſtruggle againſt their own conſcience and plaine Scripture.

Why this vow is called faith or fidelity.

Why the firſt

The heretickes expoſition of this firſt faith impoſſible, and againſt the text.

CARTVV. 10. [12. Their firſt faith.] Albeit it be moſt vntrue that all antiquitie expound theſe words of the vow of a ſingle life, yet they all could not carry it away againſt ſo expreſſe both words and circumſtances of the Apoſtle; vnleſſe the Lord, the Ancient of Ancients, ſhall bee conſtrained to giue place vnto men, which in compariſon of him are but yeſterday. The circumſtances haue been partly already noted, now let vs conſider the words, where whether we conſider the word Faith or Firſt, they both giue ſentence againſt the Ieſuites. And touching the word [Faith] ſo often vſed in Scripture, it is not ſo much as once to our remembrance taken in the ſignification of a particular vow of life: aſſured we are, that in the new Teſtament and Epiſtles of Paul to Timothie, from whence the ſignification of the word is moſt fitly and probably expounded, there is no ſuch ſignification. There is no chapter in this Epiſtle wherein it is not vſed: there are wherein it is vſed often and diverſly. Firſt properly for faith, whereby we enter into covenant with Chriſt: alſo for a general truſt in all things comitted to our care; it is further by the trope of exchange of names vſed for the holy religion of Chriſt: which faith, if it be true and liuely, maketh vs vnremoueably partakers of Chriſt. if it be dead, or for a time, maketh vs outward profeſſors of Chriſt. But in this ſignification of vow or truſt, other then is cõmanded vnto all Chriſtians, it is not once vſed. Wherefore when the Ieſuits ſay, that faith is vſed of holy Writers for a particular vow, if by holy Writers they mean the Scriptures, either they ſay falſly, in that there is no ſuch place, or elſe they bewray that faith hath no ſuch ſignificatiõ in holy Writ, & alledge that it is ſo taken in mens writings, a far groſſer deceit then his, who thought Mantua was like vnto Rome, and if they wil look to the ſignification of the place, which goeth before euen in this chapter where this argument of prouiſion for poore widows is handled, and therfore from whence the expoſition of this place is beſt taken, it appeares that it is taken for the whole body of our holy religion. And therefore that Faith ſhould here be taken for a ſpeciall Vow, is ſo ſtrange and violent an entry, that none called to defend the borders of the Scripture, can bid it welcome. But for this ſence of ours, mark the ſpeech before and after, of being wanton againſt Chriſt, of going after Satan; whereby is noted an vtter ſhaking off the religion of Chriſt which they haue profeſſed: which can neuer be ſhewed to be ſaid of breach of any vow but of that in baptiſme.

And as the word Faith fauoureth not your vow, ſo the word Firſt cannot abide the ſight of it: for whether firſt be taken for that which is the chiefe and principall in weight and neceſſitie, or for that which is formoſt in time; as both agree moſt fitly to the faith which we expound: ſo neither of them will frame with your vow. And if a man would yeeld your ſignification of faith to be peculiar faith or vow, which is not (as wee thinke) to be found in all the Scripture, yet wou'd not this agree with you: it might happily doe you ſome good for your virgins, but your Widowes vow it will not ſtrengthen: for it cannot be her firſt faith, ſeeing ſhe had given her faith to her husband before, and therefore the invention that is called firſt in regard of the latter promiſt which vow-breakers make them with whom they pretend marriage, is very ſilly. Beſide that thus you doe your vowe great wrong, in that the faith thereof which you account holy, is thus ranged as of one and the ſame kinde with a vow or faith that you hold ſo full of ſacrilege. There were more likelihood to ſay, that it is her firſt faith which ſhe gaue in the profeſſion of a ſingle life, which would better fit you, were it not that you be vtterly barred from that eſcape: for ſo you ſhould ſuppoſe a ſecond vow of a single life which your selues do shut her from, in that having been twice married, you hold her altogether unmeet for this charge of a Church Widow. If you yet say, that the marriage after vow is no marriage but adultery, and that she may therefore recontinue her vow againe: then doe you indeed shew your selues in your colours, which shut the doore of the Church Offices against lawfull marriage, that you set open to adultery.

Last of all, you would fain shroud your selues under the lee of the Greeke word κρίνω, which (say you) is commonly used in matter of vow. But you bewray the desperatenesse of your cause that thus catch at every shadow: for it is not worthy to be compared with the reed; nay indeed it hath not so much as any shadow of refuge: for the word is generall, and is used to note the utter undoing of any thing that is established, or putting away of that is offered or asked therefore for once or twice used to note the undoing of a vow, it is a hundred times used to signifie the making voyd of diuers other things: wherein, beside the harme that your cause suffereth, the estimation which you would haue for your skill in Greek falleth flat, whilest it knoweth not your voyce, when you do so foolishly call for helpe at her hand.

Now let us come to the antiquitie which the Iesuites so greatly boast of, wherein they abuse their Reader two wayes, one by making ancient him which hath no gray haires, as Anselm under Antichrist, and advanced by him: when therefore Popery is anticke rather then ancient, Anselm hatched of it, can be in no true account of the Churches Aldermen. The other is that they.

Vers. 14. I will therefore the yonger to marry, to bring forth children, to be housewiues, to giue no occasion to the aduersarie for to speak euill.

RHEM. 11. [14. I will the yonger.] Hee speaketh of such yong ones as were yet free. For such as had already made vow, neither could they without damnation marry, were they yong or old, nor he without sinne command or counsell them to it. Neither (as S. Hierome proueth to Gerontia, and S. Chrysostome vpon this place) doeth he precisely command or counsell the yong ones that were free, to mary, or absolutely forbid them to vow Chastitie: God forbid, say they. But his speach conteyneth onely a wise admonition to the frailer sort, that it were farre better for them not to haue vowed at all, but to haue maried againe then to haue fallen to aduoutrie and Apostasie after profession. Which is no more but to prefer second mariage before fornication: and a good warning, that they which are to professe, look well what they do. S. Pauls experience of the fall of some yong ones to marriage, caused him to giue this admonition here: as also that before, that none should be receiued to the Churches almes vnder threescore yeeres of age. Not forbidding the Church for euer, to accept any vowes of widows or virgins till that age, as the Hereticks falsely affirme: but shewing what was meet for that time, & the beginning of Christianity when as yet there were no Monasteries builded, no prescript rule, no exact order of obedience to Superiours: but the professed (as S. Paul here noteth) coursed and wandred vp and down idlely, as now our professed virgins and Nunnes do not, neither can do. Of whom therefore, where discipline is obserued, there is no cause of such danger. Besides that widowes hauing had the vse of carnall copulation before, are more dangerously tempted, then virgins that are brought vp from their tender age in pietie and haue no experience of such pleasures. See S. Ambrose lib. de viduis, prouing by the example of holy Anna, whom liued a widowe euen from her youth till 80. yeeres of ages, in fasting and praying night and day, that the Apostle doth not here without exception forbid all yong widowes to vow, yea hee esteemeth that profession in the yonger women much more laudable, glorious, and meritorious. See his booke de viduis in initio.

S. Paul meaneth not that widowes professed should marrie.

* Otherwise Agerunchia. ep. 11.

It is better for the frailer sort that are in danger of falling, to marrie rather then to vow.

Yong women may bee professed and taken into Religion.

FVLKE He neither commaundeth nor counselleth all widowes in generall to marrie, but the yong widowes that haue not the gift of continencie, he willeth and commandeth to marrie, S. Paul saith, I will. Nouatus saith I will not (saith Theodoret,) in like manner as we may say: S. Paul saith, I will that the yenger widowes marrie, the Pope saith: I will not that the yonger widowes marrie, but let them hardly take the mantle and the ring, whether they be assured of the gift of continencie, or no. The Apostle indeed speaketh not of such as were professed, but hee forbiddeth expresly any to bee professed (if he speake at all of profession) before 60. yeeres of age, when the heate of lust is past Therefore where he counselleth widowes and virgines to continue, hee meaneth they should continue so, freely without vow, as long God will giue them grace. But if they had made a vow already (say you) neither they could marry without damnation, nor hee command or counsell them without sin. Thus bold yon are with the Apostle. As though it were sin to breake an vnlawfull vow, when it is sin to make such a vow. But to vow that which not in our power to performe, is to make an vnlawfull vow. And such is the vow of continencie, in them that haue not the gift of continencie. Therefore the Apostle doth not onely preferre second marriage before fornication, but also expresly commandeth that none be choſen to that office which required an vnmarried woman, but ſuch an one as was threeſcore yeere old at the leaſt. Therefore the pope and his Clergie, admitting either widowes or virgins to profeſſe or vow continencie before that age, do ſinne againſt the expreſſe commandement of the holy Ghoſt. But this prohibition you are not aſhamed to deny to bee perpetuall, affirming that it was onely meete for that time, and the beginning of Chriſtianitie, but the incontinencie of ſuch yong perſons in all times, prooueth that it is neceſſarie for euer, which was neceſſary in his time, to auoide incontinencie. And therefore your reaſon of the want of Monaſteries, and Monkiſh or Nonniſh rules and orders (which you confeſſe not to haue been in the Apoſtles time) cannot reſtrain his precept to that time onely. For the incontinencie of Nonnes and Monkes in cloyſters, and vnder all your rules and orders, hath and doeth daily giue ſufficient proofe, that luſt will not be kept out by the walles of your Monaſteries, nor by the rules and preſcript of your orders. Therefore, as the experience of ſome yonger widowes that had followed after Satan, was a ſufficient reaſon to cauſe the Apoſtle to refuſe all yong widowes to the office of Deaconeſſes, ſo the experience of ſo many milch Nonnes, and filthie Monkes and Friers, teach vs, that no yong perſons are to bee admitted to any vow or profeſſion of perpetuall continencie. For your other reaſon is vaine, of virgins that haue not had experience of carnall concupiſcence as widowes haue had, and confuted by infinite examples of vnchaſt Nonnes. Beſide that they are oftentimes more burned, that haue not had that experience (as good writers teſtifie of gelded men) then they that haue quenched that luſt in lawful matrimonie. And thoſe Nonnes that haue not the gift of continency, are not voyd of experience, although they haue it not in lawfull matrimonie. Yea, the diuell himſelfe helpeth them in their abominable luſts, as Wierus teſtifieth of open experience in diuers Nonneries in Germanie, and namely of one in the borders of the prouince of Collen, where the diuell in the likeneſſe of a dogge, was ſeen to fall vpon them in the day time in moſt beaſtly manner, about the yeere of our Lord 1558. Alſo in the Nonnery of Nazareth in Collen, the Nonnes in moſt filthy manner, ſuffered the ſame illuſion oftentimes in the preſence and ſight of many, Anno 1564. De præſtig. Dæmon. li. 3. c 9. & 11. edit. tert. If therefore the example of ſome that were turned after Satan, was thought a ſufficient reaſon to the Apoſtle, to refuſe yong widowes, what doth ſo many examples of Nonnes, not onely ſpiritually turned after Satan, as the Apoſtle meaneth, but euen in their bodies made the ſlaues of Satan, but cry out againſt the wickedneſſe of Antichriſt, that ſo contumeliouſly reiecteth the Apoſtles precept and profeſſeth Nonnes and widowes (be they neuer ſo yong) many times againſt their own conſent, being extorted rather then perſwaded thereto? Therefore as the pure chaſtitie of virgins and widowes, is glorious and worthily praiſed of the ancient fathers, ſo it ought to bee free, that it may be of greater commendation and a more noble victorie, and not bound with vowes, neither ought any yong perſon that is not aſſured of the gift of perpetuall continencie, to be admitted to make any, ſolemne vow or open profeſſion thereof, by the Apoſtles doctrine.

Verſ. 15. For now certaine are turned back after Satan.

To marry after the vow of chaſtity, is to goe after Satan.

RHEM. 12. [15. After Satan.] We may heare learne, that for thoſe to marry which are profeſſed, is to turn backe after Satan. For he ſpeaketh of ſuch as were married contrary to their vow. And hereupon we call the Religious that marrie (as Luther, Bucer, Peter Martyr, and the reſt) Apoſtataes. More we learne, that ſuch yong ones haue not excuſe of their age, or that they bee vehemently tempted and burne in their concupiſcences, or that they haue not the gift of chaſtitie. For notwithſtanding all theſe excuſes, theſe yong profeſſed widowes if they marrie, go backward after Satan, and bee Apoſtataes and damned, except they repent. For as for the Apoſtles worde to the Corinthians, It is better to marrie then to burne. We haue before declared out of the fathers, and here we ad, that it pertaineth onely to perſons that bee free and haue not vowed to the contrarie, as S. Ambroſe lib. ad virg. lapſe. cap. 5. S. Auguſtine de bono vidui. cap. 8. and S. Hierom li. 1. cont. Iouin. cap. 7. expound it.

1. Cor. 7.

The heretickes onely remedy againſt concupiſcence, is marriage.

The heretickes of our time thinke there is no remedie for fornication or burning, but marriage and ſo did S. Auguſtine when he was yet a Manichee. Putabam me miſerum &c. I thought (ſaith he li. 6. Confeſſ. c. 11.) that I ſhould be an vnhappie and miſerable man if I ſhould lacke the companie of a woman, and the medecine of thy mercie to heale the ſame infirmitie I thought not vpon, becauſe I had not tried it: and imagined that continencie was in a mans owne power and libertie, which in my ſelfe I did not feele: being ſo fooliſh not to vnderſtand that no man can bee continent vnleſſe thou giue it. Verily thou wouldeſt giue it, if with inward mourning I would knocke at thy eares, and with ſound faith would caſt my care vpon thee.

The vow of chaſtity lawfull, poſſible to be kept, more grateful to God.

By all which you may eaſily proue, that chaſtitie may lawfully be vowed, that it is not impoſſible to be fulfilled by prayer, faſting and chaſtiſement of mens concupiſcence, that it is a thing more grateful to God then the condition of married perſons, for els it ſhould not be required either in the Clergy, or in the Religious, finally, that it is moſt abominable to perſwade the pore virgins or other profeſſed to ſuch ſacrilegious wedlocke, which S. Auguſtine auoucheth to be worſe then aduoutry. De bon. vid. c. 4. 11. Iouinian was the firſt that euer made mariage equall with virginitie or the chaſt life, for which he was condemned of hereſie. Aug. in argumento li. de bono Coniugali de pec. merit. li. 3. c. 7. Lib. de hæreſ. hær. 82. He was the firſt that perſwaded profeſſed virgins to marrie, which S. Auguſtine ſaith was ſo cleerely and without queſtion wicked, that it could neuer infect any Prieſt, but certain miſerable Nunnes. Yea for this ſtrange perſwaſion he calleth Iouinian a monſter, ſaying of him thus Li. 2 Retract. c. 22. The holy Church that is there (at Rome) moſt faithfully and ſtoutly reſiſted this monſter. S. Hierom calleth the ſaid Heretick and his complices, Chriſtian epicures. li. 2. cont. Iouin. c. 19. See S. Ambr ep. 82. ad Vercellenſem Epiſcopum in initio. But what would theſe holy doctors haue ſayed, if they had liued in our dolefull time, when the Proteſtants go quite away with this wickedneſſe, and call it Gods word?

The Iouinians hereſie in this poynt, condemned of old, is called of the Proteſtants, Gods word.

What it is to go after ſatan

FVLKE. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any widowes choſen to the Miniſterie of the Church, but of wanton yong widowes which had forſaken Chriſt. For ſuch yong widowes were neuer eligible gible to that office: S. Paul therefore doeth not make a new law vpon occasion of them that were fallen, but by example of them, sheweth a reason of the law of the Church, which refused yonger widowes, then of 60. yeares old. Therefore he saith not for Votaries to marry is to turne after Satan. For saith Primasius, They are turned after Satan, either denying the faith of God, or committing fornication. S. Augustine saith, By these words we may vnderstand that those whom he would haue to marrie, might better contein then marrie, but that it is better for them to marrie then to go after Satan, that is, from that excellent purpose of virginitie or widowhood. by looking backe to fall and perish. And that for such to marrie is not to go after Satan: hee sheweth that the marriage of such is not to bee condemned, but the breach of their purpose, which (saith he) That the Apostle might briefly insinuate, he would not say, that they haue damnation, which marrie after the purpose of greater holinesse, not because they are not condemned, but lest the marriage it selfe in them might be thought to be condemned. De bono viduit. c. 8. & 9. Therefore for them that are professed to be married, is not to be turned after Satan. But if they haue been rashly professed, and are not able to performe that vow of continencie, it is better to marrie then to burne by the iudgement of Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierome and Augustine, as I haue shewed before Sect. 8. 9. Neither doth the Scripture prouide other remedie against fornication or burning, in them that haue not the gift of continencie, but marriage. And S. Augustine doeth rightly acknowledge, that continencie is not in a mans own power or libertie, but onely of the gift of God. But that God will giue that gift to euery one (when our Sauiour Christ and the Apostle saith, it is not granted to euery one,) you doe not well gather it out of his words. For although when the heate of youth was passed ouer incontinently, as he confesseth,) he obtained by prayer the gift of the rest of his time, it followeth not that euery one in the heat of their youth, may haue the gift if they will pray for it. Neither are men any where exhorted to pray for it, with certaine promise that they shall obtain it. Therefore your conclusions do not follow, That continencie may be lawfully vowed, which is not in our power to performe. That it is not impossible to be fulfilled of all men by prayer, fasting, and chastisement, when there is no promise that all men may obtaine it by prayer, fasting, &c.

The gift of continency not in euery mans power.

The reason that you alledge for your third conclusion, is that which is in controuersie, and is denied of us, yet we deny not, but the condition of the continent, in some respects is better then of the married. For your fourth conclusion, we perswade none to marrie that can liue chastely out of marriage, but if they cannot, we perswade them with the Apostle, and the ancient Fathers, that it is better to marrie then to burne, if they be not able to keep their rash and vnlawfull vow. You slander S. Augustine, to say, he auoucheth that the marriage of vowed persons is worse then aduoutry, for in neither of both places that you quote he saith so: but chap. 4. he saith: that by chaste Widdow hood, not onely euils were auoided (which are adultery and fornication) but also marriage which is good, is extolled. In chap. 11. after he hath by many reasons proued the marriage of such as be good, in whom the breach of vow is euill, he concludeth in these words: Wherefore I cannot say, that if women that are fallen from a better purpose, it is no marriage but adultery, but I would not doubt to say plainly, that the falling and ruine from more holy chastitie, is worse then adultery. He saith not therefore, that the marriage of such is worse then adulterie, but the breach of vowes and fall from their purpose. For he proueth at large cap. 9. 10. 11. that the marriage is good and not to be broken, therefore hee saith immediately before: By this inconsiderate opinion, whereby they thinke that the marriages of those women that are fallen from their holy purpose are no marriage, no small euill commeth, that wiues are seperated from their husbands, as though they were adulteresses, and not wiues, and when by separating of them they will restore them to continency, they make their husbands adulterers, when their own wiues being aliue, they marry other women. As for Iouinians heresie we haue nothing to do with it, more then Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierom, Augustine, whose sentences are before rehearsed, willing vowed persons to marrie rather then to burn, yet preferring pure continencie before matrimoniall chastitie, as farre as the Apostle doth. Therefore what would those holy Doctors haue said, if they had lived in these times, and seen the filthy life of the Popish Clergie? which yet they defend as pure chastity, and when the earth stinketh of their abhominations, yet they are not ashamed to preferre their foule and vnchaste single life, before holy and chaste matrimony.

RHE. 13 [17. In word and doctrine] Such Priests specially & Prelats are worthy of double, that is, of more amplified honor, that are able to Preach and teach, and to take pains therein. Where we may note well, that all good Bishops or Priests in those daies were not so well able to teach as some others, and yet for the ministerie of the Sacraments, and for wisedome and gouernement, were not vnmeet to be Bishops and Pastors. For though it be one high commendation in a Prelate, to be able to teach, as the Apostle before noted; yet all cannot haue the like grace therein, and is often recompensed by other singular gifts no lesse necessarie. S. Augustine laboured in word and doctrine, Alipius and Valerius were good Bishops, and yet had not that gift, Possid. in vit. Aug. cap. 5. And some times and Countries, require Preachers more then other. All which we note to discouer the pride of heretickes, that contemne some of the Catholick Priests or Bishops, pretending that they cannot Preach as they do, with meretricous and painted eloquence.

Many good and worthy Bishops, that haue not the gift of preaching and teaching.

CARTVV——sorts should be given to those which had the charge of teaching, and consequently of administring Sacraments then to those that haue charge of gouernment only. And therfore albeit euery Bishop and Pastor administring the Sacraments cannot preach in like abilitie either of knowledge or vtterance; yet we doe vtterly both contemne and condemne those Bishops that hauing no tollerable gift of teaching, are (like Idols in their cases or rather coffins) set vp in the Churches chaire. For to be able to teach, and not to be a novice, are placed before as the essentiall poynts required in euery lawfull Pastor and Doctor of the Church, whereby he differeth from the rest of the Church, which in euery member of it ought to haue the other qualities there required of a Bishop. And therefore we never read in Scripture of any to whom the administration of Sacraments was committed, which were not trusted with the preaching of the word. Likewise, as the examples of Noah, Abraham, Moses, the Priests vnder the old Testament, and both of Iohn Baptist, and the Apostles vnder the New, doe evidently declare. Wherefore also it is said expresly, that the Priests that had not knowledge, should be thrust out of the Priesthood, that they should offer no sacrifice unto God. And not onely to haue knowledge to be able to teach, but to haue some good measure of utterance to deliver it to the understanding and edification of the people: in regard whereof it is sayd, that they shall keepe knowledge in their lippes and mouth. And where they would make men beleeue that there is no difference of offices here noted, but a further degree and staire of taking paines in teaching, they are manifoldly convinced by the text it selfe.

καλῶς προϊστῶτες as before 3. cap. διπλοῦν τιμὴν ἐπιδωμεῖ.

First, for that then the Apostle making so a comparison between the preachers of the word themselues, should haue said, that they which are occupied in the word and doctrine, are worthy of double honour, especially those that labour therein.

1. Thess. 5.

Secondly, if there be but one kinde of Church officers here noted, then the words, especially those that labour, do not cause the Apostles speech to rise, but to fall; not to goe forward, but to goe backward, for to teach worthily and singularly, is more then to teach painfully: for the first doth note all that which may be required in a worthy teacher; where the latter noteth one vertue onely of painestaking.

1. Thess. 2. 9 2. Cor. 11. 27.

Lastly, in following their sense, the Apostle should command to giue double honour to such as take not paines in Preaching the Word, which is absurd, especially considering that otherwhere he requireth the selfe same paines taking in all the Church officers, that here he requireth of the Ministers of the Word. Therefore, if he had meant to haue noted any extraordinarie labour not required of all ordinarily, he would rather haue said μοχθοῦντες then κοπιῶντες, as otherwhere he useth it as a degree of painefull travell aboue that here spoken of. If it be said that even to those that labour not so diligently, yet the double honour should be given untill the Church hath removed the negligent, that answer is utterly overthrowne by the Apostles word, which will haue them esteemed worthy of the double honour: where if the Church be to pay duties to such, yet is she not contrary to manifest experience to iudge them worthy of it. And where they say that Priests not able to teach, are notwithstanding in regard of government meete Pastors; what government is required to the execution of his Priesthood, when the whole reignes of government are given to the Bishop.

Last of all, when they say that the want of a Preaching gift in a Bishop may bee recompensed by other singular gifts no lesse necessarie, they bewray the small estimation they haue of Preaching, which make any Ministeriall gift equall with this, which the Apostle not heere onely maketh the chiefe of all, but otherwhere, when to commend the exceeding largesse of God powred forth after the ascension of Christ, he mentioneth those gifts alone which are occupyed in teaching. Possidonius is here shamefully falsified; for he speaketh of such a one as was lesse able to teach in regard that he was a Grecian borne, & had not the Latine tongue so perfectly, and not in regard simply of inability to teach. Secondly, it is not said that he was unfit to teach, but onely that he was not so fit as Augustine, where we willingly grant that there may be good Bishops, that yet are not so good as other. Last of all it is shewed, that the Bishop that was not so well able as Augustine reioyced to quite the place unto Augustine that would furnish it better then he, directly contrary to the Iesuites, which by strong hand of their weake reasons would hold an unpreaching Prelate in the teaching chaire.

Verse. 23. Drink not yet ‖ water, but use a little wine for thy stomack, and thy often infirmities.

RHEM. 14. [23. Water.] You may see how lawfull & how holy a thing it is, to fast from some meats or drinks, either certain dayes or alwayes, as this B. Bishop Timothee did: who was hardly induced by the Apostle to drinke a little wine with his water in respect of his infirmities. And marke withall, what a calumnious and stale cauillation it is, that to abstaine from certain meats and drinks for punishment of the body or deuotion, is, to condemne Gods creatures. See an homily of S. Chrysostome vpon these words, to. 5.

Strab. Greg. lib. 14. in princip. Eph. 5. 18.

CARTVV. 14. [23 Water.] It is ordinarie that Cities of exceeding great wealth break out into great riot and excesse of feasting and drinking, Ephesus therefore being the chiefe Mart of all Asia the lesse, and consequently by reason of the wealth of the Country, of all the world in a manner, was tempted with the vice of drunkennesse; which may better appeare in that the Apostle himselfe maketh speciall mention of that vice amongst them: Wherefore Timothy having in charge to go before them, and to be a patterne of all sobriety did (out of question) the rather to make ashamed those Wine-bibbers, enforce himselfe to all possible forbearance and spare use of wine, and if you will do the like, you may do it (as he did) with commendation. But what maketh this to maintaine the vow of not eating certaine meates, without any such occasion as Timothie had? yea it maketh against you: for notwithstanding such a pressing occasion, yet heere was no vow, unlesse you will say that Paul was like unto Iouinian that moved the vow-breaking. Beside that, it might teach you how it is easie for men to over-shoot themselues oftentimes in these bodily exercises, seeing such an excellent personage as was Timothie over-reached in it, as appeareth out of this place, especially compared with that before.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 19 TO heape up unto themselues a good ‡ foundation for the time to come, that they may apprehend true life.

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [19. Foundation.] Almes deeds and good works laid for a foundation and ground to attaine everlasting life. So say the doctors vpon this place.

CARTVV. 1. [19. Foundation.] Foundation here is not taken for the cause of salvation, or for that which is first, but onely noteth stableness and durableness of the treasure which they shall haue which are rich in good workes; but yet not for their workes sake, as hath been before declared, vpon Math. 6. 4. &c. This appeareth manifestly by the opposition the Apostle maketh vnto the vncertainty of riches mentioned in the 17. verse. And further, in that he sheweth that this foundation is to come after this life, where the cause of any thing must goe before; so that albeit that which is here spoken of be a foundation in regard of the vnchangeableness of it, yet it is the lower in regard both of time and order of nature. Therefore the Iesuites haue done wisely to say indeffinitely that the Doctors are of their iudgement, that when the elder Doctors, Chrysostom, Ambrose, and such like, which haue some honest credit in the Citty of God, faile them, they might goe to Sorbona, as into the high wayes, and Colman hedges to furnish them of Doctorall witnesses in this behalfe.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 4. Hee is proude, knowing nothing, but languishing about questions, and strife of wordes: of which rise envies, contentions, blasphemies, evill suspitions.

RHEM. 2. [4. Languishing.] Euen these be the good disputes of our new Sect-masters, and the world hath too long proued these inconueniences here named, to be the fruits of such endles altercations in religion as these vnhappy sects haue brought forth.

CARTVV. 2. [4. Languishing.] You need not goe out of your Cloisters to finde Sect-masters languishing about questions, and strife of words. And therefore one of your owne, that liued about 170. yeares past, writing of your Sentenciaries, alledgeth this place of the Apostle against them comparing their doctrine with the fruit that groweth in the fieldes of Sodom and Gomorrhe, which outwardly hath a faire shewe, but inwardly is nothing but dust and ashes, wee haue giuen the Reader a taste of them before, whereby he may plainly and easily see the impudencie of these men, which shame not to reproach us with that which wee vtterly condemne, and they glory in.

Verse 20. O Timothie, keepe the depositum, avoyding the prophane novelties of voyces, and oppositions of falsly called knowledge.

RHEM. 3. [20. Depositum.] The whole doctrine of our Christianitie being taught by the Apostles, and deliuered their successours, and comming down from one Bishop to another is called the Depositum, as it were a thing laid into their hands, and committed vnto them to keepe. Which because it passed from hand to hand, from age to age, from Bishop to Bishop without corruption, change, or alteration, is all one with tradition, and is the truth giuen vnto the holy Bishops to keep, and not to lay men. See the notable discourse of Vincentius Linnensis vpon this text. li. cont. prosan. hær. Nouationes. And it is for this great, old, and known treasure committed to the Bishops custody, that S. Irenæus calleth the Catholike Church, Depositorium diues, the rich treasurie of truth, li. 3. c. 4. And as Clem. Alexandrinus writeth li. 2. Strom. this place maketh so much against all heretickes who do all change this Depositum, that for it onely such men in his dayes denied this Epistle. The Heretikes of our dayes challenge also the trueth, and say it is the old trueth, but they leape 14. or 15. hundred yeeres for it ouer mens heads to the Apostle, but we call for the Depositum, and aske them in whose hands, that trueth which they pretend, was laid vp, and how it came down to them, for it cannot be Apostolicall, vnlesse it were Depositum in some Timothees hand, so to continue from one Bishop to another vntill our time and to the end.

Depositum, is the Catholike truth descending from the Apostles, by succession of Bishops, euen vnto the end. The Protestants can shew no such depositum.

CARTVV. 3. [20. Depositum.] Notwithstanding that other learned interpret this pledge or gage to be the gift of the holy Ghost, yet we willingly acknowledge that it is to be vnderstood of the Doctrine of Christianitie, as that which hath best ground both by circumstance of this, and conference of other places. But that this word in this place doth signifie the whole Doctrine of Christianitie, which signifieth onely this Epistle to Timothy, is a slip of the Iesuites vnderstanding; howbeit for the matter it selfe we gladly yeeld that the whole Doctrine of Christianitie is very fitly and aptly termed by this name, and so is it often called by the Prophet, which Title and Epithite doth so fauour our cause, as we esteeme them to do some injury to the truth that would carry the signification of the word to some other sence then to the holy doctrine of the truth: for hereby wee proue, that the doctrine of truth is not the Churches Decrees, but the Lords, given to the Church to keepe onely; wherewith the Title of a pledge or gage, cannot stand, vnlesse one may lay to pledge or gage a thing in his owne hands, considering that in Popery the Church herselfe maketh the doctrine which herselfe taketh to gage.

Psal. 119.

Againe, it is required by the law of a pledge or gage, that it be kept in such sort as nothing be added thereunto, or taken there from, which how it is obserued of you, which clip and wash, peece and patch, not onely the world is witnesse, but you your selues without the vb brayd of a lie by your own conscience, cannot deny. And therefore reasonable iudgement may esteeme that you haue hidden this Title and Epithite from your Reader, by letting it remaine still in the Latine tongue, especially seeing our tongue is well able to furnish a commodious translation thereof, onely herein you handle it like a gage, that you lock it vp fast where the people of God, for whose vse it is given to bee kept, cannot come vnto it: wherein notwithstanding your faith is not such, but that it is by many degrees of faithfull keeping, surpassed by the Iewes. And if the Reader will yet further see, how rightly the Papists treade in the steps of the old heretickes, let him consider what Tertullian writeth in this behalfe, who declareth that the heretickes of his time, that to defend their heresies, fled from the iudgement of the Scriptures, ſerued themſelues of this place, whereby they would proue, that beſide the Scriptures, the Apoſtles left certaine Traditions, which they delivered to certaine, and they to others from hand to hand. And Irenæus of the heretickes of his time ſetteth forth, that they ſayd that the Scriptures could not be underſtood but by thoſe which knew the tradition, as that which was not delivered by writing, but by the living voyce, which is ſo fully the practiſe of this Popiſh hereſie, that they could not haue been liuelier painted out, and in more aurient colours if it had liued in the time of theſe Fathers: whereupon it came, that they hauing to doe with ſuch as either denied the Scripture, or denied the ſufficiency of them, alledged the ſucceſſion of Biſhops, not as their onely, or as the principall bulwarke, but as a likelie and probable argument better able to overthrow their falſehood then to ſettle the truth which they maintained: for otherwiſe it is well knowne, that a number of the wickedeſt heretickes had their outward calling lawfull, as Neſtorius* Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and †Samoſatenus Biſhop of Antioch. And therefore when they meant to make ſucceſſion a certaine argument, and unfallible, they muſt needs underſtand, not ſo much the ſucceſſion of perſons, as of the doctrine.

And to go no further then to this point in hand, let them anſwer what had become of the Law of God, if others had not been more faithfull keepers of it then the Prieſts to whom the principall Coppie thereof, written with the finger of God himſelfe, was committed. Laſt of all, it hath been ſhewed by * record of Story, that there haue alwayes been from the Apoſtles time, which haue maintained the doctrine which we teach: as of the contrary, that the chiefe pillers and ſtudds of Popery before 600. yeares after Chriſt and upward, had no place to ſtand in.

RHEM. 4. [Prophane nouelties.] Non dixit antiquitates (ſaith Vincenſius Lirinenſis) non dixit vetuſtates, ſed prophanas nouitates. Nam ſi vitanda eſt nouitas, tenenda eſt antiquitas: ſi prophana eſt nouitas, ſacrata eſt vetuſtas, that is, He ſaid not. ANTIQVITIES: he ſaid not: ANCIETNES: but PROPHANE NOVELTIES, for if noueltie is to be auoided, antiquitie is to be kept, if noueltie be prophane, anciuitnes is holy and ſacred. See his whole booke againſt the prophane nouelties of hereſies.

†We may meaſure the newneſſe or oldneſſe of words and termes of ſpeaking in religion, by holy Scriptures onely: as though all thoſe or onely thoſe were new and to be reiected, that are not expreſly found in holy write: but we muſt eſteeme them by the agreeableneſſe or diſagreeableneſſe they haue to the true ſenſe of Scriptures, to the forme of Catholike faith and doctrine, to the praiſe of the old Chriſtians, to the Apoſtolike vſe of ſpeach come vnto vs by tradition of all ages and Churches and to the preſcription of holy Councels and Schooles of the Chriſtian world: which haue giuen out (according to the time and queſtion raiſed by heretikes and contentious perſons) very fit, artificiall and ſignificant words, to diſcerne and defend the truth by, againſt falſhood.

Theſe termes Catholike, Trinitie, Perſon, Sacrament, Incarnation, Maſſe, and many moe, are not (in that ſenſe wherein the Church vſeth then) in the Scriptures at all, and diuers of them were ſpoken by the Apoſtles before any part of the new Teſtament was written, ſome of them taken vp ſtraight after the Apoſtles dayes in the writings and preachings of holy Doctors, and in the ſpeech of all faithfull people, and therefore cannot be counted Nouelties of words. Others beſide theſe, as, Conſubſtantiall, Deipara, Tranſubſtantiation, and the like, which are neither in expreſſe termes found in Scriptures, not yet in ſenſe (if we ſhould follow the iudgement of the ſpeciall ſect againſt which the ſaid words were firſt inuented, the Arrians crying out againſt Nicene Councell, for the firſt: the Neſtorians againſt Epheſine Councell, for the ſecond; the Lutherans and Caluiniſts againſt the Lateran and the later Councels, for the third) theſe words alſo notwithſtanding, by the iudgement of holy Church and Councels approued to be conſonant to Gods word, and made authenticall among the faithfull, are ſound and true words, and not of thoſe kind which the Apoſtle calleth Nouelties.

† Prophane novelties of words how to be tryed and examined.

Catholicke termes not expreſly in the Scriptures, but in ſenſe, are no ſuch novelties of words.

Hereticall novelties of words.

The words then here forbidden, are the new prophane termes and ſpeeches invented or ſpecially vſed by heretickes, ſuch as S. Irenee recordeth, the Valentinians had a number moſt monſtrous: as the Manichees had alſo diuers, as may be ſeene in S. Auguſtine: The Arrians had their * Similis ſubſtantia, and Chriſt to be ex non exiſtentibus: the other heretikes after thoſe dayes had their * Chriſtiparam, and ſuch like, agreeable to their ſects. But the Proteſtants paſſe in this kind, as they exceed moſt heretikes in the number of new opinions: as their Seruum arbitrium, their ſole faith, their fiducc, their apprehenſion of Chriſts iuſtice, their imputatiue righteouſneſſe: their horrible termes of terrours, anguiſhes, diſtreſſes, diſtruſt, feare and feeling of hell paines in the ſoule of our Sauiour, to expreſſe their blaſphemous fiction of his temporall damnation, which they call his deſcending to hell: Their marks, tokens, and badges Sacramentall, their Companation, Impanation Circumpanation, to auoid the true Conuerſion in the Euchariſt: their preſence in figure, in faith, ſigne, ſpirit, pleadge, effect, to auoid the reall preſence of Chriſts body. Theſe and ſuch like innumerable which they occupie in euery part of their falſe doctrine, are in the ſenſe that they vſe them, all falſe, captious and deceitfull words; and are nouitates vocum here forbidden.

The Proteſtants prophane novelties of words.

And though ſome of the ſaid terms haue been by ſome occaſion obiter without ill meaning ſpoken by Catholikes before theſe hereticks aroſe, yet now knowing them to be the proper ſpeeches of heretikes, Chriſtian men are bound to auoyd them. Wherin the Church of God hath euer bin as diligent to reſiſt Nouelties of word, as her aduerſarie are buſie to inuent them, for which cauſe ſhee will not haue vs communicate with them, nor follow their faſhion and phraſe newly inuented, though in the nature of the words ſometime there bee no harme. In S. Auguſtines dayes when Chriſtian men had any good befallen them, or entered into any mans houſe, or met any friend by the way, they vſed alwayes to ſay, Deo gratias. The Donatiſts and Circumcellions of that time being newfangled, forſooke the old phraſe and would alwayes ſay, Laus Deo, from which the Catholike men did ſo abhorre (as the ſaid Doctor writeth) that they had as leeſe meete a theefe as that one ſaid to them, Laus Deo in ſteed of Deo gratias. As now we Catholikes muſt not ſay, The Lord, but Our Lord: as we ſay Our Lady for his mother, not, The Lady. Let vs keepe our forefathers words, and we ſhall eaſily keepe

our old and true faith that we had of the first Christian, Let them say. Amendment, abstinence, the Lords Supper, the Communion table, Elders, Ministers, Superintendent, Congregation, so bee it, prayse ye the Lord, Morning-prayer, Euening-prayer, and the rest, as they will: Let vs auoid those nouelties of words, according to the Apostles prescript, and keep the old termes, Penance, Fast, Priest, Church, Bishop, Masse, Mattin Euensong, the B. Sacrament, Altar, Oblation, Host, Sacrifice, Allelvia, Amen, Lent, Palme-sonday, Christmasse, and the very words will bring us to the faith of our first Apostles, and condemne these new Apostates new faith and phrase.

CARTVV.4. [20 Profane Nouelties.] Notwithstanding Augustine said well, that euerie nouelti is not to be auoided, nor euerie antiquitie to be desired, yet it liketh us well in another sense that hee saith of auoyding nouelti and holding antiquitie. But your case is miserable, which in pretence of loue of antiquitie, and ancientie of words dare not stand to the euidence of the Scriptures: for you say precisely that the oldnesse or newnesse of words must not be measured by them onely: Wherein your meaning is not alone to make defence for words, which not found in Scripture in so many syllables and letters are yet in no truth and matter substantially grounded and founded upon the Scripture, as the word Consubstantiall and Deipara, but over and aboue that speech warrantable by Scripture, you will haue a wider mouth and broder language: For you say beside the agreement that words haue to Scripture, they must be agreeable to the forme of the Catholique faith and doctrine, to the phrase of the old Christians, to the Apostolicke use of speech come by tradition of all ages and Churches: where beside, that the best shew of words is stark naught, supposing a doctrine not contained in Scripture, nor proued thereout: You meane by Catholick nothing but the speciall and particular faith of Rome, by Apostolick that which is Papall, by old Christians, the new Romanists, by all ages and Churches, the Popish Synagogues which were vnborne and vnbred many hundred yeares after the Apostles; what else meane the Masse and Transubstantiation, which you haue laid forth as the onely antiquities proper vnto you: where the one of them was neuer heard of before the Lateran Councell, the other for the name a stranger, and seldom found in ancient writing, and the thing which Papists signifie by the name, a very Anathema, and such as no Christian soyle can away with. Aug. contra Faustum lib. 15. cap. 3.

As for the nouelties of words you charge us with (those excepted that the Lutherans use in the matter of the Lords Supper) they haue warrant either by expresse words of the Scripture, or by deduction from them. And let the reader note what equitie is in these men, which in extreme boldnesse of inventing of new words, according to the forge of new doctrines, shame not to condemne in vs all prophane nouelti which was vsed of the ancient Churches; nay such is the brutish sence wherein to God in iust vengeance hath cast them, that they shame not to refuse as a prophane nouelti, the most ancient and mother tongue of holy Scripture: for where wee, according to the vsuall manner of the Scripture doe say, the Lord, they as a prophane nouelti protest against it, and here admonish their disciples to auoyd it. Wherein the Reader may easily see how this latter litter of the Popish Sect of Iesuits, is more mishapen then are all other: for the colledge of Diuines in the Vniversitie of Louan, (which is gold to this drosse of Iesuitisme) hath in their translation according both to the words of the text, and translation vsed in our Churches, turned as we haue done, The Lord: from which this vermin flieth, not onely in common speech, but in translation of the text of Scripture, as from poyson. And albeit there can be no cause found why the speech of the holy Scripture as good coyne, should not be current amongst all Christians, yet the sottish reason of the Iesuites wherewith they are led to this franzie, aggravateth their madnesse against them: for vpon that Christian men in Augustines time were wont to say to those they met, &c. Deo gratias, and had as leefe meet a theife as a Circumcellion, which would say, Laus Deo, they conclude that they may not say the Lord, because we say so, whom they haue now in no other account then Christians had the Circumcellions then, where the case is not like: For first, although Laus Deo, be found in Scripture, yet it is not vsed for a manner of salutation as it was vsed in Augustines time: So that the Christians might well auoide that forme of salutation of the Circumcellions without auoiding the phrase of holy Scripture. Secondly, it is one thing to continue a lawfull phrase once taken up, and not to change it, with another lawfull phrase vnlawfully vsed (which is the case of those old Christians) and another to relinquish a lawfull phrase for the abuse of it, which is your case. Last of all, if Augustine say that Christians had as leefe meet with a theefe as with a Circumcellion which would say Laus Deo: yet that vttereth a mislike of the Heretique, and not of the salutation: so that if he could haue met Laus Deo, without meeting the Circumcellion, Laus Deo should haue been as welcom as Deo gratias: where you meeting the Lord, in the Bible alone, and vnaccompanied of Circumcellion or other heretick whatsoever, will not vouch-safe it one hand, because we (as our duty is) giue it both. Our Lord both because it is the phrase of Scripture, and (if it were not) is maintaineable by reason out of the same, we willingly receiue. But as for Our Lady and The Lady, as defilements we cannot without shame and repentance once take in our lippes, vnlesse we would make our selues guilty of mating the member with the Head, the Hand-maid with her Lord, the creature with the Creator, the redeemed from her sinnes, with the Redeemer that by his precious bloud deliuered her from them.

We are therefore well content that the age of your faith should be measured by the antiquity of your words wherein you haue laid it up, putting the Reader in remembrance, that forsomuch as professedly you adde vnto the warrantable speeches of holy Scripture, and take from the precise and expresse language thereof, the faith of your Church is not by consequence alone, but by open profession without and against the Scripture, which thing albeit you otherwhere detest as absurd, yet heere at vnaware you are euidently fallen vnto. Vpon Gal. 1.

RHEM. 5. [20. Falsely called knowledge.] It is the propertie of all Heretickes to arrogate to themselues great knowledge, and to condemne the simplicitie of their fathers the holy Doctors and the Church, but the Apostle calleth their pretended skill, a knowledge falsely so called, being Heretickes arrogate knowledge falsly so called.

in truth high and deep blindnes. Such (saith S. Irenæus li. 5. c 27.) as forsake the preaching of the Church, argue the holy Priests of vnskilfulnesse, not considering how far more worth a religious idiote is, then a blasphemous and impudent sophister, such as all Heretikes be. And againe Vincentius Lirinensis speaking in the person of heretikes saith, Come O yee foolish and miserable men, that are commonly called Catholikes, and learne the true faith which hath been hid many ages heretofore, but is reuealed and shewed of late &c. See his whole booke concerning these matters.

CARTVV. 6. [20 Falsly called knowledge] The Popish Diuines are like them, which hauing wholesom bread on their back behind, go gnawing a flint in their hand before: For hauing cast the holy Scriptures behind their back, they pine both themselues and others that depend upon them with their foolish questions, wherein there is no more sauour then a stone, yet bee they of that flinty fore-head that they shame not to obiect that vnto vs which so fitteth them, as if the Apostle had taken the measure of these words from their brawling and bawling Sophomes; wherein if the truth speak not loud enough, let them looke Erasmus, who compareth their brambles and thornes of Sophisticall Diuinity, to the manner of teaching which Valentinus, Basilides and Marcion the heretiques vsed, the very selfe-same which they out of Irenæus, impudently, and with replye of their own conscience apply vnto vs, whom they know neither to speak in clouds, nor write in riddles, as their Schoole-men do, and these Heretiques did; but to deliver the doctrine we teach to the vnderstanding of the simplest: Where to vnderstand their Diuinity a man must learne another Grammer then ever Priscian taught, and other language then ever Apostle spake.

RHEMIST.

THE chiefe scope of this second to Timothie is, to open vnto him that his martyrdom is at hand. Which yet he doth not plainly before the end: preparing first his mind with much circumstance, because he knew it would grieue him sore, & also might be a tentation to him. Therefore hee talketh of the cause of his trouble, and of the reward: that the one is honourable, and the other most glorious: and exhorteth him to be constant in the faith, to be readie alwayes to suffer it, to fulfill his ministerie to the end, as himselfe had done his.

Whereby it is certain that it was written at Rome, in his last apprehension and imprisonment there: as he signifieth by these words Chap. 1. Onesiphorus was not ashamed of my chaine, but when he was come to Rome, carefully sought me, &c. And of his martyrdom, thus: For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my resolution (or death) is at hand c. 4.

CARTVV. The chiefe scope of this Epistle is to strengthen the hands of Timothy to a full performance of his office of the Euangelistship committed vnto him against the lets which might either stay or hinder the good course that he had entered, and set forward in. The hinderances of whose Ministerie consisting partly in the opposition of contrary doctrine by privie enemies of the Gospell, partly in feare of persecution from open enemies of the same. The Apostle to hearten Timothie against the latter propoundeth his own example, wherein, as in a cleere glasse, he might see both Gods assistance and an example of Christian courage and valour, to go vnder what triall soever the Lord should draw him vnto.

And therefore it appeareth how poore Scope-maisters the Iesuites are, which affirme that the chiefe scope of this Epistle is to open to Timothie that Pauls Martyrdome was at hand, a cold and silly Argument of an Epistle of such a one as Paul was, to such as was Timothy, but much more cold and silly in regard of the constant and perpetuall fruit that the Church of God should gather thereof vnto the end of the world.

It is true that he mentioneth his Martyrdom, and so handleth it, that none without their great sinne be offended or stumble, at that which offereth them singular strength and vpholding; But that it is the chiefe Scope, which is neither chiefe nor scope, but a reason of one of the points which the Apostle set before him, is a testimony of that vaile before their faces, which keeping them from looking vpon Christ the end and scope of all the Scripture, it is no great marvell if they misse of the Scope of the severall bookes thereof wherein the face of Christ is to be seen.

CHAP. I.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 6 FOR the which cause I admonish thee that thou ‡ resuscitate the grace of God: which is in thee by the imposition of my hands.

RHEM. 1. [6. Grace of God.] Here againe it is plaine that holy Orders giue grace, and that euen by and in the externall ceremonie of imposing the Bishops hands. And it is a manner of speech specially vsed in this Apostle and S. Luke that Orders giue grace to the ordered, and that to take orders or authoritie to minister Sacraments, or preach, is, to begiuen or deliuered to Gods grace Act. 14. 25.

CARTVV. 1. [6. Grace of God.] Look the answer before upon 1. Tim. 4. 14. where the same note upon the same ground is set downe.

Verse 16. Our Lord giue mercy to the house of Onesiphorus: because he hath often refreshed me, and hath not ‡ been ashamed of my chaine.

RHEM. 2. [16 Not been ashamed.] What a happie and meritorious thing it is to relieue the afflicted for religion, and not to be ashamed of their disgrace, yrons, or what miseries soeuer.

CARTVV. This is answered in the Annotation upon the 18. verse.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 5. Calling to minde that faith which is in thee not fained, which also dwelt first in thy Grand-mother Lois, and thy mother Eunice, and I am sure that in thee also.

RHEM. 4. [5. In thy grandmother.] Though God shew mercy to many that be of incredulous, hereticall or ill parents, yea it is a goodly benediction of God to haue good education and to haue good faithfull progenitors and Catholike parents. And it is great sinne to forsake the faith of our fathers that be Catholikes, or contrary to our education in the Church to follow strange doctrins, abandoning not onely our next naturall parents faith, but the ancient faith and beleefe of all our progenitours for many hundred yeeres together. And if to follow the faith of mother and grandmother onely, the Christian religion being then but newly planted, was so condemnable euen in a Bishop, how much more is it now laudable to cleaue fast to the faith of so many our progenitors and ages that continued in the same Christian religion which they first receiued.

A great blessing to haue Catholicke progenitors, and very cõmendable to cleaue fast to their faith.

Our Protestants in their great wisdom laugh at good simple men when they talke of their fathers faith. But S. Hierome, I am a Christian (saith he) and borne of Christian parents, and carrie the signe of the crosse in my forehead. And againe ep. 65. c. 3. Vntill this day the Christian world hath been without this doctrine, that faith will I hold fast being an old man, wherein I was borne a child. And the holy Scriptures set vs often to schoole to our fathers. Aske thy father, and they will shew thee, thy ancestours, and they will tell thee, And againe, Our fathers haue shewed vnto vs. And commonly the true God is called the God of the faithfull and of their forefathers. Dan. 2. 3. And false Gods and new doctrines or opinions be named New and fresh such as their fathers worshipped not, Deu. 32. Finally S. Paul both here & *often els alleageth for his defence and commendation, that he was of faithfull progenitours. And it is a case that Heretickes cannot lightly brag of, no one sect commonly during so long without intermission, that they can haue many progenitors of the said sect, Which is a demonstration that their faith is not true, and that it is impossible our Catholike faith to bee false supposing the Christian religion to be true.

CARTVV. 3. [5 In thy Grand mother.] Here we esteeme that the Proverbe is verified of you, that you hold the wolfe by the eares: For we iudge you not so unprovident but that you would gladly haue passed by this place untouched, if your Reader would not haue prejudiced the principal pillar of your worme-eaten Religion, relying upon the faith of your Fore-fathers, which he might haue thought to haue been (as indeed it is) stark rotten, if you had over leaped this place, which carrieth in shew so full a sound thereof. And were it not for the truthes sake, we could even pittie you (poore soules) that are thus constrained to bring your cause to the place of execution. For let it bee obserued that where the Nation of the Iewes had at the writing of this Epistle wholly fallen away from the truth, and many yeares before the comming of our Saviour Christ for the greatest part shamefully shamefully swarved from the same, yet notwithstanding the Apostle doubteth not to deriue the confirmation of Timothy in the true faith from his mother and grand-mother onely. Teaching thereby, that although there be but a few from whom we can fetch the example of true and undefiled faith, yet that we are more to prize the example of those few abiding in the truth, then to regard the streame of many multitudes declining from the same. We therefore willingly yeeld to follow the faith of our fore fathers, howbeeuie that the multitude of them should be respected, where (as it oft commeth to passe) they haue turned their eyes first, and then their feete from the truth.

There is yet more in this place which striketh at the very throate of your cause, so directly, that not so much as the feare of loosing your disciples for your silence therein, could cause you talke with all: For the Apostle heere affirmeth, that hee serued God from his progenitors in a pure conscience: wherein it being manifest, that the age he lived in was corrupt, he must needs understand those progenitors that lived in Abraham, Moses, Dauids, and other holy times, wherein the truth of God was maintained: so that herein your visard of Fore fathers is againe pulled from your faces, which alwaies understand those that go next before you, where the Apostle understandeth those which held the truth, although dead many ages before him. Notwithstanding therefore that for one Scripture setting up the picture of our fore-fathers faith to draw ours by, there are ten that forbid us to cast any liking or imitating eye thereunto; yet we are well content to ioyne issue with you in the point of faith of our fore-fathers.

2. Reg. 17. 2. Chro. 30. Nehem. 13. Psa. 78. 93. 106. Ier. 3. & 44 Ezech. 20. Amos 2. Gal. 1. 1. Pet. 1.

First for all ages and generations from the beginning of the world until this day wherein we liue: so that your measure be not the fooles measure, that is carried away with the multitude.

Secondly, even for the multitude of those which haue made any outward profession of the truth: so you remember that a wise man having his eyes in the fore-part of his head, doth notwithstanding turne them to looke backe unto the things that are past, and hath them not alwayes (as is the guise of fooles) fixed upon the present. And withall it is evident, that you are deceived, that esteeme the faith of the Gospell here understood, which was indeed the faith of Gods people, and the same in substance with the faith of the Gospell; but yet differing from it in clearenesse, according to the difference of the measure of knowledge under the Law and under the Gospell: for faith in that manner was not in Pauls progenitors, nor by great likelihood in Timothies Grand-mother. And it appeareth in this Epistle, that the substance of this faith which is here commended in Timothy, was taught him by his mother out of the Scriptures of the old Testament, which alone were written when Timothy was a babe, scarce crept out of his swathing-clothes.

2. Tim. 3.

Verse. 12. For the which cause also I suffer these things: but I am not confounded. For I know whom I haue beleeved, and I am sure that hee is able to keepe my Depositum unto that day.

All our good deeds are laid up with God to be rewarded.

RHEM. 4. [12. Depositum.] A great comfort to all Christians, that euerie of their good deeds and sufferings for Christ, and all the worldly losses sustained, for defence or confession of their faith, bee extant with God, and kept as Depositum, to bee repayed or receiued againe in heauen. Which if the worldlings beleeued or considered they would not so much maruell to see Catholicke men so willingly to lose land, libertie, credit, life and all for Christs sake and the Churches faith, CART VV. 4. [12. Depositum.] The Doctrine of reward of good works at the later day, is true, but groweth not out of this ground, where the Apostle speaketh not of the reward that shall then be given, but of the preservation and continuance of himselfe in the feare and service of God until that day, untill the which he had committed himselfe to be kept, that then he might receiue reward. And it is finely sayd of the Apostle, that by faith he had commended himselfe to be kept in the handes of God, as a pretious pledge to be preserued, that no affliction nor other thing, high nor low, present or to come, should be able to take him out of his hand: Whereupon hee exhorteth, that for so much as God doth keepe so faithfully and safely the Ministers that by a liuely faith lay themselues down in his hand; that he also would keepe the doctrine faithfully and carefully which God had laid up with him, as a treasure of speciall trust: so that herein there is a kinde of mutuall Indenture of the Lords part to keepe us trusting in him, of our part to keepe the holy faith and doctrine that hee hath put us in trust with.

Rom. 8. 14.

Verse. 13. Haue thou a forme of sound words, which thou hast heard of mee in faith, and in the loue in Christ Iesus.

Wee must speak in Catholick terms after a certaine rule of faith, and forme of words.

RHEM. 5. [13. A forme.] The Apostles did set down a platforme of faith, doctrine, and phrase of Catholike speach and preaching, and that not so much by writing (as here we see by word of mouth: to which he referreth Timothee ouer and aboue his Epistle vnto him. And how precisely Christian Doctors ought to keepe the forme of words anciently appropriated to the mysteries and matters of our religion S. Augustine expresseth in these words, lib. 10. de ciuit. c. 23. Philosophers speake with freedome of words. &c. but we must speake according to a certaine rule, lest licentious libertie of words breed an impious opinion of the things also that are signified by the same. Trinitie, person, essence, Consubstantiall, Transubstantiation, Masse, Sacrament, and such like, be verba sana (as the Apostle speaketh) sound words giuen to expresse certaine high truths in religion, partly by the Apostles and first founders of our religion vnder Christ, and partly very aptly inuented by holy Councels and fathers, to expresse as neere as could bee the high ineffable or vnspeakable veritie of some points, and to stoppe the heretickes audacitie and inuention of new wordes and prophane speaches in such things which the Apostle warneth Timothee to auoide, 1. epist. c. 6. 20. and 2. epist. 2. 16. See the Annotations there.

CART VV. 5. [13. A forme.] By wholesome words he meaneth not words and tearmes, but doctrine, which when Paul taught not but out of the Scriptures, as hath been often shewed, it is in vaine for you to carry this speech unto your traditionary doctrines, which haue no record in holy Scripture.

Scripture. Seeing also the Apostle declareth, that there is in the Scriptures to informe Timothy to all perfection in the ministery; it followeth that they are a sufficient store-house to furnish him of both matter and forme, sentences and termes wherewith the doctrine of salvation is to be deliuered to the people of God. Looke further answer before upon Rom. 6.17. 2. Tim. 3.

Verse. 18. ‖ Our Lord grant him to finde mercy of our Lord, in that day. And how many things he ministred to me at Ephesus, thou knowest better.

RHEM. 6. [18. Our Lord.] To haue this prayer of an Apostle, or any Priest or pore Cath. man so relieued giueth the greatest hope at the day of our death or generall iudgement, that can be: and it is worth all the lands honors, and riches of the world: Relievers of Cath. prisoners.

CART. VV. 6. [18. Our Lord.] The reliefe of the persecuted, especially Ministers, which stand in the breach against the enemies of truth, as an effect of faith, assureth us that our hope is not in vaine, it is also better then lands, &c. but it giveth not the greatest hope that can be, seeing the testimony of the Spirit of God unto our Spirits that we are his children, is both before it, and hath more force in it to assure our hope then it. As for the merit of this reliefe, whereof your by-note in the margent tatleth, it is but your Popish raving without all furtherance of the text, which also knocketh out the braines of your merit by the word of giving and mercy, neither whereof could stand, if it were desert. Rom. 8. 15, 16. Gal. 4. 6.

CHAP. II.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 10. Therefore ‡ I sustaine all things for the elect, that they also may obtaine the salvation, which is in Christ Iesus with heauenly glory.

RHEM. 1, [10. I sustaine.] Marke here that the elect (though sure of saluation) yet are saued by meanes of their preachers and teachers as also by their own endeuours.

CART VV. 1 [10. I sustain] The elect are saved by means of their Teachers as instruments; but by their owne endevour, not: Which as you falsly affirme, considering that God is found of those that seeke him not, so is there no marke of it in this place: howbeit, if by salvation bee understood the full possession of that salvation which a man receiveth, when he first beleeveth and consequently is saved; then we grant that there is an endevour of the elect before they attain salvation.

Verse 25. With modesty admonishing them that resist the truth: lest sometime ‡ God giue them repentance to know the truth.

RHEM. 2. [25. God giue them.] Conuersion from sin and heresie is the gift of God and of his speciall grace: yet here wee see good exhortation and prayer and such other helpes of man bee profitable thereunto. Which could not be, if we had not free will.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 4. ‖ No man being a Souldier to God, entangleth himselfe with secular businesses: that he may please him to whom he hath approved himselfe.

RHEM 3. [4. No man being a souldier.] First of all, the Apostle (1. Cor. 7.) maketh marriage and the needfull cares, solicitude, and distractions thereupon euer depending, speciall impediments of all such as should employ themselues wholy to Gods seruice, as Bishops and Priests are bound to do. He that is with a wife (saith he) is carefull for the world, how to please his wife, and is distracted or deuided. 1. Cor. 7. What secular affaires doe not agree nor consist with spirituall mens function.

Secondly, the practise of Phisick, merchandise, or any other prophane facultie and trade of life to gather riches, and much more are to be giuen to hunting, hawking, gameing, shewes, enterludes, or the like pastimes is here forbidden.

Thirdly, the seruices of Princes & manifold base offices done to them for to obtain dignities and promotions, are disagreeable to Priestly function, not so, to be their chaplens for this purpose to preach vnto them, to heare their confessions, to minister the Sacraments unto them, to say Diuine seruice before them, and such other spirituall duties, for, all such seruices done to principall persons both of the Clergie and Laitie, bee godly and consonant to Priestly vocation. As also seruing of Princes and Commonweales in ciuill causes and matters of state, in making peace and quietnesse among the people, by deciding or compounding their controuersies, and all such like affaires tending to the honour of God and good of men, and to the vpholding of true religion, when they may be done without notorious damage or hinderance of their spirituall charge, or when the hurts thereof be aboundantly recompensed by the necessarie dueties done for the generall good of kingdom or country: All such things (I say) bee lawfull and often very requisite. And S. Augustine S. Ambrose, S. Bernard and other holy Bishops of old were much occupied therein, as we see in S. August. book de opere Monachorum c. 29. & Possid. in vit. c. 19. How spirituall men may serue secular Princes, and deale in ciuil causes. In vit. S. Ambr. & Bern.

CART VV 3. [4. No man being a Souldier] If the Scriptures had not plainly set downe that Ministers may not meddle with ciuill offices, thereby to haue one foot in the Church & another in the Common-wealth, yet the very consideration of the bare weight & difficulty of the charges that fall into the estate of a Minister of the one side, and the regard of the small strength and sufficiencie that is in aman how sufficient soever, of the other side; could not onely shut and close up all hands from embracing of both, but even wring out of theirs that haue laid hold of them, one of those charges which for attendance that either of them requireth, and for traine of offices that either of them is accompanied 2. Cor. 2. 16 companied with (the ministery especially) cannot lodge under one roofe, and are in one and the same person incompatible. And surely howsoever long custom in Popery hath caused it to seeme in the eyes of many good men, yet indeed it is a very great and intollerable confusion, which may be easier understood, if we set before our eyes the uncomelinesse and disorder of it in the like case. For let us imagine the Mayor or Bailiffe of a Towne, or a King or Emperour of the Land to come into the Pulpit and make a Sermon, afterward to minister the Sacraments, and from the Church to goe with the Mace before him, or with the Scepter in his hand to the place of iudgement, there to arraigne prisoners, or to decide title of land, who would not be amazed to see this, & wonder at it as a strange and a monstrous sight? Assuredly the selfe same deformitie it is, when the Minister of the word is made a Iustice of Peace, or Quorum, or any such like as the iudgement of civill causes is daily committed unto. And to say the truth, it is rather the same cause then the like, even as it is the same way from Thebes to Athens, that is from Athens to Thebes Our Saviour Christ of all that euer were without comparison the most sufficient, refused to decide the title of inheritance between brethren, amongst whom the nourishment of peace which might haue been made by such order as our Sav. Christ could haue set down, is most necessarie. And he refuseth it not in regard of the kinde of cause, as if he would haue undertaken the matter, if it had been of another sort of Civill causes, but because hee being Minister could not be called to bee a Iudge, in which regard he refused to giue * sentence of death against her which was taken in adultery.

Next in sufficiencie of gifts unto our Saviour Christ were the Apostles, which finding so great a charge of Preaching and Prayer, as they could not attend upon the provision of the poore, doe evidently declare that the ministerie of the Word hath a iealous eye that cannot abide the association of any other office with it, as that which will defraud it of all that is lent unto another. And if the office of provision for the poore, for use necessarie, for credite honourable, and for the kinde of office next neighbour unto the ministerie of the Word, will not frame nor sort with the ministerie of the Word (wherewith it hath the neerest coniunction) much lesse can other offices (which touch it not so neere) haue any good correspondence with it. And as it is untrue in any mans mouth to affirme that the Civill and Ecclesiasticall Offices may meet together; so it is most absurd in the Iesuites, which under pretence of freeing the Minister from businesse that may hinder his Church warre-fare, deny that he may haue a wife, which beside that she was ordained a help unto a man in his greatest perfection, may well ease him of many household cares and travailes that the charge of housekeeping and hospitality doth draw with it. It is also fooliſh, that they denying him truely the exercise of Phisick, accord him the charge of the Common-wealth; when as Physick, both in regard of the privateneſſe of the calling, and lesse labour that it taketh up, especially being free for him to practise his Physick upon those alone to whom his spirituall medicine is due, is much more suitable to the Ministerie then is the office of the Magistrate.

Now where they will not haue their Priests meddle with base offices about Princes, but are content that they should be Lord Chancellours unto them; they are wise to themselues indeed, but to the charge of the Ministerie that they haue undertaken, and for the service unto the Church, let them tell us whether it be not all alike folly to be bound with Iron chaines, as when they are bound and shackeld with golden fetters, especially when the golden fetters weigh heavier then do the Iron Giues, yet is it but a base office in your Priests to be Gardners and Stewards of Noble and Worshipfull mens houses; wherewith notwithstanding you were wellcontent, thereby the better to pry into them, lest they should happily attempt any thing against your profite.

And as the Apostle by this place exhorteth the Minister to unfold himselfe by the example of a Souldier, of things that otherwise he might lawfully use without this spirituall warfare: so the ancient Fathers haue carried it to the debarring of Ministers from dealing in Civill Affaires. As Ierome, [a] which out of this place proveth that they may not meddle with secular affaires, and condemneth those in the Ministerie that serue in Civill affairs, as offering the same coyne to Cæsar which they offer unto God, accounting it as unmeet for one man to serue the Church and Common-wealth, as with one and the same peece of mony to pay the duties which are due to God, and the tribute to be payd to the Prince.

Cyprian also alledgeth this place against [b] one that took upon him to be executor of a testament, whereas it is well known that the person of the deceased in care of his wife and children that depend upon him is of all other most worthy of favour. The like whereof in a manner is forbidden in another Generall Councell. And [d] Cyprian further declareth that it was decreed in a Councell that the Ministers should onely serue the Altar and the Sacrifices, and giue themselues to prayer. Like unto this did another Councell [e] decree, that a Bishop should onely attend to prayer, reading and preaching: And like unto them both, is the [f] Canon, ascribed unto the Apostles and another of Chalcedon. Neither finde we any thing in the life of Ambrose contrarie to this which we haue set down; but finde Ambrose himselfe flat for us, [g] who affirmeth, that worldly government is the weakning of the Priest, alluding unto the Apostles saying, that he was then strong when hee was weak. As for that out of [h] Possidonius in the life of Augustine, it cannot be understood of Civill affaires, considering he opposeth them to secular or worldly matters. That also out of Augustines own book of the worke of Monkes c. 29. cannot be understood of iudgement given by Civill authoritie: For that which he did, he affirmeth that the Apostle commanded to bee done by the most contemptible in the Church: Vnlesse you therefore dare say that the Apostle commanded the simplest in the Church to beare Civill office, this place is from the purpose. Againe, when Augustin saith that the Apostle hath tyed him so to do, and laid it upon him, if you will haue here a Civill office understood, it must follow that the Civill Office is incident to the Office of the Ministerie, and cannot bee severed from it: What Barnard did we weigh not, although it was more tolerable if his Monkes being twice dead, somewhat was borne in him to do for them that could do nothing for themselues.

Verse

Verse. 15. Carefully provide to present thy selfe approved to God, a workman not to be confounded, ‖ rightly handling the word of truth.

RHEM. 1. [15. Rightly.] The Scriptures or chalenge of the word of God is common to Catholikes and Heretikes, but all is in the handling of them, these latter handle them guilefully, adultering the word of God, as *else where the Apostle speaketh: the other sincerely after the maner of the Apostles and doctors of Gods Church. Which the Greek expresseth by a significant word of cutting a thing straight by a line. Catholikes only right handlers of the Scripture.

CARTVV. 3. [15 Rightly,] S.

Verse. 17. And ‖ their speech spreadeth as a canker: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus.

RHEM. 4. [17. Their speach.] The speaches, preaching and writing of Heretikes be pestiferous, contagious, and creeping like a canker therefore Christian men must neuer heare their sermons nor read their books. For such men haue a popular way of talke whereby the vnlearned, and specially women loden with sinne, are easily beguiled. Nothing is so easily (saith S. Hierome) as with volvble and rolling tongue to deceiue the rude people, which admire whatsoeuer they vnderstand not. Ep. 2. ad Nepot. c. 10. Heretical bookes and sermons are to be auoided CARTVV. 4. [17 Their speech.] Heretickes bookes and Sermons are not of all, not yet venterously to be read and heard: yet here the Doidance commanded reacheth not but to the disallowance, and condemnation of it, seeing it is not commanded onely to the vnlearned, but to Timothie himselfe to avoide them, to whom notwithstanding it was lawfull to reade them the better to avoid them, and to cause them to be avoyded of other.

Verse. 20. But ‖ in a great house there are not onely vessels of gold and silver, but also of wood and of earth: and certaine indeed vnto honour, but certain vnto contumelie.

RHEM. 5. [20. In a great house.] He meaneth not that Hymenæus and Philetus (of whom hee spake immediatly before) or of other heretikes, be properly within the Church, as Catholike men are though grieuous sinners: but that euill men who for the punishment of their sinnes become heretikes were before they fell from their faith as vessels of contumely within the Church. Yea and often after they be seuered in hart and in the sight of God, so long as they stand in externall profession and vse of the same Sacraments, and in the outward fellowship of Catholikes, nor yet either separated of themselues, nor cast out by the gouernours of the Church, so long we say they be after a sort in the Church: though properly and indeed they be out of the compasse of Gods house. Marry of those that are openly seuered in Sacraments, Seruice and communion, there is no question but they are out of the Church. Who are out of the Church or within it.

CARTVV 5. [20 In great house] S.

Verse. 21. If any man therefore shall ‖ cleanse himselfe from these, hee shall be a vessell vnto honour, sanctified, and profitable to our Lord, prepared to euery good worke.

RHEM. 6. [21. Cleanse himselfe.] Man then hath freewill to make himselfe a vessell of saluation or damnation: though saluation bee attributed to Gods mercy principally, the other to his iust iudgement: neither of both being repugnant to our free will, but working with and by the same, all such effects in vs as to his prouidence and our deserts be agreeable. Freewill.

CARTVV. 6. [21 Cleanse himselfe.] For your reason to proue Freewill, because we are commanded, and (as your Marginall note after saith) exhorted to cleanse our selues, &c. you are beholden to Aristotles Ethikes, and not to Pauls Epistles, who will teach you that God commandeth and exhorteth men to do things which they cannot do; by the one, to let them see their impotencie and nothingnesse; by the other, to make way for power to do the good he exhorteth vnto, whilst through the Preaching of the Word he conveigheth his Spirit into their hearts. And hitherto you haue Philophic and naturall reason on your side to helpe to spoyle your simple Reader. But in that your note in the Margent would by prayer for good things argue that we haue free-will to receiue them, you are neither in Aristotles nor in Christs schoole: for thereof it is proued that good things are not within the reach of our freewill, seeing we are directed thereby to seek them without our selues, which were a meere mockerie of God if we had them at home. And if peradventure you will say that the Apostle prayed vnto God that men should open the hand of their freewill to lay hold of the grace of God, the Apostle doth cleane cut off that hand (if yet it can be cut off that was neuer in this corrupt state on) when he saith that things shall turne to his saluation through prayer of others for him, not by his freewill, but by the administration of the spirit of Iesus Christ: And yet we grant also, that may well and truely be said to work in his cleansing: for so much as the will of man in substance the same with the corrupt one, although renewed is ioyned in the action moving towards that which is good, after that it selfe by the holy spirit of God hath been moved. CHAP. III.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 8. But as ‡ Iannes and Mambres resisted Moses, so these also resist the truth, men corupted in mind, reprobate concerning the faith.

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [8. Iannes and Mambres.] That those Magicians which resisted Moses, were thus called, it is not written in all the old Testament, therefore it came to the Apostles knowledge by tradition, as the Church now hath the names of the 3. kings, of the penitent theefe, of the souldiar that pearced Christs side on the Crosse, and of the like.

CARTVV. 1. [8.] If the names of Iannes and Iambres had not come to your knowledge, yet necessary doctrine should haue been wanting vnto vs. And if the new Testament furnisheth vs of such small things as these are not written in the old, how much lesse leaueth it vs vnfurnished of greater matters, if any had been passed over by the Prophets which might haue been of vse for vs: when you shall also bring vs as good records for the number and the names of your three Kings of Colen, &c. as we haue here of the Magicians that resisted Moses, we will be well content that they shall be laid up in the Churches Library: but for the credit of writings they yet haue, they are fitter for the house of office then for any entertainment in the Church of God: wherein that you thinke not that we deale partially, we professe that the Iewes keeping the Register of these names in their Talmud, should yet not so much as in matter of Story haue had any necessary or bonnden faith at our hand, vnlesse we had read it in the Apostle himselfe.

Verse 14. But thou, ‡ continue in those things which thou hast learned, and are committed to thee: knowing of whom thou hast learned.

RHEM. 2. [14. Continue in those things.] In all danger and diuersitie of false sects, S. Pauls admonition, is euer to abide in that was first taught and deliuered, neuer to giue ouer our old faith for a new fansie. This is it which before he calleth Depositum 1. Tim. 6. and 2. Tim. 1.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 2. And men ! shall be louers of themselues, couetous, hautie, proud, blasphemous, not obedient to their parents, vnkinde, wicked, &c.

RHEM. 3. [2. Men shall be.] All these words S. Cyprian expoundeth of such as by pride and disobedience resist Gods Priests, Let no faithfull man, saith he, that keepeth in mind our Lords and the Apostles admonition, maruell if he see in the latter times some proud and stubburn fellowes and the enemies of Gods Priests go out of the Church, or impugne the same when both our Lord and the Apostle foretold vs that such should be. Cypr. ep. 55. num. 3.

CARTVV. 3. [2 Men shall be.] S.

Vers. 6. For of these bee they that craftily enter into houses: and lead captiue silly ! women loden with sins, which are led with divers desires.

Women easily deceiued by heresie.

RHE. 4. [6. Women loden.] Women loden with sins, are for such their deseruings, & through the frailtie of their sex, more subiect to the heretikes deceits, then men: the enemie attempting (as he did in the fall of our first parents) by them to ouerthrow men. See S. Hierom vpon the 3. chapter of Ieremy. Where hee addeth that euery heresie is broched propter gulam & ventrem, for gluttony and bellie-cheere.

Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 26. 27. Iren. lib. 1. c. 30. & 31. Tertul. Apol. cap. 40. Tertul. de Ieiunijs c. 15. Theodoret λόγ. 4 αἱρετικης κακομυθιας. Aug. de utilit. credend.

CARTVV. 4. [6. Women Loden] Ieromes definition of every heresie by one and onely of Belly-cheere, is too narrow; but peradventure you having no selfe and neere acquaintance of any other, haue stumbled at it: for the Apostle declareth that in his time there were heresies, whose principall muster and best shew was, in that they were great afflicters of their bodies. And the Ecclesiastical Story is a plentifull witnesse, that the heresie of the Montanists, and among them of Tertullian, of the Tacians and Eucratikes tended rather to the hurt of their liues for want of food, then to the pampering up and making wanton their flesh. Some also of envy and ambition fall into it, as Arius. And therefore it is better defined of Augustine, which assigneth the cause to be some temporall commodity, especially vain-glory.

Verse. 9. But they shall prosper no further: for their ! folly shall bee manifest to all, as theirs also was.

RHEM. 5 [9. Folly manifest.] All heretikes in the beginning seeme to haue some shew of truth, God for iust punishment of mens sins permitting them for some while in some persons & places to preuaile: but in short time God detecteth them, and openeth the eyes of men to see their deceites: in so much that after the first brunt they bee mantained by force onely, all wise men in maner seing their falshood, though for troubling the state of such common weales where vnluckely they haue been receiued; they cannot be sodenly extirped.

The folly of Heretickes in time appeareth.

CARTVV. 5. [9. Folly manifest.] It is untrue that heretickes in the beginning onely seeme to haue truth, who shortly after are detected of all wise men in a manner: for if by all wise men be understood the godly, which alone are truely wise, then their falshood is not seen in a manner of all wise men, but wholy & throughout of all wise men. And indeed this is the very meaning of the Apostle when he saith, that their folly shall be manifest to all: But if by wise men be understood (as needs must) the wise men of the world, then it is false, & confuted by the Apost. in this chap. when he saith, But euill men, and bewitching deceiuers shall prosper to worse deceiving and being deceiued: whereby appeareth, that forsomuch as the most are euill, and in that number the wise men of the world most commonly of all other be deceiued; it is untrue, that all wise men in a manner shortly see the errours of heretickes. And beside these manifest words of the Apostle, which they tooke no heed vnto, they forget him teaching, that because men receiue not the loue of the truth that they may be saued, God doth send them strong illusion that they may beleeue lies: we charge them not with forgetfulnesse, that it is not in the power of a man to know the truth and secret of the Gospell, but the free gift of God to those it pleaseth him to bestow it on: because albeit the Scripture teach it, yet they neuer learning it, could not remember it. So that vnlesse we had good testimonie out of the holy Scripture, that the kingdom of Antichrist shall daily more and more decrease, untill it be utterly abolished at the glorious appearance of Christ, we should haue good cause to feare lest your madnesse should haue yet a further spread then it hath had.

Verse. 12. And all that will liue godly in Christ Iesus, shall suffer persecution.

RHEM. 6. [12. All that will liue.] All holy men suffer one kinde of persecution or other, being grieued and molested by the wicked one way or another but not all that suffer persecution bee holy, as all malefactors. The Church and Catholike Princes persecute hereticks, and be persecuted of them againe, as S. Augustine often declareth. See ep. 48. Persecution.

CARTVV. 6. 12. [All that will liue.] S.

Verse 13. But evill men and seducers shall prosper to the worse: erring and driving into errour.

RHEM. 7. [13. Prosper.] Though heresies and the authors of them be after a while discovered & by litle and litle forsaken generally of the honest, discret, and men carefull of their own saluation, yet their authors, and other great sinners proceed from one errour and heresie to another and finally to plaine Atheisme and all Diuelish disorder.

CARTVV. 7. [13. Prosper] It is a prophane novelty to expound evill men, great sinners, meaning by great sinners those that over-reach the common sort in wickednesse; as if the Lord hath not matter enough (in iustice) to condemne an infant new borne, and therefore much more to giue him into an hereticall minde, if by age he could conceiue the heresie. And it is nothing else but a plaister for their false interpretation of the ninth verse, which yet healeth it not, but maketh it rather worse, considering that the wise men of the world, according to their capacity and ability to sin more then plainer wits, are for the most part the great sinners. Ierem. 4. 22 & 5. 4. 5.

Verse. 16. All Scripture inspired of God is profitable to teach, to argue, to correct, to instruct in iustice.

RHEM. 8. [16. All Scripture.] Besides the Apostles teaching and tradition; the reading of holy Scriptures is a great defence and helpe of the faithfull, and specially of a Bishop, not onely to auoyd and condemne all heresies, but to the guiding of a man in all iustice, good life and works. Which commendation is not here giuen to the bookes of the new Testament onely (whereof hee here speaketh not, as being yet for a great part not written) but to the Scripture of the old Testament also, yea and to euery booke of it. For there is not one of them, nor any part of them, but it is profitable to the end aforesaid if it be read an dvnderstood according to the same Spirit wherewith it was written. The great profite of reading the Scriptures.

The Heretikes vpon this commendation of holy Scriptures, pretend (very simply in good sooth) that therefore nothing is necessarie to iustice and saluation but Scriptures. As though euery thing that is profitable or necessary to any effect, excluded all other, and were onely enough to attaine the same. By which reason a man might as well proue that the old Testament were enough, and so exclude the new: or any one piece of all the old, and thereby exclude the rest. For he affirmeth euery Scripture to haue the foresaid vtilities, and they might see in the next line before, that hee requireth his constant perseuerance, in the doctrine which he had taught him ouer and aboue that he had learned out of the Scriptures of the old Testament, which he had read from his infancy, but could not thereby learne all the mysteries of Christian religion therein. Neither doth the Apostle affirme here that he had his knowledge of Scriptures, by reading onely, without helpe of maisters and teachers, as the Aduersaries hereupon (to commit the holy Scriptures to euery mans presumption) do gather: but affirmeth onely that Timothie knew the Scriptures and therefore had studied them by hearing good readers and teachers, as S. Paul himselfe did of Gamaliel and the like, and as all Christian students do, that be trained from their youth in Catholike vniuersities in the studie of Diuinitie. The heretikes foolish argument. All Scripture is profitable, ergo, onely Scripture is necessarie, & sufficient.

CARTVV. 8. [16. All Scripture] Out of this place wee teach the sufficiency of Scripture without any Popish element either of old tradition or new decree. The Iesuites say, that in good sooth it is very simply taught. Indeed very simply, because very truely: which shall here very euidently appeare by the single shifts and silly subtilties that the sorry Iesuities in their greatest endeuour and uttermost extent of wit and learning are able to make. And therefore let the Reader note how in conscience of their evill cause they haue first of all falsified our doctrine, and then the arguments whereupon our doctrine is grounded. Our doctrine is, that the Scripture is a perfect rule to teach us the way to everlasting life. They haue set downe that we teach nothing necessary to iustice and saluation but Scriptures, which is false: for we know that it is so far that the Scripture can saue or iustifie us without the grace of God, the righteousnesse of Christ, and faith to lay hold of them, which all are taught in the Scripture, that the knowledge of the Scriptures without them, shall serue to further condemnation.

Secondly, our first argument out of this place to proue the doctrine, is, that for so much as the Apostle teacheth that the Scriptures are able to make a man wise to saluation: therefore there needeth no further counsell nor direction thereunto, but out of the Scriptures. Then we reason further, that forasmuch as the Apostle exhorting Timothy to abide in that hee had received, bringeth two reasons, the one from the Authour of it, which is God; the other from the Subiect, which are the Scriptures: it followeth, that as God is onely the Authour of the doctrine which hee had received, so the Scripture is the onely Subiect out of which, as out of a rich store-house, the Lord by his appointed meanes did deliver it unto him: which thing being generally taught, vers. 14. 15. is more particularly laid forth in the 16. and 17. And therefore it is false, that the Apostle requireth perseverance which he had taught him ouer and aboue that he had learned in the Scripture, which is yet more euident in that Paul taught nothing but that which hee had out of the holy Scriptures: Whereupon Chrysostom affirmeth, that hee commended the Scriptures unto Timothie, that hee should haue Act. 24. 14. & 26. 22. Rom. 1. 2. Chrysost. upon the place.

them in the place of Paul, and not as the Iesuites, that he should haue the Scriptures ouer and aboue S. Paul.

2. Reg. 13. 4. & 17. 58. 2 Reg. 1. 9. & 5. 15. 1. Tim. 6. 11.

Thirdly, that forsomuch as the Scriptures are able to make the man of God, that is, the Minister of the word, perfect and compleat unto every worke of his Ministery, whether it be by teaching true doctrine, or confuting false, by exhorting and setting forward to that which is good, or dehorting & beating back from that which is evill: therefore all addition thereunto is a patchment, bringing disgrace and discredit unto the holy Scripture, as being defective and needy, wherein it hath so full and plentifull provision: for these arguments whereof all the rout of them are not able to list so much as one, they haue given us one of their owne forge, which they tosse and cast up at their pleasure, that forsomuch as all Scripture is profitable: Ergo, onely Scriptures are necessary and sufficient.

Last of all, where we say that the whole Scripture ioyntly taken, is able to make wise every one of the flock, and to furnish throughout the Shepheard of all Pastorall duties, they would make their Reader beleeue we affirmed that every particular place of the Scripture were able to do this: wherein they are, as it seemeth they are, willingly ignorant that the Greek word heere used of the Apostle doth as well signifie the whole altogether, as every part severally. And that it signifieth the whole altogether, and not every part severally in this place, it is evident: First, for that the Apostle in the verse before, not onely useth the plurall number, calling them the holy writings, thereby to note not one sentence or booke, but all the sentences and bookes of the Scripture, but also useth the article which hath force of an universall note. Secondly, considering that the Scripture heere spoken of maketh the Minister of the word perfect and compleate to his Ministerie that hee exerciseth; and that no one part of holy Scripture is able to make the Minister perfect, it must needs be understood of the whole bodie of holy Scripture, wherein this sufficiencie is to be found. And therefore it is alse that everie of book Scripture apart inableth the man of God to this perfect and fullinstruction, seeing that thereof should ensue that all the rest of the bookes of Scripture should be cyphars beside one alone; which, as it is absurd and unworthy the high wisedom of God: so if it were true, the same stroake which should cut off all bookes of Scripture as surplusage, but one alone should much more wipe away your traditions as swaddes and swillings of mens brewing, a mash fitter for hogs then for men.

And whereas they say that the Apostle understanding here the Scriptures onely of the Old Testament, by the same reason that we refuse Traditions out of this place, we may likewise refuse the new Testament also; it hath no strength of reason to hold by: For the new Testament hath nothing which the Old hath not, and is no element or inlargement in matter, but onely a more plaine declaration thereof: for which cause the Gospell is defined to bee that doctrine which is contained in the Scriptures of the Law and of the Prophets. Wherefore the Apostle exhorting Timothie constantly to abide in the doctrine of the Scripture, might well bound him in the circuite of the Scriptures, even of the old Testament if no other had been then written: seeing there was neither doctrine to be taught, errour to be refuted, exhortation to be raised, or dehortation to bee applyed, which might not be taken from the old Testament. And as in our daies wherein the meaning of the Scriptures is better knowne then in many former ages, we say not there is therefore any addition to the Scriptures: So in the time that the Gospell was first Preached of the Apostles, and yet unwritten, it could not be properly said that there was any addition unto the doctrine of the old Testament: But if the people of God under the Law were through faith in Christ made wise to salvation by the writings of the old Testament alone: how much more are the Scriptures both of the old and new together able to make us wise through faith unto salvation without other doctrine whatsoever. And if the people under the first times of preaching the Gospell had plentifull direction to life when the Gospell then Preached was not written, how much more haue wee sufficient addresse unto it, when the same that was then Preached onely is now both Preached and written also?

Iob. 5. 47

Last of all, where they beare the simple Reader in hand that we affirme Timothie to haue had his knowledge of the Scriptures onely without help of teachers, thereby to commit the reading of Scriptures to everyman, they most untruely speake of us: for notwithstanding that we teach that the reading of Scripture is peculiar to none, but common to all men, especially the household of faith, yet that we teach not, that reading is either the onely, or yet not upon such reason as you surmise, but upon expresse commandements, promises, examples and other like necessary arguments taken out of the Scriptures.

Thus may the Reader see how in a matter of most great importance, and whereupon the strength of all other their doctrines doth, or ought, principally to relye; these Iesuites dally and mock with him, as well in concealing the strength of our both cause and arguments, as also in setting forth the halt and lame for the defence of their own.

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 6 FOR I am even now ‡ to be sacrificed: and the time of my resolution is at hand.

RHYM. 1. [6. To bee sacrificed.] The martyrdome of saincts is so acceptable to God, that it is counted as it were a sacrifice in his sight, and therefore hath many effects, both in the party that suffereth in, and in others that are partakers of the merite, as of a sacrifice: which name it hath by a Metaphore

CART VV. 1. [6. To be sacrificed.] It is confessed that Martyrdome hath many effects in the Martyr and others to, but is denied to stand in the merit of martyrdome; whereof the reason that it is a sacrifice, is childish; seing themselues confesse that it is vnproperly so called, and by Metaphore or borrowed speach. And if it were properly and truly so called; yet thereof should it not follow that it were meritorious? seing sacrifices vnder the law being truly sacrifices, and in proper signification yet could not take away sin; much lesse, merit, but the onely and alone sacrifice of the Sonne of God. And here let it be obserued how these Camelions turne themselues into all colours (white except) when they will proue that men may pray to the Saints that are departed they improue and inhaunse the estimation of those sacrifices which are properly called and doe cry and call down the credite of those which are so called vnproperly and by borrowed speech. Now where they would tie merite and martyrdom together, they lift vp the sacrifice vnproperly called, aboue that which is called properly: so that wherein the former case for the baseness of it, it might bee presented to Saints to whom the other for their height might not be offered; here it findeth that fauour which truth giueth not to the other, nor the Iesuites themselues, vnlesse they be vainer then vanitie it selfe; although euen that will not help them, except they set the sacrifice of an oxe on the right hand, and before the offering vp of a mans life for testimonie of the truth.

Verse. 21. Make hast to come before Winter, Eubulus and Pudens and ‡ Linus and Claudia, and all the brethren salute thee.

RHEM. 2. [21. Linus.] Thus Linus was a coadiutor with and vnder S. Peter, and so counted second in the number of Popes.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3. For ! there shall be a time when they will not beare sound doctrine: but according to their own desires they will heape to themselues Maisters, having itching eares.

RHEM. 3. [3. There shall be a time.*] If euer this time come (as needs it must that the Apostle foresaw and foretold) now it is vndoubtedly: for the properties fall so iust in euery point vpon our new Maisters and their Disciples, that they may seeme to bee pourtrayed out, rather then prophecied of. Neuer were there such delicate doctors that could so pleasantly claw and so sweetly rub the itching eares of their hearers, as these, which haue a doctrin framed for euery mans phancy, lust, liking and desire: the people not so fast crying, Speake placentia, things that please, but the Masters as fast warranting them to do placentia.

The Apostle prophecyed of our new delicate Preachers

Esay 30. 10

CART VV 3. [3. There shall be a time.] Our new Maisters (say you) pleasantly claw the eares of their hearers; wee are by your own confession none of your masters, wee are also by our disauowance none of your disciples, Wherefore as the truth it selfe testifieth that you are the pleasant clawers which teach that a man may bee saued by the faith of others, by the works of others, by holy water, and knocking vpon the breast, by money, and that which is worse then money, yea then nothing, the Popes pardons, and Priests Trentals &c. so your tongue, which is yours (in your opinion) to runne at the random of your lust, was here so holden of the Lord, that to seeke delicate Doctors you could not go forth of your own cloister.

Verse. 8. Concerning the rest, there is laid up for me a ! crown of iustice, which our Lord will render to me in that day, a iust iudge: and not onely to mee, but to them also that loue his comming.

RHEM. 4. [8. A crown of iustice.] This place conuinceth for the Catholikes, that all good works done by Gods grace after the first iustification, be truely and properly meritorious, and fully worthy of euerlasting life: and that thereupon heauen is the due and iust stipend, crown, or recompence, which God by his iustice oweth to the persons so working by his grace, for hee rendreth or repayeth, heauen as a iust iudge, and not onely as a mercifull giuer, & the crown which he payeth is not onely of mercy or fauour or grace, but also of iustice. It is his mercifull fauour and grace, that we work well and merite heauen: it is his iustice, for those merits to giue vs a crown correspondent in heauen. S. Augustine vpon these words of the Apostle, expresseth both briefly thus. How should hee repay as a iust iudge, vnlesse he had first giuen as mercifull father. Lib. de grat. & lib. arbit. c. 6.

Workes meritorious.

How heauen is due both of iustice and mercy.

And when you heare or read any thing in the Scriptures, that may seeme to derogate from mans works in this case, it is alwayes meant of works considered in their own nature and valure, not implying the grace of Christ, by which grace it commeth, and not of the worke in it selfe that we haue a right to heauen and deserue it worthily which the Apostle in the 6. to the Hebrewes more then insinuateth saying these words, God is not vniust, to forget your works and loue which you haue shewed in his name &c. As though he would say, that wee were vniust if hee did forget to recompense their works. * The parable also of the men sent into the vineyard, proueth that heauen is our own right, bargained for and wrought for, and accordingly paid vnto vs as our hire at the day of iudgement, for that is merces and merces whereby the Scripture so often calleth it. It is the goale, the marke, the price, the hire, of all striuing, running, labouring, due both by promise and by couenant and right dette. See a notable place in S. Augustine in Psal. 83. in fine; and 100. in initio. & hom. 14. c. li. 50. hom. S. Cyprian also, and namely the later end of his booke de opere & eleemosyna: and thou shalt easily contemne the contrary falshood, which doth not so much derogate from mans workes, as from Gods grace which is the cause and ground of all worthines in mans merits. S. Augustines words be these. Marke that he to whom our Lord gaue grace, hath our Lord also his debter. He found him a giuer, in the time of mercie: he hath him his debter in the time of iudgement. See the place and the rest here quoted, where he examineth and explicateth the matter at large.

It is not of vs, but of Gods grace, that works be meritorious.

Math. 20. To such good workes heauen is due to say the contrary, is to derogate from Gods grace.

In Ps. 100.

CART VV. 4. [8. A crown of iustice.] The Iesuites to supply weight of reason labour after number, which although it be easie in a very euill cause, yet theirs is so bad that they cannot so much as perform that, without blattering of one and the same oftentimes: whereof it cometh that here they scoure vp their note of Mat. 20. The answer whereunto the reader may look vpon the place, likewise the argument of Gods iustice, in rewarding good workes, which with another sibber-sawce of vain words they haue set before him here again, and after will force him unto Heb. 6. For answer whereof let the reader look before upon 2. Thess. 1. 5. which answer of Gods iustice consisting not in the merit of men, as you say, but in the truth and righteousnesse of his free promise, as wee haue before answered, is well maintained by Augustines places, which themselues haue cited to appeare for them. And first, lib. de grat. & lib. arb. c. 6. For to meet with their cauil, he obiecteth thus: If (saith he) life everlasting be rendred to good workes, as the Scripture doth most evidently say; how is everlasting life grace, seeing grace is not rendred to good workes, but is given for naught: The Apostle saying, that to him that worketh, the reward is not imputed according to grace, but according to merit, did not the Apostle call life everlasting grace? yes verily, so he called it, that it can by no meane be denied, neither needeth he a sharpe understander, but an attentiue hearer. for when he had sayd the wages of sin is death, forthwith he ioyneth, but life everlasting is the grace of God. After shewing that it is so called, because both our good works are of grace, and eternall life is freely given unto those good workes, as grace for grace, he concludeth thus: Therefore our good life is nothing else but the grace of God, and without doubt, life everlasting, which is rendred to a good life, is the grace of God; for, even it is given for naught, because it is given for naught to him to whō it is given. But that (meaning good life) is to him that it is giuen onely a grace, but this (meaning everlasting life) which is given to it, because it is the reward thereof, is grace for grace, as it were a reward for righteousnes, that it may be true, which is true indeed that he shal giue unto every one according to his works. Where in saying that the reward of righteousnes is nothing but grace for grace, and that grace cannot be given for debt. And lastly, that it differeth from the first grace in this onely, that a grace is given for or to a grace, not as a thing deserued by the first grace: it is manifest that Augustine grindeth the Popish merit unto nothing. And to the end that the Reader may yet see how farre, Augustine standeth off them in this case, let him consider what he writeth otherwhere, What iustice soever a man be indewed with, he ought to consider lest there be found some thing in him that he seeth not: when therfore the righteous iudge shall sit in his throne, whose knowledge our sins cannot escape, no not those of which it is said, who vnderstandeth his sinnes? when (I say) the righteous iudge shall sit in his throne, who shall glory that his heart is chaste, or that he is cleane from sinne? vnlesse it bee they which will glory in their owne iustice, and not in the iudges mercie. The next place also in Psalm. 116. plainly maketh God debter onely in regard of his free promise. Wherefore should it be given to thee, what hast thou given him, who first gaue him, and it shall be repayed him, the Lord hath made himself debter not by taking but by promising. In the next also to the same effect he distinguisheth the times, saying: He said not he doth giue, but he will render: when he gaue he was mercifull, when he shall render he shall be iudge, because I will sing of mercy and iustice to thee O Lord, but in forgiving of sinnes, hee made himselfe debter of a crowne, there I obtained mercie. And if wee goe no further but to the very wordes the Iesuites haue sorted and picked out for their most aduantage; yet the same euidently conuince, that by a iust iudge must needes be understood, he that keepeth his free promise: For God cannot indeed bee so a iust iudge, unlesse hee hath been first a mercifull father. But he may be a iust iudge in their sence to giue to every one that which he hath deserued, even unto those that he was never a Mercifull father to, as to hypocrites and Infidels. He vseth indeed the word of merit, but not for deseruing, but for doing that which shall be freely rewarded: which is not onely plaine by himselfe who speaking of the infant slaughter, saith that age had great testimony which deserued to shed their blood for Christ. So also Ierom speaketh, that they which confesse their faults simply, deserue by humility the Sauiours clemency, yet will not your owne doctrine of contrition and satisfaction suffer him to deserue it properly. Of the same kinde is the place of Cyprian, when he saith that we deserue God, which cannot be said of desert in the sence that the Iesuites take desert, whereof more commeth to be spoken afterward.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO TITVS.

RHEMIST.

THAT Titus was a Gentil, and not a Iew, and that hee was in S. Paul's traine, at the least the 14. yeere after his conuersion, if not before, we vnderstand by the Epistle to the Galatians c. 2. And that he continued with him to the very end, appeareth in the second to Timothee c. 4. Where hee maketh mention that hee sent him from Rome into Dalmatia, when himselfe was shortly after to be put to death.

And therefore although S. Luke neuer name him in the Acts, as neither himselfe yet no doubt he comprehendeth him commonly, when he speaketh thus in the first person plurall; Forthwith we sought to go into Macedonia: Act. 16. For S. Paul also sent him to Corinth, between the writing of his 1. and 2. to the Corinthians (which time concurreth with with Act.19.(by occasion whereof he maketh much and honorable mention of him in the said second Epistle *c.2.& c.7.*and again he sent him with the same Epistle both times about great matters: so that no doubt he was then also a Bishop, and receiued accordingly of the Corinthians, with feare and trembling, 1.Cor.7.v.15, But the same is plainer in this Epistle to himselfe c.1 v.5. Where the Apostle saith, for this cause I left thee at Crete, &c. By which words it is manifest also, that this Epistle was not written during the storie of the Acts (seeing that no mention is there of S. Pauls being in the Ile of Crete) but after his dismission at Rome out of his first trouble, and before his second or last trouble there, as is euident by these words: When I shall send to the Artemas or Tychicus, make haste to come to me to Nicopolis, for there I haue determined to winter, Tit.3. 2.Corinth.

Therefore hee instructeth him (and in him all Bishops) much like as hee doth Timothee, what qualities hee must require in them that shall make Priests and Bishops, in what sort to preach, and to teach all sortes of men, to commend good workes vnto them: finally, himselfe to bee their example in all goodnes.

CARTVV. That Titus was not Bishop look before upon the answer to the argument of the first Epistle to Timothy. In the rest of the Argument of this Epistle to Titus, there is little worth the paper it is printed on, and nothing worth the answer.

THE EPISTLE OF PAVL TO TITVS.

CHAP. I.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 15. ALL things are ‡ cleane to the cleane: but to the polluted and to Infidels nothing is cleane: but polluted are both their minde and conscience.

RHEM.1.[15. Cleane to the.] Hee speaketh not of the Churches abstaining from meates sometimes, which is not for any vncleannes in the creatures, but for chastening their bodies: but he meaneth the Iewish superstition, who now being Christians would not cease to put difference of cleane and vncleane according to their old law. See S. Augustin Cont. Faust. lib. 13. cap. 4.

CARTVV.1.[15. Cleane to the] Look the answer before upon Math.15.9. & 1.Tim.4.5. And if in Augustines time this Popish Sect which was then in the egge, had been hatched, he would haue been in some doubt, whether if he had had but one arrow, hee should rather haue bestowed it upon the madde Manichees, or upon those franticke Papists, which (as hath been shewed upon 1. Tim.4.5.) came very neere them in this heresie of forbidding meates, and holding for vncleane that which God hath cleansed. Acts 10.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 5. For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest reforme the things that are wanting, and shouldest I ordain Priests by Cities, as I also appointed thee.

RHEM.2.[5. Ordeine Priests] Though Priests or Bishops may bee nominated and elected by the Princes, people, or patrons of places, according to the vse of the time, and diuersitie of Countries and fashions, yet they can not bee ordered and consecrated but by Bishop who was himselfe rightly ordered or consecrated before, as this Titus was by S. Paul. And here it seemeth that hee did not onely consecrate them whom the people had elected before, but himself also made choise of the persons, no mention being here made of any other election popular. Which though it were long vsed in the primitiue Church, yet for diuers causes and specially for continuall tumultes, partialities, and disorders which S. Augustine much complaineth of in his time, was iustly taken away, and other better meanes of their designement appointed. See Conc. Laodic. c.12.13. S. Aug. de adult. coniug. li.2.c. 20. Ep.110. and Possid. in vita Aug. c.8. Priests must be consecrated by Bishops only. The popular election of the Cleargie taken away.

And that the ordering of Priests or imposition of hands to that purpose only belongeth to Bishops, and to no inferiour Priests or other persons, it is plain by the Apostolike practise set down in the Scriptures, namely in the Acts, and in the Epistles to Timothee and Titus. And S. Hierom, who seemeth sometimes to say that in the Primitiue Church there was no great difference betwixt a Bishop and Priest, yet he euer exceptreth giuing holy Orders, which preeminence he attributeth to Bishops only ep.85. as he doth also Confirming the Baptized by giuing them the holy Ghost through imposition of hands and holy Chrisme, Dial. Cont. Lucif. c.4. Note also that Arius was of old condemned of heresie, for holding that there was no difference betwixt a Priest & a Bishop. Epiph. hær. 75. Aug. hær. 53. The preeminence of a Bishop aboue a Priest. To put no difference betweene them is Arius heresie.

Note laſtly the fraudulent tranſlation of the Heretickes alwayes, turning for Prieſtes (which here is euident to bee a calling of Order and office) Elders, ſaying, That thou Ordaine Elders, which in our vulgar tongue ſignifieth the age, and not the Office properly: and all this for hatred of Prieſts.

Hæret. tranſlation.

CARTVV.2. [That thou Ordaine Prieſts.] That the Miniſters were not ordained by the Apoſtles themſelues, much leſſe by Euangeliſts as were Timothie and Titus, look before vpon Acts 14.23. The reaſon to the contrary, that here is no mention of any other election then by Titus, is vnſufficient: For firſt hee ſpeaketh here of no Election, but of an Ordination, and therefore no marvell if he ſpeak not of the Churches election: And therefore the Ieſuites ſuppoſing that he ſpeaketh of an election by Titus, bring in confuſion of termes that which the Scripture diſtinguiſheth: Secondly, Paul writing not to the Church what her duty is, but vnto Titus, how he ſhould behaue himſelfe in the Church of God; it is no marvell if Paul taught nothing heere of the Churches election. Laſt of all, this having been plentifully taught ‡before by the conſtant government and direction of the Apoſtles, needed not here to be repeated.

‡ Act. 1. & 6. & 14. Conc. Laod. can. 13. Concil. Antioch. can. 16 Conc. Nic. in Epiſt. ad Eccleſ. Aegypt. apud Theod. vid. lib. Tripartit. hiſt lib. 9. c. 14. Conc. Carth. 4. 22. Conc. The Councell of Laodicea c. 12. 23. meaning is onely to giue caution that it be not committed ſo to the people, as that they ſhould not haue the Elders to guide and go before them in that action: For in ſaying that a Biſhop ought not to be appointed to the government of the Church, beſide the iudgement of the Metropolitane and other Biſhops hard by: giue to vnderſtand that as they had a ſtroak in the appointment of the Biſhop to his Miniſterie; ſo there were other that had to doe beſide them, otherwiſe it would not haue ſpoken ſo coldly of it: for it ſaith not that the Metropolitane and other Biſhops ſhould onely appoint a Biſhop, no nor ſo much as they ſhould appoint, but onely that the Biſhop ſhould not be appointed without them. The thirteenth Canon which prouideth it ſhould not be permitted vnto the people to make election of the Miniſter agreeth with the Councell of Antioch, which as it will not haue a Biſhop thruſt vpon the Church, although froward without her conſent; ſo will it not that thoſe whom the Church had choſen without the iudgement of the Biſhops round about ſhould ſtand in force. Hereof the Councels of Nice, Conſtantinople, Toledo, and of Carthage, and others, whereof ſome going before, and ſome comming after the Councell of Laodicea, all teſtifying the right of the Churches election, declare ſufficiently that the Councell of Loodicea had no ſuch meaning as the Ieſuites imagine.

‡ Conc. gener. 6. Eradius. Et hoc me velle dico quod vos velle ſcio. Meus ſermo & veſtra, acclamationes in terram non cadunt. * Ep. 110. Epiſt. 225. Poſſidon. in vita Auguſt. c. 4 Hier. ad Ruſticum. And that there be no controverſie herein, and it may further appeare that the Churches election was favoured, not onely in theſe ancient Councels, but many yeares after as long as there was any tollerable eſtate of the Church: Let them loook to the Councels of Paris and Orleans, which teſtifie that it was both according to old cuſtome and the decrees of the Canons, that the Biſhop ſhould not be choſen againſt the will or conſent of the people. Laſt of all, in the Councell of ‡ Trullium, where this Conncell of Laodicea was confirmed, it is decreed, that when the Biſhop ſhall be examined and found fully inſtructed, that hee ſhould be ordained with conſent of the Clearkes and Lay-men. Where it is evident, that if this Councell of Laodicea were to bee underſtood as the Ieſuites ſay, then had the Generall Councell confirmed contrary decrees.

Auguſtine alſo is evidently againſt them, for beſide two Biſhops, over and aboue Auguſtine himſelfe and ſixe Elders called to the ordination of Eradius that was to ſucceed Auguſtine, when he ſhould deceaſe, it appeareth that Auguſtine called the people to haue their conſent: And therefore Auguſtine declaring his liking of Eradius his ſucceſſor, ſaith to the people, I ſay that I will haue him, becauſe I know you will haue him. And againe, neither my ſpeech, nor your acclamations fall to the ground. Laſt of all, he * willeth the Publique Notaries, aſwell to note the peoples voyces, as his will in that matter. And in an other Epiſtle he delareth that Piuianus was choſen Elder of the Church againſt his will.

Poſſidonius in vit. Auguſt. c. 8. hath nothing for them, where he onely ſheweth that the Metropolitans authority was required to the making of a Biſhop: but in another place he is flat againſt them when he ſheweth that Valerius ſpake vnto the people to prouide them an Elder. That Ierome alſo favoured not the ſole election of the Biſhop, or excluded the Churches conſent it is euident, in that he giveth the appointment of the Miniſter as well vnto the Biſhop as vnto the people. Againe, he reproacheth the Biſhop of Ieruſalem, that hee deſpiſed the Laitie, Deacons, and Elders for that he could in one houre, as himſelfe boaſteth make a thouſand works: The like iudgement he hath in an other Epiſtle. And therefore the places which they cite muſt be underſtood of the principall guiding of the action, otherwiſe they make him not onely contrary to the truth in ſaying that the impoſition of hands belongeth to the Biſhop onely, but alſo contrarie to that which themſelues haue alledged vpon 1. Tim. 4. 14. out of the Councell of Carthage, that all the Elders with the Biſhop lay on their hands.

Aerius hereſie out of Epiphanius and Auguſtine, that a Biſhop and an Elder is one, is more impertinent then he that anſwereth of Garlicke being asked of Onions, which if it be an hereſie, it hath ſo great Patrones as will make the Ieſuites beſhrew themſelues for their raſhneſſe herein: For Ierome declareth that the difference came by cuſtome, and not by Scripture, and that it is not by any neceſſarie law, that the one ſhould be preferred before the other. And this he ſheweth not to haue been his iudgement alone, but the ancient Fathers. Auguſtine himſelfe is alſo of the ſame iudgement: and therefore that he reckoneth it amongſt the hereſies of Aerius, hee rather reporteth the opinion of Epiphanius (who being Biſhop peradventure was partiall to Biſhops) then ſetteth down his own iudgement. Laſt of all your own Abbot doth proue that a Biſhop and Elder are by Gods ordinance all one. Their cavill of tranſlating Elder for Prieſt, is before anſwered vpon Act. 14. 22.

RHEM. 3. [6. One wife.] To that which is said vpon the like wordes. 1. Tim. 3. adde this testimonie of S. Epiphanius li. 3. to 2. cont. hæreses in fine. Holy Priesthood, saith he, for the most part proceedeth of Virgins: and if not of virgins, yet of them that liue sole or single life: but and if the single and sole persons, suffice, not to the Ministerie, of such as conteine from their wiues, or after once marrying remaine widowes. For him that hath been maried twise, it is not lawfull to take to Priesthood &c. If you list to see the causes why bigamie is forbidden them that are to be Priests, and continencie required of the Clergie, see the same author li. 2. to. 1. hær. 59. S. Ambrose li. 1. Offic. c. 50. and vpon 1. Tim. 3. S. Augustine de bono Coniug. c. 18. S. Hierom epist. 50. c. 5. ad Pammachium, and against Iouinian. lib 1. c 19. S. Leo ep. 87. and other auncient authors, Bigami excluded from holy Orders, and the causes thereof.

And if the studious reader peruse all antiquitie, he shall find all notable Bishops and Priests of Gods Church to haue liued single or continent from their wiues, if any were maried before they came to the Clergie. So was S. Paul, and exhorteth all men to the like. 1. Cor. 7. 7. So were all the Apostles after they followed Christ, as S. Hierom witnesseth, affirming that our Lord loued Iohn specially for his virginitie. Apol. ad Pammac. c. 8. & li. 1. cont. Iouin. c. 14. 6. Ignatius ep. 6. ad Philadelph. saith of the said Iohn and of Timothee, Titus, Euodius, Clement, that they liued and died in chastity, reckoning vp of the old Testament diuers notable personages that did the same, as Elias, Iesus Naue (otherwise called Iosue) Melchisedec, Eliseus, Ieremie, Iohn Baptist. No man is ignorant that all the notable fathers of the Greek and Latine Church liued chaste: Athanasius, Basill, Nazianzen., Chrysostome, Cyprian, Hilarie (who entered into holy orders after his wiues death) Ambrose, Hierom, Augustine, Leo, Gregorie the great. Certaine other notable fathers had once wiues but no holy men euer vsed them, much lesse married, after they were in holy Orders. A maruelous thing, that so many heretofore should haue the gift of chastite, then, and now so few, if the Protestants say true, that skarse one among them in our age of all their sects, euen of their principall Superintendents, hath had it.

The notable men of both Testaments, that liued continently from wiues.

Onely the Protestants complaine that they haue not the gift of chastity.

CARTVV. 3. [6. Of one wife.] To that also answered vpon the like words 1. Tim. 3. adde this that the cause which Augustine doth assigne li. de bon. coniug. c. 18. is farre other from that of Epiphanius, Ambrose, Hierome and Leo, which is before confuted, and is such as doth cleane ouerthrow them; namely to signifie that Christ and his Church are one, not for any vnholinesse in the action, as he directly confesseth, which sheweth euidently that a minister may haue and vse one wife lawfully after ordination, because else the signification of marriage should be in no other, seeing that rule is giuen of no other, but of such as you bind from marriage. That the Apostles which were married kept their wiues after their calling to the charge of Apostleship, contrary to that which the Iesuites falsely affirme, looke before, vpon Matthew. 8. 14. & Act. 1. 14 & 1. Corinth. 9, 5. that wee bee not constrained to follow the Iesuites idle repetitions in euery place. That Paul 1. Cor. 1. 7. exhorteth all men to a single life, maketh more against ministers marriage, then against the marriage of all other men. And therfore the reason of the ancient writers before named drawen from this place that therefore ministers should not be married, because they may pray continually is here by your own pen vtterly dashed, as it is also foyled by Chrysostoms interpretation, which saith, that the prayer which Paul meaneth is vnderstood of that which is of greater indeuour he meaneth then ordinarie: for if he should say that those which company in marriage ought not, or can not pray, how should it haue place and time which he commandeth otherwhere of praying vncessantly: wherefore it is lawfull to keepe company with a wife and attend to prayer. And if the excellencie of marriage in comparison of single life should haue triall by the notableneſſe of the persons, which haue liued in both estates; Enoch, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, the tweue Patriarches, and as it is proued all the twelue Apostles, euen Iohn also Iob, Moses, Aaron, Samuel, Dauid, Esay, Ezechiel, Philip the Euangelist with others, wil make such a shew and muster, as we would not dare to set single life so farre vnderneath marriage as these persons shall be found to excell so many which haue certen record and vndoubted euidence of their single and solitarie life: We will not presse the iudgement of Ignatius and Clement, which affirme that Paul was married, because wee thinke that the truth is otherwise, whereas let the reader iudge what outcries you make when you get such an aduantage, onely set him note that it argueth the Iesuits extreme beggerie in this cause, which beside their often repetitions of one and the same argument, are driuen to seek the fodder for it vpon such heathes and barren places as these are, where both that which they pretend, it false, and if it were true, yet should it haue no more pith of argument then hee, that to proue the Tanners craft, better then the Coppersmithes, should alleadge that Simon the Tanner was an honester man then Alexander the Coppersmith; then which there is nothing more ridiculous. And albeit Ignatius say Iohn &c. liued single, yet he saith it not to abase the marriage of ministers, seing in the same Epistle, he saith that Peter and Paul Abraham, Isaac, Esay, &c. were married.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 5. Not by the workes of Iustice which he did, but according to his mercie hee hath ſaued us ‡ by the lauer of regeneration and renouation of the Holy Ghoſt, RHEM. 1. [5. By the lauer of regeneration.] As before in the Sacrament of holy Orders (1. Tim. 4. & 2. Tim. 1.) ſo here it is plaine that Baptiſme giueth grace, and that by it as by an inſtrumentall cauſe we be ſaued.

CARTVV. 1. [5.] By the lauer of regeneration the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth both the outward element of water and the grace of God which is figured thereby, which is the whole Sacrament of baptiſme, and therefore he calleth it the lauer of new birth of the Holy Ghoſt. In which regard we ſpeake not ſo coldly of it as you do, to call it an inſtrumentall cauſe whereby we be ſaued, but in regard of the holy Ghoſt, the very formall cauſe of our ſalvation, both in applying vnto us the righteouſneſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, and in the merit thereof ſanctifying us daily more & more, vntill ſuch time as by death firſt, and after by reſurrection from the dead, he ſhall haue aboliſhed ſin, & made us wholy holy both body and ſoule. And euen of the outward element in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, we confeſſe frankly, that it is an inſtrumentall cauſe of our ſalvation, of the which the Apoſtle might in that ſort truely ſay to the faithfull, that were already baptiſed, that by it they were ſaued, becauſe it was a worthy meane to aſſure them of the Holy Ghoſt, and Spirit of Adoption; but thereof to conclude, that none can be ſaued that are not baptized when they cannot conueniently come by it, or that euery one which is baptiſed hath forgiueneſſe of ſins, and receiueth the ſpirit of Adoption, hath no ground to ſtand vpon in this place. And therfore there is a double Sophiſm here: one, that vpon that the Apoſtle ſaith, that men are ſaued by water and the holy Ghoſt, the Ieſuites conclude that they are ſaued, for that they haue the outward ſacramentall Element of water powred vpon them, contrary to Peter, which denieth that they are ſaued in that the filth of the fleſh is waſhed away, but in that a good conſcience being demanded (as it was the manner of thoſe of age) anſwered, of faith in God. Another is, that vpon that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of and to the faithfull, ſaith, that they are ſaued by baptiſme, the Ieſuites would conclude, that all that are baptiſed, are ſaued, whereas he teacheth, that many were baptiſed, with whom God was not pleaſed.

Deſcriptions or markes how to know an Hereticke. Vit. Aug. c. 18.

The former markes agree to the Proteſtants. Their bookes, ſeruice, and preaching muſt bee auoided. Ep. 52. nn. 7

Let our Proteſtants behold themſelues in this glaſſe, and withall let them marke all other properties that old Heretickes euer had, and they ſhall finde all definitions and markes of an Hereticke to fall vpon themſelues. And therefore they muſt not maruell if we warne all Catholike men by the words of the Apoſtle in this place, to take heed of them, and to ſhunne their preachings, bookes, conuenticles and companies. Neither need the people bee curious to know what they ſay, much leſſe to confute them: but they muſt truſt Gods Church, which doth refute and condemne them. And it is enough for them to know that they be condemned, as S. Auguſtine noteth in the later end of his book de hereſibus. And S. Cyprian ſaith notably to Antonianus demanding curiouſly what hereſies Nouatianus did teach, No matter, quoth he, what hereſies he hath or teacheth, when he teacheth without, that is to ſay out of the Church.

CARTVV. 2. [10. A man that is an hereticke] We haue beholden the glaſſe which you haue made to repreſent an hereticke in; which firſt wee finde falſe and flattering (not of S. Pauls) in that it deſineth an heretieke, him which being deceiued, yeeldeth not to decree of Councell, or chiefe Paſtors of the Church: in ſtead that it ſhould haue been ſaid, yeeldeth not to Councell, or Paſtors and Doctors, not Paſtors onely, not chiefe alone, but competent, although not chiefe, ſo they conuince his errour ſufficiently out of holy Scripture, whereout all hereſie whatſoeuer may be full and perfectly confuted. Secondly, as beholding our ſelues in this glaſſe, wee finde the chiefe features of our faces, which aſſure us that we be the right begotten children of thoſe Paſtors and Councels which liued 600. yeares after Chriſt: ſo by the ſame Glaſſe, howſoeuer failing and flattering, we can eaſily ſee that you having gotten ſome of their freckles and werts (now increaſed euen to wennes) haue not the fundamentall and almoſt none at all of the principall draughts of Churchbeautie which was in them.

2. Tim. 3. 16. 2. Pet. 1. 19 20. 21. with 2. ch. v. 1.

Verſe 11. Knowing that hee that is ſuch an one, is ſubuerted, and ſinneth, beeing condemned condemned by his own iudgement.

RHEM. 5. [12. Subuerted.] Heretickes be often incorrigible, yet the Church of God ceaseth not by all meanes possible to reuoke them, therefore S. Augustine saith epist. 162. The Heretike himselfe though swelling with odious and detestable pride, and mad with the frowardnesse of the wicked contention, as wee admonish that he be auoided, lest he deceiue the weaklings and little ones, so we refuse not by all meanes possible to seeke his amendment and reformation.

The Church seeketh the amendment of the most obstinate heretickes.

CARTVV. 3. [11. Subverted.] Seeing Paul speaketh here of an heretike, which both in truth, and according to the Iesuites bungling about the discription of him, is one that obstinately resisteth the truth; it is evident that before the Church ought to hold him an heretick, it ought first to excommunicate him. After which excommunication, if being dealt with by those to whom it appertaineth, and in such sort as is meet, he continue obstinate, it seemeth that the Apostle will haue the Church shall deale no more with him, but attend what issue God will giue of the admonitions either to his conversion, or else to further iudgement of the Church by Anathematization. So that wee see not what meanes the Church shall further use for the recovery of such a one.

1. Tim. 1. 20. with 2. Tim. 4. 14. 15.

RHEM. 4. [11. By his own iudgement.] Other grieuous offenders bee separated by excommunication from the communion of Saints and the fellowship of Gods Church, by the sentence of their Superiours in the same Church: but Heretickes more miserable and infortunate then they, runne out of the Church of their own accord, and so giue sentence against their own soules to damnation.

Heretickes giue themselues from the Church.

CARTVV. 4. [11. By his owne iudgement] It is false that all heretickes giue sentence against their owne soules to damnation, but those onely that are by such as Titus was substantially for soundnes of arguments, and euidence of speech, convinced out of the holy Scriptures. In which regard Paul saith, that they are condemned in their owne iudgement. And therefore although it be not impossible for one heretick to conuince another, yet the Popish heretickes, which for the most part borrow their weapons and tooles wherewith they fight, in mens private shops, and not in the Lords publick Armories of the holy Scriptures, are unable so to do, and are like the unsauoury salt that is good for nothing, but to cast on the dung-hill, or to be troden under mens feet.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF PAVL TO PHILEMON.

HEARING of Philemons vertue, who was a Colossian, hee writeth a familiar letter from Rome, (being prisoner there) about his fugitiue seruant Onesimus, not doubting but that he might command, yet rather requesting that he will forgiue him, yea and receiue him as hee would Paul himselfe, who also hopeth to come vnto him.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 5 HEaring thy ‡ charitie and faith which thou hast in our Lord Iesus, and † toward all the saincts:

RHEM. 1. [5. Charitie and faith.] Faith and charitie commended alwayes together, both necessary to make a complete Christian man, and to iustification and saluation.

CARTVV. 1. [Charitie and faith.] Faith alone without charitie, as an instrumentall cause, not onely as a necessarie effect, iustifieth, as hath been shewed in the Epistle to the Rom. and Gal. and therefore must needs also consequently make one a perfect Christian, as that which onely maketh us members of Christ, and Christ dwelling in us.

Col. 2. 13. Eph. 3. 17.

ANNOTATIONS.

Faith and beliefe in Saints.

RHEM. 2. [Toward all the saincts.] The Apostle sticketh not to say, Charitie and faith in Christ and all his Saincts, which our captious Aduersaries count in Catholike mens speaches and writings, very absurd: feining that in all such wee make no difference betwixt the loue wee beare to Christ, and the loue wee owe to our neighbours betwixt the trust or beleefe wee haue in God, and that which wee haue in his holy Saints. Malice and contention doth so blinde all Heretickes.

CARTVV. 2. [Towards all Saints,] The Apostle speaketh truely saying in Charitie and faith in Christ and towards all Saints, but you that referre faith to the Saints, which the Apostle tyeth to Christ, are wicked and wretched wresters of the plaine and manifest both sense and words of the Apostle: For the sense, let the Reader look before upon Rom. 10. 14. For the very words also, let him consider that the Apostle hath so fenced them that these untamed beasts, although the doctrine were not otherwise cleere, can haue no aduantage for their blasphemous doctrine of pinning our most holy faith upon the sleeue of every Saint: For although he haue coupled charity and faith together, which in other Epistles he doth distinctly referre the one to Christ, the other to the faithfull, yee hee hath vsed prepositions, which note that faith must passe no further then to Christ, as charity goeth no further in this place but vnto the Saints; for where the preposition [in] is such as might haue serued both to note our faith towards Christ, and our charitie towards our Brethren; yet to the end that the Apostle would declare that he would not haue charity and faith carried to one and the same obiect, hee chose out seuerall bands of prepositions, wherewith to tie each of these vertues with the subiect whereunto they belong. But to go no further then to their own translation, can they say that we haue charity in our Lord Iesus? wherefore if with the latter clause further removed which is towards all Saints, they will haue both charity and faith conioyned; it followeth much more that with this clause in the Lord Iesus, which is neerer vnto charitie then the other, they ought also both to be coupled: If this bee absurd, much more is it that vpon this ground of coupling faith and charitie together they would haue them both carried and applyed vnto these words towards all Saints. Not to speake, that to this wresting of the place, they are driven not onely as they vngodlily hold, to beleeue in the Catholique Church, but also in euerie seuerall member of the Catholique Church: For seeing the Apostle commendeth Philemon for his loue towards every Saint that came vnto him; it followeth that if (as they said) hee commendeth faith towards the Saints, he commendeth it towards euerie man apart.

τὴν πίστιν ἣν ἔχεις πρὸς τὸν κύριον Ἰησοῦν καὶ εἰς πάντας ἁγίους.

RHEMIST.

THAT the Hebrewes were not all the Iewes, but onely a part of them, it is manifest Act. 6. where the primitiue Church of Hierusalem, although it consisted of Iewes onely, as we read Act. 2. yet is said to consist of two sorts, Greekes and Hebrewes: Which again is manifest Phil. 3. where S. Paul comparing himselfe with the Iudaicall false Apostles saith, that he also is an Hebrew of Hebrewes. Finally, they seeme to haue been those Iewes which were born in Iurie, which for the most part dwelled also there. Therefore to the Christian Iewes in Hierusalem and in the rest of Iurie S. Paul writeth in this Epistle, out of Italie, saying thereupon. The brethren of Italy salute you Heb. 13. By which words, and by these other in the same place, Know ye our brother Timothee to be dimissed, with whom (if he come the sooner) I will see you. it is euident, that he wrote this, not onely after he was brought prisoner to Rome, wherein S. Luke endeth the Acts of the Apostles: but also after he was set at libertie there againe.

Many causes are giuen of the Doctors, why writing to the Iewes, hee doth not put his name in the beginning, Paul an Apostle &c. as he doth lightly in his Epistles to the Churches and Bishops of the Gentils. The most likely cause is, for that he was the preacher and Apostle and Master of the Gentils. And againe in another place he saith, that himselfe was appointed the Apostle, as Peter of the Iewes. Gal. 2. 8. Only S. Peter therefore writing to the Iewes, doth vse this stile: Peter an Apostle of Iesus Christ &c. because he was more peculiarly their Apostle, as being the vicar of Christ, who was also himselfe selfe ‡more specially the minister of the Circumcision, that is (as himselfe speaketh) not sent but to the sheepe which were lost of the house of Israel Mat.15.

The argument of the Epistle S. Paul himselfe doth tell us in two words, calling it verbum solatij, the word of solace and comfort. Which also is plaine in the whole course of the Epistle, namely in the tenth chapter v.32.&c. Where hee exhorteth them to take great comfort and confidence in their manifold tribulations sustained of their own country men the Iewes, whereof the Apostle also maketh mention to the Thessalonians. 1.Thess.2.v.14. Those persecutions then of the obstinate incredulous Iewes their country men, was one great tentation vnto them. Another tentation was, the perswasions that they brought them out of the Scriptures, to cleaue vnto the Law, and not to beleeue IESVS the dead man.

And whereas the Iewes did magnifie their Law, by the Prophets, and by the Angels by whom it was giuen, and by Moses, and by their land of promise, into which Iosue brought them, and by their father Abraham, and by their Aaronicall or Leuiticall priesthood and sacrifices, by their tabernacle, and by their Testament: he sheweth, that our Lord IESVS, as being the naturall sonne of God, passeth imcomparably the Prophets, the Angels, and Moses, that the Rest or quietnesse which God promised, was not in their earthly land, but in heauen: that his figure Melchisedec far passed Abraham, and that his Priesthood, Sacrifice, Tabernacle, and Testament, far passed theirs. In all which hee shooteth often at three markes; to take away the scandall of Christs death, by giuing them sundry good reasons and testimonies of it: to erect their mindes from visible and earthly promises (to which onely the Iewes were wholy bent) to inuisible and heauenly: and to insinuate that the Ceremonies should now cease, the time of their correction by Christ being now come.

The Epistle may be diuided into these parts: the first, Of Christs excellencie aboue the Prophets, Angels, Moses and Iosue, c.1.2.3.4. The second, of his priesthood and excellencie thereof aboue the priesthood of the old Testament: c.5. vnto the midst of the 10. The last part is of exhortation c.10 v.9. to the end of the Epistle.

1. Pet. 2. Rom. 5. Heb. 13. ‡ Yet was Christ head of the Gentiles also. So likewise his Vicar S. Peter, notwithstanding his more peculiar Apostleship over the Iewes.

LEt the Christian Reader note the corruption and impudent boldnesse of our Aduersaries, that vpon a false priuate perswasion of their own, that S. Paul was not the author of this Epistle, *leaue out his name in the title of the same, contrarie to the authenticall copies both Greeke and Latine. In old time there was some doubt who should be the writer of it, but then when it was no lesse doubted whether it were Canonicall Scripture at all. Afterward the whole Church (by which onely wee know the true Scriptures from other writings) held it and deliuered it, as now she doth, to the faithfull for Canonicall, and for S. Pauls Epistle. Notwithstanding the Aduersaries would haue refused the Epistle, as well as they do the Author, but that they falsely imagine certaine places thereof to make against the Sacrifice of the Masse.

* In the English Bible of the yeare, 1579.
The Epistle to the Hebrewes is S. Pauls.

The answer to the Argument of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, and that immediatly following before the Epistle

CARTVV. The Iesuites are fitter to cleaue wood then to cut the Scriptures, which parting this Epistle into two parts, make the former the excellency of Christ, and the other the excellencie of his Priesthood; as if one should part the treatise of a man into himselfe in the whole, and to his body in the part. We see the poore men haue some little better meaning then they deliver, which we would haue taken accordingly, if they had delivered it simply; but when they labour through their whole booke to set their learning to sale, and here will make shew of some great workmanship in their diuision, it is not amisse to admonish them to whet their tooles better which they bragge doe never come from the grindstone of their sophisticall exercises.

Your charge against us, that we would haue refused this Epistle, but that we imagine certain places to make against the sacrifice of the Masse, is a shameleſse untruth, which howsoever you would haue your Reader beleeue, yet your selues (as we are perswaded) beleeue not: it is indeed the Masses mallet to beat it to powder, for which we loue it also never the worse; for that where other Scriptures here and there and by the way, strike it dead. This Epistle, by a whole treatise, continued some number of chapters, beateth it down as hand-smooth as it doth the sacrifices of the Iewes. Now seeing we yeeld it to be (as it is) the Scripture inspired of God, what needed these clamorous speeches of impudent boldnesse, and hereticall corruption against us, because we deny it to be Pauls, wherin if we be deceiued; yet had not your malicious heart taught your tongue thus to revile, the errour it selfe would haue been satisfied with milder language. And were it not the evidence of truth that driveth us to deny it written by Paul; it had been better for us, who (by your owne confession) esteeme this Epistle specially fauourable unto our cause, together with the credit of the authour, which is the Holy Ghost, to haue fathered the writing of it upon Paul his most principall Secretary. Wee will not heere charge you (as you doe us) with hereticall corruption, but wee returne your charge of impudent boldnesse, which if it appeare not to all indifferencie, wee refuse not to bee the men that you giue out: for first, you name not him, nor (as we thinke) can name him, which amongst us haue raised an evill report, or so much as a suspition of this Epistle. Secondly, your selues are unresistably guilty of the crime wherof you fasly suspect us. We know wel, that old Rome, which was about three hundred yeares after Christ, is of small kindred with you; howbeit because you claime kindred of it, we put you in remembrance that there were even in that Church certaine that utterly reiected this Epistle, and that under colour it was not Pauls. This opinion entering long sithence into Rome, is of late strengthened by one of the Cardinall pillars of your Church, who disableth this Epistle as Sophisticall, not proving that which it pretendeth. Thirdly, beside your out-cries in so small a matter, as great as if the Church were thus set on fire, let the Reader consider how feeble and slender proofes you haue brought to maintain your boysterous speeches, with silence and concealment of that whereupon our iudgement principally leaneth. The reasons moving us to esteem it none of Pauls, are first, that his name is not prefixed, as in all the Epistles undoubtedly known to be his. Against which your secret reply, that Paul concealed his name, because he was not the Apostle of the Iewes, is both false and ridiculous: for albeit his chiefe charge lay towards the Gentiles, yet his Apostleship reached unto all nations. And as he preached unto the Iewes first in the quality and calling of an Apostle, or euer he preached unto the Gentiles: so if he wrote unto the Iewes after he had written to the Gentiles, he could not write otherwise then as an Apostle. And how frivolous this is, it may easily be seen by his Epistles unto Timothy and Titus, who notwithstanding that they were Iewes, yet Paul offereth them the doctrine hee commended to them, under the title of being their Apostle. And albeit that Paul had not been their Apostle, yet that had been onely a barre unto him, to haue written himselfe an Apostle, but to write himselfe Paul, as he doth to some, or Paul the servant of God, as he doth to othersome; or Paul the prisoner, as unto a third, it could haue been no barre at all. Another reason is, that this writer confesseth that he receiued the doctrine of the Gospell, not of Christ himselfe, but of those which heard it of Christ, where Paul received his doctrine immediatly from Christ, and heard it himselfe of Christ, and not of them that heard it from him: which being the principall reason of our iudgement in this poynt, is not once touched. There are other reasons, which as in a matter not so greatly importing, we passe by. Their onely reason against us, that it is contrary to authenticall coppies Greeke and Latine, is false: for first there being no authenticall coppies in Latine, as hath been shewed in the answer to the preface, there can be none contrary. Secondly, where they affirme the authenticall Greeke coppies to be contrary, in saying the authenticall, and not all the authenticall, they giue the wise Reader to understand, that there are which haue not that title, which should haue caused them to speake somewhat lower then they do. Last of all, it is false that any one authenticall Greeke Copie calleth it S. Pauls Epistle: for when Paul himselfe (by your owne confession) held backe his name: it is evident that this title of S. Pauls Epistle, comming in not by the Writer himselfe, but by some of the Greek Fathers which laid hold so much the faster of this opinion of being S. Pauls, as it was gainesaid of divers Romanists, especially to be either S. Pauls, or else holy Scripture at all, unto which company of the Greeke Church as wee adioyne our selues in holding that it is the holy Scriptures: so we sever from them in their opinion that it is Pauls. And that not onely for that vpon the reasons alledged we are assured that it cannot be his, but also for that they disclose and discover the writer of this Epistle, which the Lord by keeping backe his name would haue covered and concealed.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3 VVHO being the brightnesse of his glory, and | the figure of his substance, and carrying all things by the word of his power, making purgation of sinnes, sitteth on the right hand of the Maiesty in the high places.

RHEM. 1. [3. The figure.] To be the figure of his substance, signifieth nothing els but that which S. Paul speaketh in other words to the Philippians c. 2. v. 6. that hee is the forme and most expresse resemblance of his fathers substance. So S. Ambrose and others expound it, and the Greeke word Character is very significant to that purpose. Note also by this place, that the Sonne, though hee bee a figure of his Fathers substance, is notwithstanding of the same substance. So Christs body in the Sacrament and his Mysticall death and sacrifice in the same, though called a figure, image, or representation of Christs visible body and sacrifice vpon the Crosse, yet may be and is the selfesame in substance.

μορφὴ χαρακτὴρ The B. Sacrament a figure, and yet the true body.

CARTVV. 1. [3 The figure.] These Cole-worts are answered before upon Luk. 22. 19. And although he be one substance with the Father as touching the God-head, yet hee is not one person with his Father, but really distinguished from him, and therefore admitting your own similitude, it must be confessed of you that there is not the same person in the Sacrament which was offered upon the Crosse, but another person: Wherfore it is a great impudencie, and tendeth to Arianisme to make comparison of the substantiall unitie between the Father and the Sonne, with the Sacramentall unitie of the figure, and the thing figured, having no warrant of any such comparison out of the Word.

Verse.

Verse. 6. And when againe he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, hee saith, And let all the Angels of God adore him.

RHEM. 2. [6. Let all the Angels adore.] The Heretikes marueil that we adore Christ in the B. Sacrament, when they might learne by this place, that whersoeuer his person is, there it ought to be adored both of men and Angels. And where they say it was not made present in the sacrament, nor instituted to be adored, we answer that no more was he incarnate purposely to bee adored: but yet straight vpon his descending from heauen, it was the dutie both of Angels and all other creatures to adore him. The adoratiō of Christ in the B. Sacrament.

CARTVV. 2. [6 Let all the Angels adore.] If Christ were in the Sacrament as you falsly suppose, it would be no mervaile to us that he should be there also adored. Proue therefore the former, and we will not put you to the proofe of the latter.

Verse 9. BVT him that was a little lessened under the Angels, wee see IESVS, because of the passion of death, crowned with glorie and honour: that through the grace of God he might taste death for all.

RHEM. 1. [9. Because of the passion.] This proueth against the Caluinists that Christ by his Passion merited his own glorification. Which they would not for shame denie of Christ, but that they are at a point to deny all meritorious workes, yea euen in Christ also, and therefore they translate also this sentence heretically, by transposing the words, in the Bible printed in the yeare. 1579.

MARGINATL NOTES.

Verse 4. For he said in a certaine place of the ‡ seventh day, thus. And God rested the seventh day from all his workes.

RHEM. 1. [4. Seuenth day.] If the Apostle had not euidently heere shewed that the Sabboths rest was a figure of the eternall repose in heauen, who durst to haue applied that Scripture of Gods rest the seuenth day, to that purpose? or how can our Aduersaries now reprehend the like application manifoldly used in all holy ancient writers to the like end?

CARTVV. 1. [4. Seventh day.] It is a marvellous dizinesse of spirit that these Iesuites are haunted with, which bring that for argument for them that standeth directly against them: for seeing none durst haue applied the Scripture of Gods rest the seventh day, to the eternall rest in heauen, if the Apostle had not shewed that the Sabbothes rest was a figure thereof. How dare any man whatsoever appply the holy Scripture to allegories, where he hath not the like warrant of the Apostles or Prophets, to lead him to such senses as are so farre removed from signification of the words from whence he could wrest his exposition.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 16. Let us go therefore with confidence to the throne of grace: that we may obtain mercy, and finde grace in seasonable aide.

RHEM. 2. [16, Let vs go with confidence.] The Aduersaries goe about to proue by these words, that we need no helpe of Saincts to obtaine any thing, Christ himselfe being so ready, and we being admonished to come to him with confidence as to a most mercifull Mediatour and Bishop. But by that argument they may aswell take away the helps and prayers for the liuing one for another. And we do not require the helpe either of the Saincts in heauen, or of our brethren in earth, for any mistrust of Gods mercie, but for our own vnworthines: being assured that the prayer of a iust man auaileth more with him, then the desire of a greeuous sinner: and of a number making intercession together, rather then of a man alone which the Hereticks cannot deny except they reproue the plain Scriptures. Neither do we come lesse to him, or with lesse confidence, when we come accompanied with the prayers of Angels, Saincts, Priests, or iust men ioyning with vs, as they fondly imagine and pretend: but with much more affiance in his grace, mercie, and merites then if we prayed our selues alone. Scripture abused against inuocation of Saincts.

CARTVV. 2. [16 Let us go with confidence.] We proue (indeed) by these words, that we need no help of Saints departed to obtaine any thing we stand in need of, which how strongly it is concluded may easily be seene by your weake reply, that we may as well take away the help of the prayers of the living, which being so fooliſh a ſong it is your great ſhame to ſing it ſo often: for neither can we, as hath been ſhewed, make known to the Saints departed our needs, as we can communicate them with the Saints that are aliue, neither yet if we could, might we lawfully do it, having no commandement for the one, as we haue for the other. And that which is propereſt to this place we deſire not the prayers of the living by them to adde any worthineſſe to ours, or to make them more acceptable: And therefore we deſire the prayers of the greateſt ſinners, ſo they be faithfull, and of thoſe that are the baſeſt, and are, as it were, dore-keepers in the Church: where you therefore pray to the Saints departed that through a greater merite in them then in your ſelues, you may haue your ſutes granted. And where you ſay that you require the prayer of none in heaven or earth in any miſtruſt of Gods mercie, but for your own unworthineſſe; therein the leproſie of your infidelitie appeareth in your fore-head, that notwithſtanding your unworthineſſe, you haue not truſt enough in God through the mediation of Ieſus Chriſt the righteous in whom we haue propitiation for all our ſinnes, unleſſe you patch up the mediation of our Saviour Chriſt with the interceſſion of ſome ſuch Saint as you eſpecially affect: For further anſwer look before, upon 2. CHAP. V.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1. FOR euery high Prieſt taken from among men, is appointed for men in thoſe things that pertain to God: that he may offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſinnes.

The deſcriptiō of a Prieſt, and his office.

RHEM. 1. [1. Euery high Prieſt.] By the deſcription of a Prieſt or high Prieſt (for to this purpoſe all is one matter) he proueth Chriſt to be one in moſt excellent ſort. Firſt then, a Prieſt muſt not be an Angell, or of an other nature but mans, Secondly, euery man is not a Prieſt, but ſuch an one as is ſpecially choſen out of the reſt, and before other of the communitie, ſeuered, aſſumpted and exalted into a higher ſtate and dignitie then the vulgar. Thirdly, the cauſe and purpoſe why hee is ſo ſequeſtred and picked out from the reſidue, is to take charge of Diuine things, to deale as a mediatour betwixt God and the people, to be the Deputie of men in ſuch things as they haue to craue or to receiue of God, and to preſent or giue to him againe. Fourthly, the moſt proper and principall part of a Prieſts office is, to offer oblations, gifts & ſacrifice, to God for the ſins of the people: without which kind of moſt ſoueraine duties, no perſon, people or Commonwealth can appertain to God and which can be done by none, of what other dignitie or calling ſoeuer he be in the world, that is not a Prieſt; diuers Princes (as we read in the Scripture) were puniſhed by God, and King Saul depoſed from his kingdom, ſpecially for attempting the ſame.

3. Reg. 13.
2. Par. 26.
1. Reg. 13.

The Princes temporall authoritie how far it extendeth.

And generally we may learne here, that in iis quæ ſunt ad Deum, in all matters touching God, his ſeruice, and religion, the Prieſt hath onely charge and authoritie: as the Prince temporall is the peoples gouernour, guider, and ſoueraine, in the things touching their worldly affaires: Which muſt for all that by him be directed and mannaged no otherwiſe, but as is agreeable to the due worſhip and ſeruice of God, againſt which if the terrene Powers commit any thing, the Prieſts ought to admoniſh them from God.

There is a peculiar order and calling of Prieſts of the new Teſtament.

We learne alſo hereby, that euery one is not a Prieſt, & that the people muſt alwayes haue certain perſons choſen out from among them, to deale in their ſutes and cauſes with God, to pray to miniſter Sacraments, and to ſacrifice for them. And whereas the Proteſtants will haue no Prieſt, Prieſthood, nor ſacrifice, but Chriſt & his death, pretending theſe words of the Apoſtle to be verified onely in the Prieſt-hood and Seruice of the old law, and Chriſts perſon alone, and after him of no moe: therein they ſhew themſelues to be ignorant of the Scriptures, and of the ſtate of the new Teſtament and induce a plaine Atheiſme and godleſneſſe into the world, for ſo long a man hath to doe with God, there muſt needs be ſome deputed, and choſen out from amongſt the reſt to deale according to this declaration of the Apoſtle in things pertaining to God, and theſe muſt be Prieſts, for elſe, if men need to deale no more, but immediately with Chriſt, what do they with their Miniſters? Why let they not euery man pray, and miniſter for himſelfe and to himſelfe? What doe they with Sacraments ſeing Chriſts death is as well ſufficient without them; as without Sacrifice? Why ſtandeth not his death as well with Sacrifice as with Sacraments: as well with Prieſthood, as with other Eccleſiaſticall function? There is no other cauſe in the world, but that (Sacrifice being the moſt principall Act of religion that man oweth to God, both by his Law, and by the Law of nature) the Diuell by theſe his miniſters, vnder pretence of deferring or attributing the more to Chriſts death, would aboliſh it.

Prieſts & ſacrifice neceſſarie in the new Teſtament, and nothing derogatory to Chriſts Prieſthood in ſacrifice.

The difference and excellencie of Chriſts Prieſthood.

This definition of a Prieſt and his function, with all the properties thereto belonging, holdeth not onely in the Law of Moſes, and order of Aarons Prieſthood, but it was true before in the Law of nature, in the Patriarches, in Melchiſedec, and now in Chriſt, and all his Apoſtles and Prieſts of the new Teſtament: ſauing that it is a peculiar excellency in Chriſt, that he onely offered for other mens ſins, and not at all for his own, as all other do.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Euerie high Prieſt.] It is true, that there are ſome things heere common to all Church Miniſters, as to be taken from men, to mens uſe, to be appointed, and not to appoint himſelfe, to be ſet over the things which pertaine unto God, and to haue no dealing with worldly affaires. But that it doth agree to Miniſters of the new Teſtament to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſins is moſt falſe, and contrarie to the meaning and whole diſcourſe of the Apoſtle, which is to ſhew that after Christ had offered himselfe for a propitiatory sacrifice for sinne, there remained no more externall sacrifices to be offered for it: which argument is now as effectuall against the externall sacrifices of the Papists, as then it was against the outward sacrifices of the Iewes. Wee take you at your word, that Priest and high Priest to this purpose is all one matter, and therefore conclude after this sort: * The Priesthood and Sacrifice of the new Testament is that onely which was prefigured by the Priests and Sacrifices of the Old: Therefore Christ is the onely reall and externall Priest and Sacrifice of the New Testament. The Proposition is manifest: the Assumption is proved by manifest induction of the discourse in this Epistle, where both all the Priests high & others, and all the Sacrifices for sinne, are compared with Christ, upon that the people must haue persons to deale in their sutes to God, they would conclude, that therefore they must haue Priests and Sacrifices, wherein they make themselues too ridiculous, as if there could bee no persons but Priests, nor no sutes but sacrifices. It is more to the purpose that they aske, Why Christs death standeth not as well with Sacrifice as with Sacrament, with Priesthood as well as with other Ecclesiasticall function, yet their reader is thus destitute by them, whom by order of learning they ought to haue taught, that with Christs death will stand a sacrifice as well as a Sacrament, and Priesthood as well as an other Ecclesiasticall function.

More plainly, thus: That which was prefigured by the Priests & Sacrifices of the old Testament, is the only reall and externall Priest & sacrifice of the New Test. But Christ was prefigured, &c. Ergo Christ is the only reall & externall Sacrifice of the New Test.

Wherefore, although you aske with no intent to learne, yet let it please the reader to understand, that a Sacrament of the death of Christ is necessary, first that by a liuely representation thereof in the breaking of bread and powring forth of wine, whereby Christ is, as it were, crucified before our eyes, we might be thankfull unto God for the death of his Sonne. Therefore thanksgiving for the expiation of our sinnes in the death of Christ, agreeing well with the death of Christ, may well stand therewith, which cannot stand, if yet, by sacrificing of Christ our sinnes were to be satisfied.

Secondly, although we haue already obtained forgiuenesse of our sinnes in the death of Christ, yet the use of a Sacrament is necessary to conforme our consciences, and the better to assure them that wee haue so obtained it; but the use of a Sacrifice propitiatory cannot stand with this assurance, as that which weakeneth, yea (now after Christs comming) utterly overthroweth all our confidence and assurance of the remision of our sinnes. And therefore it is no marvell although you alwayes floting and wavering in the surety of your saluation, and in the experience of your owne hearts, so teach others to float and waver, which for a seale and pledge of your sinnes already forgiven, haue gotten a sacrifice therby to make a new purchase of forgiuenesse of them.

Thus having heard how a Sacrament will stand with the death of Christ, where a Sacrifice for sinne will not; therewith you may understand why Priesthood will not suite with it, when another Ecclesiasticall function will not be abidden.

August. lib. 2. contr. Epist. Parm. c. 8. Parmenianus mediatorem posuit Episcopum inter populis & Deum.

Last of all, for so much as the Priest of the New Testament, to the end he may differ from the Priests of the old, must not offer for himselfe but for the people; it being evident that this onely agreeth unto our Saviour Christ, and unto none other, it followeth that he alone and no other is the Priest of the new Testament. Albeit it ought not to be passed over, that you haue left here behinde of your Donatisticall and Antichristian Spirit, as Augustine calleth it, of giving the tearme of Mediator between God and his people, to other ministers of the Gospell, beside Christ, which is the onely Mediator between God and his people.

Verse. 4 *Neither doth any man | take the honor to himselfe, but he that is called of God, * as Aaron.

All true Priests and preachers must be lawfully called thereto.

RHEM. 2. [4. Taketh to himselfe.] A speciall prouiso for all Priests, Preachers, and such as haue to deale for the people in things pertaining to God, that they take not that honour or office at their own hands, but by lawfull calling and consecration, euen as Aaron did. By which clause if you examine Luther, Calvin, Beza, and the like, or if all such as now a dayes intrude themselues into sacred functions, looke into their consciences, great and foule matter of damnation will appeare.

Iohan. 24 vid. Bale de vit. pont. in Ioh. 24. Funct. Chro. An. 1074. Platin. de vitis. Pontif. in Silu. 2.

CARTVV. 2. [4. Taketh to himselfe.] M. Calvin and Beza may well abide to be examined by this clause of not entring the ministery without lawfull calling as Aaron was lawfully called. M. Luther also, beside other calling fit for the time wherein he exercited his Ministery, might well abide it, if there were (as there is not) any lawfull calling in your voluntary and uncalled Priesthood; but if Pope Iohn the 24. that chose himselfe, or Pope Hildebrand, that entred the seat with murder of his predecessor, or Pope Silvester the second that entred by conjuring, or Pope Eugenius, that came in by simony, were examined by this clause, they shall easily appeare to haue more right to the succession of Simon Magus, then of Simon Peter.

Verse 5. So Christ also | did not glorify himselfe that hee might bee made a high Priest: but he that spake to him, My Sonne art thou, | this day haue begotten thee.

The dignity and Function of priesthood is not to be usurped.

RHEM. 3 [5. Did not glorifie himselfe.] The dignitie of Priesthood must needs be passing high and soueraigne, when it was a promotion and preferment of the sonne of God himselfe according to his manhood, and when he would not vsurpe, nor take vpon him the same, without his fathers expresse commission and calling thereunto. An externall example of humilitie, and argument of condemnation to all mortall men, that arrogate vniustly any function or power spirituall, that is not giuen them from aboue, and by lawfull calling, and commission of their superiours.

CARTVV. 3. [5. Did not glorifie himselfe.] S.

Verse 6. As also in another place he saith, Thou art | Priest for ever, according to to the order of Melchisedec.

RHE. 4 [6. A Priest for euer] In the 109. Psal. frō whence this testimony is taken, both Christs kingdom & Priesthood are set forth. But the Apostle vrgeth specially his Priesthood, as the more excellent

and

Christ both Priest and King, but his Priesthood more excellent of the two.

and preeminent state in him, our redemption being wrought and atchieved by sacrifice, which was an act of his Priesthood, & not of his kingly power, though hee was properly a King also, as Melchisedec was both Priest and king, being a resemblance of Christ in both, but much more in his Priesthood. And our Lord had this excellent dignitie (as appeareth by the discourse of S. Paul, and his allegations here out of the Psalmes) at the very first moment of his conception or incarnation, for you must beware of the wicked heresie of the Arians and Caluinists (except in these latter it bee rather an errour proceeding of ignorance) that sticke not to say, that Christ was a Priest, or did sacrifice, according to his Godhead, Which is to make Christ, God the fathers Priest, and not his sonne and to doe sacrifice and homage to him as his Lord, and not as his equall in dignitie and nature.

Psal. 2.109 Christ a Priest as he is man, not as hee is God.

Therefore S. Augustine saith in *Psal.*109. That as he was man, hee was Priest: as God, hee was not Priest. And *Theodorete in Psal.*109. As man, he did offer sacrifice: but as God, he did receiue sacrifice. And againe, Christ touching his humanitie was called a Priest, and hee offered no other host but his own body &c. Dial. 1. circa med. Some of our new masters not knowing so much, did let fall out of their pens the contrary, and being admonished of the errour, and that it was very Arianisme, yet they persist in it of meere ignorance in the grounds of Diuinitie.

CARTVV. 4. [6. A Priest for ever.] The Apostle urgeth the Priesthood especially, not as a more excellent state in him then the kingdom, but onely that it falleth in more aptly with the question and controversie that he had in hand. It is needlesse to enquire whether our redemption be more wrought by the Priesthood of Christ which purchased it, or by his kingdome, which applieth it unto us after he had purchased it by his Priesthood. Wee hold indeed that hee is Priest as well according unto his Godhead, as according unto his Manhood, and that there is no action of his Priesthood or kingdom, wherein the divine nature of our Saviour Christ hath not a stroke, as well as hath the nature humane; which, as it is evident by divers places, as that God hath redeemed us by his blood: That as the Father hath life in himselfe, so he hath given unto the Sonne to haue life in himselfe: And that he giueth some Apostles, some &c. so this place, out of the which the Iesuites would assault this doctrine, is singularly strengthned: for even the Priesthood of Melchesedeck was (after a sort) for ever, and without either beginning or without ending. In which respect, and for the shadowing out of which eternitie Moses writing his storie leaveth out both his birth and death, which in a person of such marke and note as was Melchesedeck he would never haue done, if the condition of his Priesthood rather then of his nature had not so required.

Act. 20. 28. Ioh. 5. 26. Eph. 4. 7. 8

Now if Melchesedecks Priesthood being but a figure, must needs haue some draught and feature of eternitie: how much more must Christs Priesthood, which is the truth, be truely eternall without either beginning or ending; and unlesse they will deny him to be Mediator as he is God and Man, which the Apostle evidently noteth, there is no cause why they should deny him to bee Priest as he is both. This is yet most plainely set forth, when the Author of the Epistle, amongst other oppositions between the Leviticall Priesthood and Christs, reckoneth this, that the Law appointed men to be Priests which had infirmitie, but the word of the oath that is after the Law, the sonne for ever perfected. Where the Iesuites in their accustomed sinceritie of dealing with the Scripture, contrarie both to the Greek copies, and the vulgar translation which they follow, haue cleane put out [men] thereby to conceale the evident difference of the two Priesthoods, the one administred by a mortall man, the other by the everliving God, which most impudent and shamelesse corruption doth nothing help them, unlesse as they haue gelt this verse, so they could also haue made away the 23. and 24. where it is expresly said that the Leviticall Priests being through death forbidden to continue, our Saviour Christ continueth for ever, and hath an everlasting Priesthood, which when hee can neither do nor haue as he is man, it followeth, that he both continueth Priest, and hath an everlasting Priesthood as he is God.

1. Tim. 2.

Your reason, that thus we make Christ God the Fathers Priest, and not his Sonne, and to bee equall by homage, and not equall in nature, is too childish; as if it were strange that one and the same man be equall unto another in nature, unto whom he is inferiour in Office: So Christ, equall to God his Father in the nature of his Divinitie in both his natures, wherein hee is our Priest is inferiour to his Father, although the inferioritie verefied truely of his whole Person ioyned together, is so said in regard of his Humanitie alone; even as it is truely verefied of the whole Persons in both natures that hee is God, when notwithstanding the same speech is iustifiable in respect of the Divine Nature alone. To be Iudge also and King it is necessarie that hee be God, it being plaine that God is the iudge of all the world; And that Christ without power to know the secrets of the heart cannot be Iudge of the world, which forsomuch as hee knoweth it not, but as God: it followeth that hee cannot be Iudge or King unlesse it be that, as well in regard that hee is God, as in regard that he is Man. Wherewithall you may see the folly of your collection, that so we will make Christ God the Fathers Priest, and not his Sonne; Seeing so wee may say that you will make him his Fathers King, and not his Sonne. And you forget your selues greatly that marshall us herein with the Arrians, which had been more Catholique manifoldly then you, if they had holden the Divinitie of our Saviour Christ in his Priesthood, as wee do: You often try Masteries in working of miracles; we will giue you (which you could never winne) that you haue some finger of God that way, if you proue that the Arrians, which destroy the truth of Christs Diuine Nature, simply and absolutely, can (as we do) allow it in his Priesthood: also if you can proue that Christ is inferiour to his Father as hee is Mediator God and Man, therefore he is inferiour as he is God.

Gen. 18. 25 Rom. 3. 6.

And let the Reader here obserue that by our sides the Iesuites thrust through Tertullian with the point of Arianisme, who not onely in matter is as the rest of the ancient Fathers of the same iudgement with us, but expresly calleth our Saviour Christ his Fathers Priest, which the Iesuites esteeme a monstrous voyce in Divinitie: For upon the words, Math. 8. Go and shew thy selfe to the Priest and offer the gift that Moses commanded, he writeth thus, declaring what Moses meant by the

Priest

Priest and gift, he saith, that they signified that a sinner in time to come should offer a pure gift at the Church, that is to say prayer and thanke-giving through Iesus Christ the Fathers Catholique or Generall Priest. Tertul. adverſ. Marc. lib. 4. Catholicum patris ſacerdotem.

As for Augustine 109. Psal. you wrest him from his meaning, which is no other then that Christ could not be a Priest to haue an offering but as he is Man, the offering or sacrifice being his Manhood, which may appeare by his words in the same place: The same Priest for ever is the Lord on the right hand, the very same I say Priest for ever is the Lord on the right hand, because thou hast said unto the same, my Lord sit thou, &c. and saying that hee is a Priest for his assumpted flesh, without the which (wee grant) hee could not haue been Priest; he addeth, for his sacrifice which having taken of us hee might offer for us. where he plainely declareth that as the Humanity of Christ is the sacrifice, so the same was offered by that nature that assumed the Humanitie which is the God-head: But this iudgement of Augustine against the Iesuites is manifest otherwhere saying, The Sonne of God is the Mediator of God and Man: the Sonne of man equall with the Father by the unitie of the Divinity, and partakers of us by the susception of the Humanitie: making intercession to his Father, as hee was man, and yet not concealing that hee was God one with the Father. August. lib. 4. cont. Iudæos cap. 8. The Divinitie without the Humanitie is not Mediatrix: The Humanitie without the Divinity is not Mediatrix: but between the Divinitie alone, and the Humanity alone, the Mediatrix is the Humane Divinitie, and the Divine Humanitie of Christ, Aug. de Ovibus cap. 12. The Man Christ Iesus is made Mediator of God and Men: who in the forme of God receiveth the sacrifice with the Father, with whom hee is one: yet in the forme of a servant had rather bee the sacrifice then receive it: by which he is both the Priest which offereth and the offering. August. lib. 10. de Civit. Dei cap. 20. Esay 53. 10

Theodoret also Psal. 109. is dealt with in the same sort: for to let passe that hee speaketh not of the sacrifice which Christ offered, but onely of the remembrance or tokens of that sacrifice which the Church offereth, he saith not, that Christ doth not as God exercise the Priesthood; but that we offer sacrifices unto him as God, and he maketh intercession for us as he is man: And Dialog. 1. he saith, that touching his Humanitie he was called a Priest: hee saith not onely according to his Humanitie: And that as he saith not so, so hee meaneth not so, appeareth by his words following wherein he saith, that the verie name of Intercessor doth signifie both the Divinitie and the Humanitie: And that the office of Intercession cannot be done but by the Divine Nature as well as the Humane doth evidently appeare by the iudgement of Nazianzene, who bringeth this for a reason to proue Christs Divinitie, that he is our Intercessour, and compareth it with the Divine action of the Holy Ghost which maketh intercession for us. De Theolog. Orat. 4 Rom. 8. Iustin. Martyr. Tom. 3. de Trin. l. 11 Epiph. hæres. 57. & 77. Ambros. 1. Tim. 2. Dionys. Carthus. in 1. Tim. 2. Cum utroq; extremo conveniens cum Deo, se naturam divi- &c.

If we should bring all the Fathers, which confirming our doctrine in this point do utterly overthrow the Iesuites, it would be tedious. Let the Reader look them partly before upon Matth. 9. and partly let him resort to the Authorities quoted in the Margent for further understanding their mindes herein. Here it shall be sufficient to set down the iudgement of their own* Doctor in these words: There is one Mediator agreeing with both the extremes, with God according to the Divine Nature, with man according to his Humane: And hee is Mediator of God and man in speaking properly, neither as God nor as man, but as God and Man, or God incarnate: for so both agree unto him both to satisfie or reconcile, and a fitnesse and efficacie to reconcile, whereof the former agreeth unto him in regard of the Nature that is assumed, the other in regard of the Deitie whereunto it is knit whereunt the workes and paines of Christ the man get after a sort an infinite worthinesse and efficacie: And this is the very doctrine which we teach in this point, this one word excepted, that where Denys saith, that Christs workes and paines are after a sort of infinite worthinesse, we teach that they are wholy and simply infinite in worthinesse, even as God whose merites they are, is simply and in every regard infinite. Infinitā quodāmodo dignitatem & efficaciā sortiuntur Dionys. Carthus. in 1. Epist. ad Tim. cap. 2. v. 5.

The Author of the ‡ Retentive pag. 89. your new Master, as you terme him, teacheth out of this Epistle, chap. 9. 14. that Christ is a Priest according also to his Godhead, forasmuch as hee offered himselfe by the eternall Spirit; which reason you knowing right well, haue not onely passed by heere, but even in the place it selfe where it offereth the combate unto you; and meeting you in the face, you dare not so much as abide the sight of it, but as if your nose bled turne aside from it. And therefore as you may truely call him Maister in respect he teacheth you things you are utterly ignorant in; so we see not why you should call him new Maister, unlesse it bee that you hold him for a new Maister that teacheth his doctrine out of the new Testament: You know well also that out of this place wee cut off the crownes of your shaueling Priests, which seeing they are neither of the order of Aaron, as your latter Divines hold, nor of the order of Melchesedeck, as the truth doth evidently shew (being mortall men that haue beginning and ending) it is evident, that if they be Priests they are either Ieroboams or Baals, or some other unkown Gods to the Church of Christ. Wherefore the Reader may see that verified in the truth which Salomon saith of the Church, that shee is terrible unto the enemie. ‡ D. Fulk's Retentive. Cant. 6. 7.

Verse. 7. Who in the daies of his flesh, with | a strong cry and teares, offering prayers and supplications to him that could saue him from death, was heard | for his reverence.

RHEM. 5. [7. With a strong crie.] Though our Sauiour make intercession for vs, according to his humane nature, continually in heauen also: yet hee doth not in any externall creatures make sacrifice, nor vse the prayers sacrificall, by which our redemption was atchieued, as hee did in the time of his mortall life, and in the act of his passion, and most principally, when with a loud voice, and with this prayer, In manus tuas commendo spiritum meum, he voluntarily deposed his soule, yeelding it in most proper sort for sacrifice, for in that last point of his death, consisteth specially his high priestly office, and the very worke and consummation of our redemption. The sacrifice on the crosse was the principall act of Christs Priestbood. Luc. 23. 46

Obserue moreouer that though commonly euery faithfull person pray both for himselfe and others, and offer his prayers to God, yet none offereth by office, and speciall deputation and appoint- Christs prayers more effectuall.

ment, in the perſon of the whole Church and people, ſauing the Prieſt. Whoſe prayers therefore be more effectuall in themſelues, for that they be the voice of all faithfull men together, made by him that is appointed and receiued of God for the peoples legate. And of this kind where all Chriſts prayers, in all his life and death, as all his other actions were: his faſting, watching, preaching, inſtituting, miniſtring, or receiuing Sacraments: euery one being done as Prieſtly actions.

Chriſts prieſtly actions.

Chriſt our onely high Prieſt.

ANSVV. Chriſt offered but that one ſacrifice propitiatory on the croſſe, and that but once neither doth hee make any other ſacrifice in any externall creatures. Neither hath hee any ſacrificing Prieſts to be mediatours between God and the people, as Parmenian the Hereticke placed the Biſhop between God and the people. Therefore the prayers of the miniſter of the Church, which hee conceiueth or pronounceth in the name of the congregation are not more effectuall in themſelues for any ſuch office of mediation or legation, but they are acceptable becauſe they are according to Gods ordinance, the prayers of the whole Church uttered by a miniſter thereunto appointed. For the prayer of one priuate man, praying with hearty affection and true faith, is more agreeable to the will of God, then the prayer of a thouſand Prieſts void of faith and good affection, yea and ſhall haue better effect then the faithfull prayer of the miniſter, conceiued for a careleſſe and faithleſſe people. Therefore Chriſts prayers and other actions of his prieſthood were of another and a more excellent kind, then the prayers of the beſt Prieſt that euer was. His office of preaching and miniſtring of Sacraments, he hath by his word cõmitted to the miniſters of his Church, to exerciſe in his name, therfore they be as effectuall being done by his ſeruants, as by himſelfe. But his high Prieſts office he retaineth to himſelf, & hath not cõmitted it to another. Therfore none may preſume to offer ſacrifice as he did, nor to pray, watch, faſt, or do any thing meritorious for other as he did.

Notorius hereticall tranſlations to maintaine Calvins horrible blaſphemy ἀπὸ ἰσλαβείας. Flac. Illyr. vpon this place.

RHEM. 6. [7. For his reuerence.] Theſe words haue our Engliſh Tranſlatours perniciouſly and moſt preſumptuouſly corrupted turning them thus, In that which he feared, contrary to the verſion and ſenſe of all antiquitie, and to Eraſmus alſo, and contrary to the ordinary vſe of the Greeke word, as Beza himſelfe defineth it Luc.2.v.25. and contrary to the proprietie of the Greeke phraſe, as not onely the Catholikes, but *the beſt learned Lutherans do ſhew and proue by many examples. They follow herein the ſingular preſumption of Calvin, who was the firſt (as his fellow Beza confeſſeth that euer found out this interpretation. Which neither S. Chryſoſtome, nor any other as perfect Grecians as they were could euer eſpie. Where onely to haue made choiſe of that impious and arrogant Sectaries ſenſe, before the ſaid fathers and all the Churches beſides, had been ſhamefull enough: but to ſet the ſame down for very Scripture of Gods bleſſed word- that is intollerable and paſſeth all impietie. And we ſee plainely that they haue no conſcience, indifferencie, nor other purpoſe, but to make the pore Readers believe, that their opinions be Gods own word, and to draw the Scriptures to ſound after the fantaſie of their hereſies. But if the good Reader knew, for what point of doctrine they haue thus framed their tranſlation, they would abhorre them to the depth of Hell, forſooth it is thus: they would haue this Scripture meane, that Chriſt was in horrible feare of damnation, and that he was not onely in paines corporall vpon the Croſſe (which they hold, not to haue been ſufficient for mans redemption) but that he was in the very ſorrowes and diſtreſſes of the damned, without any difference, but that it was not euerlaſting, as theirs is.

Calvins blaſphemie that Chriſt ſuffered hell paines vpon the Croſſe, and that his death otherwiſe were inſufficient.

For this horrible blaſphemie (which is their interpretation of Chriſts deſcending into Hell) Gods holy word muſt be corrupted, & the ſacrifice of Chriſts death (whereof they talk ſo preſumptuouſly. muſt not be enough, for our redemption) except hee bee damned for vs alſo to the paines of Hell Wo be to our poore countrie, that muſt haue ſuch books, and read ſuch tranſlations. See Calvin and Beza in their Commentaries and Annotations vpon this place, and you ſhall ſee that for defence of the ſaid blaſphemie they haue thus tranſlated this text, See the Annotations before. Act.2.27. and Mat.27.46.

CARTVV. 6. [7 For his reverence.] The Ieſuites in thundring without cauſe, declare themſelues to be evill Periclefes; therefore although their clap be great in words, yet becauſe it commeth not from heaven, we eſteeme this rumbling noiſe of theirs no otherwiſe then the crackling of a few thornes which the fire hath taken hold of. We tranſlate here that Chriſt was heard in that which hee feared, or touching that he feared: for the overthrow of which tranſlation let the Reader obſerue how many impudent lies the Ieſuites haue coyned of us, M. Calvin and Beza, &c. whom we follow in this tranſlation thereby to learne the undoubted truth of this tranſlation and doctrine depending thereof, which the devill could no otherwiſe undermine but by being a lying ſpirit in the mouth of theſe falſe Prophets.

Let it therefore in the firſt place be noted that they ſay it is contrarie to the propertie of the Greek word, where it is well known that the Greek word ſignifieth a caution and heedineſſe which alwaies draweth a feare after it of ſome thing whereof heed is taken, doth more properly ſignifie feare then reverence which is in the Angels and Saints in heaven towards God, free from feare of any evill that can befall them. Wherefore the proper ſignification of this word being never ſevered from feare, and yet ſometime diſ-ioyned from reverence; it followeth that the propertie of the Greek word ſerveth better for to note feare, then reverence. And to this untruth they haue here added another, in affirming that Illiricus proveth it contrarie to the proprietie of the word by divers examples, who proveth no ſuch thing, but that the words do beare that ſenſe which the old Tranſlator followeth, not ſaying that there is any thing in the nature of the words againſt the ſenſe which we follow.

Secondly, they ſay it is contrarie to the ordinarie uſe of the Greek word as Beza himſelfe defineth it, Luc.2.25. which is alſo moſt untrue, M. Beza having no ſuch ſaying or definition, but onely ſhewing how it is taken in that place of the Evangeliſts: Whereunto adde that M. Beza ſheweth examples of this ſignification in all manner of writing both holy and prophane, both out of Poets, Hiſtorians, and Philoſophers, as out of Ariſtotle which ioyneth this word as of the ſame value with another ſignifying Feare.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, they say it is contrary to the Version and sense of all Antiquity, and that Calvin was the first that found it out. Where first of all Beza sheweth that one of the Latine Copies of singular note which was found in Clearmont followeth the same translation which we do. Secondly, he sheweth that the Syrian Paraphrast haue so turned the word as wee haue done. Thirdly, that Gregor Nazianzene. Contil. de sol. 2. doth manifestly follow the same sense that we do, whilst he reckoneth this heere mentioned amongst the infirmities of our Saviour Christ, unlesse therefore that you will reckon the religious reuerence of our Sauiour Christ to bee one of his infirmities; let them tell vs what they will or can translate it when they depart and dissent from vs. And therefore when M. Beza esteemed M. Caluin the first that found out this interpretation, he must necessarily be vnderstood of the first of the writers of our age, which sense that the very text it selfe affoorded it, appeareth manifestly by these words to him that could saue him from death: wherein hee doth euidently allude vnto these words of our Sav. father all things are possible vnto thee, let passe this cup from mee. Therefore this writer sheweth that although Christs petition of praying so that the cup might passe from him was not so farre granted as that he should not drink it, yet that hee was heard in that hee feared, which was the horrour of Gods iust iudgement against him for our sinnes clapt upon him alone. In which feare it was necessarie for him to be, to the end that overcomming it, he might giue us assurance that we also seased with the feare thereof should not bee quashed under that burden. This cannot be strange unto any but those to whom the words of the Evangelist are strange which affirmeth that the terrours so seased him that hee was utterly astonished and brought to these streights, that what betweeu his desire to obey the will of his Father, and drinking the cup which his office required on the one side, and to escape present sense of the horrible wrath of God, which his innocent and sinneless infirmitie of mans nature doth well beare on the other side, hee knew not for the time whether to turne him, through the presse and throng of terrour rushing upon him, desired so for the present moment that death might passe from him: wee say that the innocent estate of his humane nature might well agree with this: Whereby may further appeare the Iesuites base opinion of our Saviour Christ, whom their doctrine supposeth to haue been driven into these streights onely in feare of that kinde of death which a sinnefull and criminous person went with more confidence and resolution unto. And to speak the truth, this poiut of Poperie is a peece of Iudaisme which is offended at the crosse and empying of Christ: For as the Iewes esteeme it absurd that the Messias should be so cruelly and despitefully handled: so the Papists are ashamed of that Christ that was thrown down under the estate of all his brethren; where the true Christian riseth so much the higher into the loue of Christ and thankes giving unto God for him, as hee knoweth the crosse of Christ to be for his sake most heavie and insupportable by any creature in heaven or earth; encreasing his ioy and spirituall reioycing in the crosse of Christ, according to the measure of the greatest sufferings of Christ, without any the least staine of sinne: Their further blasphemies heerein let the Reader look before upon Mat. 27. 46. & Act. 2.

Mat. 14. 36

Mat. 14. 33 ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι καὶ ἀδημονεῖν.

Ioh. 12. 27.

Last of all they charge us to affirme that Christ was in the verie sorrowes and distresses of the damned without any difference, but that it was not everlasting, which is a manifest untruth: For beside we hold that by his power hee brake through the helly torments, we teach that for the time hee was in them for our sakes, hee endured them with all patience, and without all infidelity; which neither damned soules, nor yet the faithfull upon earth (sometimes taking a sip of that cup) do so much as one minute of an houre endure without taint (at the least) of impatiencie and infidelitie both.

VVoe (therefore) to our poore and beloved Country men, which haue sold themselues to beleeue such wretches, as haue their principall defence in untruthes easilier confuted then invented.

Verse. 9. And being consummate, he was made to all that obey him, cause of eternall salvation.

RHEM. 7. [9. Consummate.] The full worke of his sacrifice, by which wee were redeemed was wholy consummate and accomplished, at the yeelding vp of his spirit to God the Father, when he said, Consummatum est, though for to make the same effectuall to the salvation of particular men, he himselfe did diuers things, and now doth in heauen, and our selues also must use many meanes for the application thereof to our particular necessities. See the next Annotation.

Christ yeelding vp the Ghost, accõplished our redemption. Ioh. 19. 30.

CARTVV. 7. [9 Consummate,] S.

RHEM. 8. [9. Was made to all.] The Protestants vpon pretence of the sufficiencie of Christ Passions, and his onely redemption, oppose themselues guilefully in the sight of the simple, against the inuocation of Saincts, and their intercession, and helpe of vs, against our penitentiall works or suffering for our own sins, either in this life or the next, against the merits of fasting, praying, almes, and other things commended to vs in holy writte, and against most things done in the Church, in sacrifice, Sacrament, and ceremony. But this place and many other shew, that Christs Passion, though it be of it selfe far more sufficient and forcible, then the Protestants in their baseneſſe of vnderstanding can consider, yet profiteth none but such, as both do his commandement, and vse such remedies and meanes to apply the benefite thereof to themselues, as he appointeth in his word, or by the Holy Ghost in his Church. And the Heretikes that say, faith onely is the thing required to apply Christs benefits vnto vs, are hereby also easily refuted, for we doe not obey him onely by beleeuing, but by doing whatsoeuer hee commandeth. Lastly, wee note in the same words, that Christ appointed not by his absolute and eternall election, men so to be partakers of the friute of his redemption, without any condition or respect of their own works, obedience, or freewill: bnt with this condition alwayes, if men will obey him, and doe that which hee appointeth, See S. Augustine (or Prosper.) to. 7. Respons. Prosperi. li. 2. articulo 1. ad obiectiones Vincentii, where hee saith of the cup of Christs Passion, It hath indeed in it selfe. to profit all, but if it be not drunken it healeth not.

Christs passion sufficient for all, but profitable to them onely which obey, not by faith onely, but by doing as hee and his Church cõmand.

CARTVV. 8. [9. Was made to all] In that the Apostle saith, that Christ is made the cause of sal- vation, either he muſt be the cauſe alone in that kinde of cauſes wherein he is the cauſe, namely the materiall cauſe, or elſe he hath ſome other ſupply of cauſe to make ſupply of his want and inſufficiencie. The latter is blaſphemous, therefore the former is true, and conſequently falſe that your penitentiall workes of ſuffering are any part of the price or ſatisfaction for your ſin, ſeeing our Saviour Chriſts paſſions being the full ſatisfactory cauſe of ſinne, your ſufferings cannot be alſo. And as this doctrine of your penitentiall workes of ſuffering for your ſinnes, imply a manifeſt contradiction unto the alone reall and externall ſacrifice of Chriſts death; ſo doth it alſo overthrow vtterly the fearefull and horrible ſacrifice of the Maſſe: for if we make full ſatisfaction of ſinne by our owne penitentiall workes, or by them as you ſay apply the ſacrifice of the death of Chriſt: Wherefore ſerueth the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which commeth after we haue made full ſatisfaction. We grant that the paſſions of Chriſt healeth not unleſſe it be as Auguſtine ſaith, drunken, that is, applied, but the drinking or applying of them our Saviour Chriſt teacheth to be by faith, when hee ſaith, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhall never be a thirſt.

Ioh. 6. 35.

As for your reaſon that the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt is made the cauſe of ſalvation unto thoſe which obey, it is frivolous, and hath been oftentimes confuted, in that although none can come to ſaluation unleſſe he obey, yet obedience is not the cauſe, nor ſo much as the inſtrument of our ſaluation, but an adjunct, or a thing annexed, and which goeth alwayes in the company of a ſaved man, & that neither before him, nor on either hand of him, but behinde him, as an effect and daughter of faith. And therfore the writer to the Hebrewes doth proue before, that our entrance into the kindom of heaven, and into the Lords reſt, is by faith, and no otherwiſe, by which the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt dwelling in our hearts, is made one with us. It is yet more frivolous, that hereof they would conclude, that Gods eternall election is upon condition of our obedience: for although we cannot come unto ſalvation unleſſe we haue good workes, which is all one with this, that we cannot be iuſtified unleſſe we be ſanctified, yet it followeth no more that the foreſight of our obedience was the cauſe of our election, then the foreſight of our faith. And they may as well ſay, that the foreſight of God that we ſhould beleeue in his Sonne, cauſed God to appoint his Sonne Chriſt to die for us, as to ſay, that God choſe us under the condition of good workes, whereby wee ſhould rather chooſe him, then hee us.

Heb. 3, 19. & 4, 3.

Epheſ. 3. 17.

Ioh. 15.

And as this opinion is blaſphemous againſt the free grace and good pleaſure of God in our election: ſo is it directly contrary to the Ieſuites owne doctrine in another place, where they ſay that neither nations nor particular perſons be elected eternally by their owne merits, becauſe God when he made choyce, reſpected all as evill, and put a difference in this, that although (as they ſay) the wicked were reiected for ſinne, and for foreſight thereof, yet that the elect are not ſo. Let it be alſo obſerued how the Ieſuites are ſtill traced by the footings of the ſmall eſtimation they haue of the death of Chriſt: for when they ſay, that Chriſts paſſion is of it ſelfe farre more ſufficient and forcible then the Proteſtants in the baſeneſſe of their underſtanding can conſider, they leaue this ſting of their Popiſh tailes behinde them, that the force and ſufficiencie of it is not ſuch, but that the Ieſuits in the height and ſupereminencie of their underſtanding are able to reach it, which yet no capacitie of man or Angell, or of all the men and Angels (if their underſtandings were aſſembled into one) is able to attaine unto, but onely God himſelfe.

Vpon Rom. 9. 11.

It ought alſo not to be forgotten, that where ſome Papiſts eſteeme the Scripture ſufficient for our direction in all matter of religion, other ſome of the worſt ſort eſteeme the word of God ſufficient, which they enlarge and reach out to vnwritten verities; the Ieſuites ignorant of their owne myſtery of iniquity, and ſtrangers as it were in the giddy turn-about of their owne Cloiſters, ſay, that remedies and meanes of our ſaluation are appointed by Gods Word, or by the holy Ghoſt, not onely making ſome other direction in the Church beſide the word, but alſo oppoſing the Word unto the holy Ghoſt, as a member of the ſame diſtribution, which notwithſtanding is not repugnant unto the word, but goeth together with it.

Eſay. 59. 21. 1. Theſ. 5. 19. 20.

Verſe. 11. Of whom we haue great ſpeech, and | inexplicable to utter, becauſe you are become weak to heare.

RHEM. 9. [11. Inexplicable.] Intending to treate more largely and particularly of Chriſts or Melchiſedecks Prieſthood, he forewarneth them that the myſterie thereof is far paſſing their capacitie, and that though their feebleneſſe in faith and weakneſſe of vnderſtanding, hee is forced to omit diuers deepe points concerning the Prieſthood of the new law. Among which (no doubt) the myſtery of the Sacrament and Sacrifice of the altar, called MASSE, was a principall and pertinent matter: which the Apoſtles and Fathers of the primitiue Church vſed not to treate of ſo largely and particularly in their writings, which might come to the hands of the vnfaithfull, who of all things tooke ſooneſt ſcandall of the B. Sacrament, as we ſee Io 6. He ſpake to the Hebrewes (ſaith S. Hieroms ep. 126. that is to the Iewes, and not to the faithfull men, to whom he might haue been bold to vtter the Sacrament. And indeed it was not reaſonable to talke much to them of that ſacrifice which was the reſemblance of Chriſts death, when they thought not right of Chriſts death, it ſelfe. Which the Apoſtles wiſdome and ſilence our Aduerſaries wickedly abuſe againſt the holy Maſſe.

The Apoſtle omitteth to ſpeake of the B. Sacrament as a myſterie then to deepe for the Iewes capacitie.

CARTVV. 9. [11. Inexplicable.] The Proteſtants out of this Epiſtle teach that the Maſſe is a fantaſie of mans brain, and that out of it the Popiſh Sacrifice is evidently confuted, in as much as the Apoſtle purpoſely treating of the externall Prieſthood and Sacrifices of the old and new Teſtament (whereof the one as a figure, and the other as a thing figured, are compared together) maketh no mention of any either Prieſt or ſacrifice, of the new Teſtament, but of Chriſt alone; for if ever there were cauſe to ſpeake of a ſucceſſion of Prieſthood and Sacrifices unto Chriſt, here it was where the Prieſthood of the new Teſtament is purpoſely handled, where alſo the beleeving Iewes who eſteemed as doe the Papiſts) that the profeſſion of the Goſpell ſhould bee too naked and bare, if it ſhould be inferiour unto that under the Law in this behalfe, might either haue been ſatisfied being recoverable, recoverable, or haue had their mouthes ſtopped if they had hardened themſelues againſt the truth. And indeed the Writer of this Epiſtle forgetteth not this wiſedom and cunning handling of the matter: for hauing ſhewed that the Sacrifices are ceaſed by the one Sacrifice of Chriſt, hee ſheweth what ſacrifices the Lord will now receiue at mens hands, namely ſpirituall of kinde and liberall dealing. Heb.13. 16.

Now the Apoſtle that forgetteth not theſe Sacrifices which are but vnproperly, and by borrowed ſpeech ſo called, would much more haue mentioned that which had been really and properly a ſacrifice, yea by ſo much more as the Sacrifice and Prieſthood of the new Teſtament is excellenter then that of the old; and by ſo much as the manner of handling of the myſteries of the kingdom, is more lightſome and cleere vnder the Goſpell then it was vnder the Law: by ſo much more would the Writers of the new Teſtament, eſpecially haue laboured in the expreſſe and manifeſt laying forth of this Prieſthood and Sacrifice of the New. The old Teſtament therefore cleering the matter of Prieſthood and Sacrifices ſo evidently by treatiſe of them not onely generally and in the whole, but eſpecially and in the parts, with every ſmall circumſtance. Is there any man ſo forſaken of common reaſon, as to eſteeme that Chriſt ordained that, whereof there is (in truth) ſo deepe a ſilence in the new Teſtament, and by the Papiſts allegations ſo darke ſpeeches, or cold footings, and moſt ſparing mention.

To all this the Ieſuites anſwer, that the Maſſe paſſed the capacity of theſe Hebrews, and that the Apoſtles and Fathers of the primitiue Church vſed not to treat largely & particularly thereof in their Writings, Which might come to the hands of the vnfaithfull, who of all things tooke ſooneſt ſcandall of the B. Sacrament, as is to be ſeen, Ioh.6. and all this in the ſtrength of one word, whoſe proper ſignification being, hard to be expounded, they to ſaue the Maſſes winde-pipe, not onely contrary to the moſt proper ſignification of the word, but contrary to the evident circumſtance of the text, haue turned inexplicable, or that which cannot be expounded: for by theſe words of beeing hard to be expounded, the writer of the Epiſtle ſtirreth up the attention and heed of the Hebrewes to the long ſpeech which he hath of the Prieſthood of Chriſt, hard for them to vnderſtand, not for the difficulty of the thing, but for their ſlowneſſe and dulneſſe to profit in the knowledge of Chriſt. And therefore notwithſtanding that they were to ſeeke euen in the Rudiments of Chriſtianitie, yet contrary to that which the Ieſuites ſay, hee profeſſeth that hee will not ſpeake of the beginnings of Chriſtian religion, but that he will goe to the very perfection of it: ſo that it is evident, that he rippeth up the whole matter and myſtery of Chriſts Prieſthood compared with the Prieſthood of Melchiſedec. But if this Writer held back from the Hebrewes the expoſition of the Maſſe, becauſe they were of groſſer vnderſtanding, how commeth it to paſſe that the Apoſtles doe not ſet it abroach amongſt the Corinthians, Romanes, and Theſſalonians, that had quicker and ſharper capacities. And if it be Merchandiſe fit neither for groſſe nor for fine heads, it is meeter for Angels then men, whom peradventure therefore you bring down from heaven (forſooth) for Subdeacons to helpe the Prieſt ſay Maſſe, becauſe men are not capable enough for the myſteries thereof, but your ſelues anſwer that the cauſe why they treat not largely and particularly of this, is for that the knowledge of this myſtery ſhould not by writing come into the hands of Infidels: wee could anſwer here, that you might haue ſaid more truely, that neither Apoſtles nor Fathers of the Primitiue Church treate hereof largely or lightly, particularly or generally, or haue ſo much as once ſaluted the Maſſe, or called it ſo much as by the name. But we ſay that your anſwer is fooliſh, and that in many reſpects. For firſt, you overthrow your falſe expoſition of this place, whereby you aſſigne the cauſe of ſilence in this ſecret of the Maſſe, the ſmall capacity of the Hebrewes, whereby the Holy Ghoſt (according to your ſence) giueth to vnderſtand that he would haue written of it if they had been of better capacitie. So do Chryſoſtom and Ambroſe expound it. Ouerſeen.

Secondly, it is abſurd that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould ſpare his penne in writing to the benefite and good of the faithfull becauſe the infidels abuſe that which is written: As if the father of the houſehold ſhould not giue the full allowance to thoſe that are temperate in their diet, becauſe ſome of his houſhold are Gluttons: And ſeeing that he ſpareth not to ſet down in [a] writing the doctrine of providence turning the wickedneſſe of men to his glorie and the good of his children, the doctrine of [b] Predeſtination, and of the [c] Trinitie, againſt which there are ſo many replies of infidelitie; it is evident that the holy Ghoſt was not vpon this ground drawn to ſilence in maſſing matters: where let it alſo be noted that the Maſſe being (in the Papiſts iudgement) the principalleſt meane in applying Chriſts death, of this anſwer of the Ieſuites, it will follow neceſſarily, that God hath not onely left vnwritten things neceſſarily to ſalvation, but hath omitted to write of thoſe things which of all other are moſt neceſſary, then the which what can be more vnworthily ſaid.

[c] Math.28. 19. 1.Cor13. 14.

Thirdly, let them ſhew vs how this myſterie of the Maſſe is better holden from the knowledge of Infidels by tradition from mouth to mouth, and from hand to hand, then when it is laid up in the records of Scripture, eſpcially if the records of holy Scriptures be kept priſoners in the dunngeon where none may come to viſite them but thoſe that haue ſilver keies to open the dore withall: ſo that if in the Apoſtles time the paſſage of theſe poynts, was readier by writing then by ſpeaking, becauſe the Apoſtles wrote to the end that men might read, yet cannot the Papiſts take advantage hereof, whoſe doctrine is, that the Scriptures ſhould be hidden in an vnknowne tongue, and caſt into a blinde corner, where none of the people could finde it, and where few of their Prieſtes ſought after it.

As for the example out of Iohn, if mention were there made of the B. Sacrament, as they falſly hold, yet that is flat againſt them: for if our Saviour Chriſt which knew the offence and falling away that would enſue of his Sermon vnto that people, did not therefore forbeare to ſpeake it frankely before them for the good of his owne: how much more might the Apoſtles which had not that certain and peremptory foreknowledge of Infidels, either reading or ſtumbling at it, haue committed it vnto writing, how ſee they not alſo, that they evidently condemne the Evangeliſt S. Iohn, who notwithſtanding the ſcandall and offence taken of that Sermon of our Saviour Chriſt, yet ſetteth it down in writing in more ample maner then commonly he doth any other doctrine whatsoever. Moreover, what tempest is it that driveth you to so long treaties of the fearefull and horrible sacrifice of the Masse: considering that you confesse the large writing of it to be a rocke of offence to many, which indeed would so be, were it not that in seeking to cover the shame of it, her nakednesse is more and more discovered, but there would be no end if we should follow the chase of this brainlesse shift so farre as sound and substantiall reasons would pull us on.

Hieron. Epist. ad Evagrii. Hæreticis enim i. Iudæis persuadebat non iam fidelibus quibus passim proderet sacramentum.

There remaineth Ierome epist. 126. which saith that hee wrote to the Iewes and not to faithfull men to whom he might haue been bould to vtter the Sacrament; where first it is manifest that Ierome was deceiued that esteemeth hee wrote not to faithfull men, no one Epistle being written to any but vnto the faithfull, & euery chap. almost of this Epistle, and diuers verses in one and the same chap. hauing euident testimonies of their faith in Christ from which he exhorteth them that they should not fall, and for which hee affirmeth they had suffered. Secondly it doth vtterly ouerthrow you; For in teaching, that if they had been faithfull he might haue been bold to vtter the sacrament; hee giueth to vnderstand that the Apostles and Euangelists which wrote to the faithfull vsed great boldnes to set forth that which you say the writer of this Epistle spake so sparingly of, for feare of Infidels; contrary to your saying which affirme that the Apostles generally forbeare to speake largely or particularlie of it &c. Thirdly when Ierome saith that he was not so bold to utter the Sacrament, he meaneth not, as you falsly surmise the Sacrament of the Eucharist, or of the Lords Supper, but taketh Sacrament in the generall signification of a * Mysterie, or a hid thing, as doth your ‡ old Translator sometime: Otherwise Ierome willeth that children should be taught to vnderstand the Church Sacraments (which are properly called Sacraments) not fearing at all least children which are evill Secretaries, should blab out the doctrine of the holy Sacraments vnto Infidels or prophane men.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 9 BVT we ‡ confidently trust of you, my best beloved, better things and neerer to saluation: although we speak thus.

RHEM. 1. [9. We confidently.] It is euident by these wordes, against the Nouatians and the Caluinists, that S. Paul meant not precisely, that they had done, or could doe any such sinne, whereby they should bee put out of all hope of saluation, and bee sure of damnation, during their life.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1. Wherefore intermitting the word of the beginning of Christ, let us proceed to perfection, not againe laying ‖ the foundation of penance from dead workes, and of faith towards God.

The Apostles forme of Catechisme, and the points thereof.

RHEM. 2. [1. The foundation of penance.]. Wee see hereby, what the first grounds of Christian institution or Catechism were in the Primitiue Church, and that there was euer a necessary instruction and beleefe of certaine points had by word of mouth and tradition, before men came to the Scriptures: which could not treate of things so particularly, as was requisite for the teaching of all necessary grounds. Among these points were the 12. Articles conteined in the Apostles Creed: the doctrine of penance before baptisme: the manner and necessitie of Baptisme: the Sacrament of Imposition of hands after Baptisme, called Confirmation: the articles of the Resurrection, Iudgment, and such like, Without which things first laid, if one should be sent to picke his faith out of the Scripture, there would be madde rule quickely. See S. Augustine in expos. inchoat. ep. ad Ro. versus finem.

CARTVV. 2. [2 The foundation of penance.] You say, you see heereby that there was a necessarie instruction and beleefe of certaine points had by word of mouth and tradition before men come to the Scriptures. Not to stand with you now, whether you haue any eyes to see with all the plaine truth; tell us by what light do you see it: for sure we are there is no light in this place that riseth upon your heads to shew it withall, the contrarie rather shineth apparantly: for having to do with the Hebrewes to whom were committed the Oracles of God, it is certaine that before they once heard of the Gospell they had reade the old Testament, where all these grounds of Christian Religion are to be found: and as they faile in this, so are they no more happie in their exposition of the principall grounds of Christian Religion: For by faith towards God, they vnderstand the twelue Articles of the faith, commonly called the Beleefe, as if the faith towards God could not be learned out of the Scriptures. And see how beside the untruth they are sottish which make heereby twelue Articles necessarie grounds of Christian Religion, where the Writer himselfe maketh but sixe: And where the Author maketh the resurrection from the dead and everlasting iudgement, severall and opposite members in one division to the faith which is towards God: these fellowes to make the Author of the Epistle such a hacker and mangler as they themselues be, make the Article of the resurrection and of latter iudgement to be contained under the Article of faith toward Gods. Secondly, the doctrin of Baptisines they insufficiently expound & seeme not to understand; by which word, beside the trope of noting both Sacraments by one, by Baptismes, being used in the plurall number, and noted out both the inward Baptisme of Christ, and the outward Baptisme of Iohn, that is to say of the Minister. Thirdly, by the imposition of hands the Apostle meaneth no Sacrament, much lesse Confirmation after Baptisme, but by a trope and borrowed speech the Ministerie of the Church upon the which hands were laid; which appeareth in that whosoever beleeveth not, that there ought not to be a Ministerie by order to teach and governe the Church overthroweth Christianitie; whereas if Confirmation of children were a Sacrament, as it is not, yet a man holding the rest and denying the use of it, might notwithstanding bee saved.

Last of all, where they say hee that should be sent to pick his faith out of the Scriptures would make mad rule, they say true, if having drunk of their cup (which condemne them as dark, and like a nose of wax) they come ma.. to the reading of them, but if there be any wit or sobriety, or any humility in them that read them, let all that haue but a crumme of discretion iudge whether it be easier to pick out the doctrine of the Trinitie out of the holy Scriptures, then out of the Pater noster, Ave Marie, and Creed, especially being in a strange tongue: Also whether it be easier to picke out the doctrine of the Sacraments, and of the Ministerie of the Church, or as they say of Confirmation after Baptism out of the Scriptures then out of the Beleefe (although in the mother tongue) where there is not a sillable of them. August. exposit. in cap. Epist. ad Rom. versus finem, speaketh of this place, but hath not a word which carrieth any sound for you in this place.

Verse. 4. For it is impossible for them that were once illuminated, haue tasted also the heauenly gift, and were made partakers of the holy Ghost.

RHEM. 3. [4. Impossible.] How hard the holy Scriptures bee, and how dangerous they bee read of the vnlearned, or of the proud be they neuer so well learned, this one place might teach vs. * Wherat the Nouatians of old did so stumble, that they thought, & heretically taught, that none falling into any mortall sinne after Baptisme, could be receiued to mercie or penance in the Church: and to a contentious man, that would follow his owe sense, or the bare words, without regard of the Churches sense and rule of faith (after which euery Scripture must be expounded) the Apostles speach doth here sound. Euen as to the simple, and to the Hereticke that submitteth not his sense to the Churches iudgement certaine places of this same Epistle, seeme at the first sight, to stand against the daily oblation or sacrifice of the masse: which yet in truth make no more for that purpose, then this text wee now stand on, serueth the Nouatians: as when wee come to the places it shall bee declared.

The Nouatians (as all heretikes) made Scripture the ground of their heresie.

Other places make no more for the Protestants the this doth for Novatus.

Calvins heresie upon this place, worse then the Nouatians.

Amb. loc. cit. & in ep. ad Heb. Chrys. hom. 9. in c. 6. ad Hebr.

The fathers exposition of this place.

And let the good Readers beware here also of the Protestants exposition, for they are herein worse then Nouatians, specialy such as precisely follow Calvin: holding impiously, that it is impossible for one that forsaketh entirely his faith, that is, becommeth an Apostate or an Hereticke, to bee receiued to penance or Gods mercie. To establish which false and damnable sense, these fellowes make nothing of S. Ambrose, S. Chrysostome, and the other fathers exposition, which is the holy Churches sense, that the Apostle meaneth of that penance which is done before and in Baptisme, which is no more to say, but that it is impossible to be baptized again, and thereby to be renouated & illuminated, to die, be buried, and rise again the second time in Christ, in so easie and perfect penance and clensing of sins, as that first sacrament of generation did yeeld: which applieth Christs death in such ample manner to the receiuers, that it taketh away all paines due for sinnes before committed: and therefore requireth no further penance afterward, for the sins committed, all being washed way by the force of that Sacrament duely taken, S. Augustine calleth the remission in Baptisme, Magnam indulgentiam, a great pardon, Enchir. c. 64.

The sacrament of penance is ready for all sinnes whatsoeuer.

The Apostle therefore warneth them, that if they fall from their faith, and from Christs grace and law which they once receiued in their Baptisme, they may not look to haue any more that first great and large remedy applied vnto them, nor no man else that sinneth after baptisme: though the other penance, which is called the Second table after shipwracke, which is more painefull medicine for sinne then Baptisme, requiring much fasting, praying, and other afflictions corporall, is open not onely to other sinners, but to all once baptized Heretiks, or oppugners of the truth malitiously and of purpose or what way soeuer during this life. See S. Cypian ep. 52. S. Ambrose vpon this place. S Augustine cont. ep. Parm. l. 2. c. 13. and ep. 50. S. Damascene. li. 4. c. 10.

Hiero. ep. 8. ad Demetri. c. 6.

CARTVV. 3. [4 Impossible.] There is no end of your false tongue, for it is an evident untruth which you speak of M. Calvin that he that forsaketh entirely the faith and becommeth an heretick possibly cannot be saved: We hold indeed that an Apostata, that is to say, one that after the truth of Christian Religion known and acknowledged (at the least in his heart) shall maliciously, not in weakenesse forsake it, cannot be restored by Repentance; which is that the Author of this Epistle teacheth evidently. And therefore refuseth to teach a fresh the foundation of Religion vnto the faithfull Hebrewes that had already received them as a thing in vaine to be travelled in towards them, if from some negligence in learning of these thing; they should by little and little fall flatly away from them, as is before said.

Dorsequalvvor, hard to be. &c. they expound, which cannot be. &c. ἀδύνατον, impossible to be, they interpret, which can hardly be

And let the reader obserue how vnreuerently these swine handle the holy Scriptures: for euen in the chapter going before, the Greeke word that signifieth hardnes and difficultie to do a thing, they to saue the credit of the Masse expound inexplicable, that is to say, which can not be expounded. And here where the Greeke word signifieth that which can not be done to maintaine this error of theirs, they expound hard to be done: so it is hard and soft, fast and lose what you will, and as Augustine said of one, whatsoeuer pleaseth you is holy. And we haue onely the circumstance of the place and the most pregnant and pressing word of Impossible for vs against them, but the similitude which the Apostle setteth foorth this doctrine with giueth sentence for vs: for the ground which after it hath had all the good indeauours that skilfull and diligent husband men can giue it, and sweet showers and often refreshing it, which the heauens powre down vpon it, bringeth foorth not onely no good fruite (as the tree not so husbanded which the Gardner intreated for) but thornes and brambles; is a refuse and reprobate ground whose end is to be burned. Euen therefore that must needs haue the end by burning; so such a man as this must necessarily haue hell fire for reward; in which regard it is

Heb. 10.27 ſaid otherwhere that there remaineth nothing to ſuch a one, but a horible expectation of iudgment, & an extreme heat of fire that ſhall deuoure him. And if happily they think they haue a hole to run into, becauſe it is alſo ſaid that it is neere vnto the curſe, as if the curſe were not alreadie curſed; it is euident that that ſpeech maketh not the deſtruction doubtfull, but onely noteth that the curſe and wrath of God is not by and by executed after the holy Ghoſt is committed, but is often reſpited to the end that this Apoſtacie with the fruites that follow it may bee better known to a deteſtation and heed taking by others. In which regard it is ſaid that the end is to be burned, howeuer it be differred for a

Heb. 8. 13. time. Thus it is alſo ſaid that the Ceremoniall law was neere to be done away in Ieremias time, not as putting doubt whether it ſhould bee done away; but declaring that the time was not far off when it ſhould be done away indeed. And their marginall reaſon out of verſe the ninth is ridiculous: for if the author of the Epiſtle truſted confidently of the ſaluation of theſe Hebrewes, what maketh that to proue that the ſinne here deſcribed may be forgiuen; as if he had charged them with this ſinne of falling away whom hee continually exhorteth) not to riſe up againe to the faith from whence they were fallen, but to ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the truth which they had entred into; whom alſo hee commandeth as hauing receiued grace not onely to beleeue in Chriſt, but alſo to ſuffer

Philip. 1. for his ſake. And how could the writer of this Epiſtle haue confidently truſted of their ſaluation if they
Heb. 10.32. had fallen into this ſinne, ſeing themſelues ſay that it is a moſt rare thing that men recouer out of
33. this ſinne, and that few are healed of this diſeaſe. Moreouer to defeate the euident meaning
Vpon Math. of theſe words of the Scripture they make an other as hard a ſhift as this is, that (forſooth)
12. 32. they may not looke to haue any more that firſt great and large remedie applied vnto them where looke which they receiued in Baptiſme, albeit by penance more painefull then that before Baptiſme, for further as by a ſecond table to eſcape the wrath they may be forgiuen; where firſt note that the grace of anſwer. Baptiſme which they in words extoll and pretend to be great and large, for which alſo they idely alleadge Auguſtine they haue whitled and brought into ſuch ſtreights, as it is no more like into the grace of Baptiſme which the Scripture ſetteth out vnto vs, then the remiſſion of ten thouſand talents is like the forgiueneſſe of a hundreth ſhillings: for where the Sacrament of Baptiſme doth ſeale vnto vs, not onely the forgiueneſſe of originall ſin which is in infants before they come to Baptiſme, but the forgiueneſſe of all the ſins which the child ſhall commit any time during life; they in ſuch infants ſuppoſe no ſinne forgiuen by the Sacrament of Baptiſme, but one ſinne onely which is Originall; ſo that in them the grace is not ſo great and large as they would make their ſilly Reader beleeue in thoſe that are baptized being of age whereof there is ſmall and rare vſe now a dayes; they inlarge it thus far as that it taketh away both Originall and Actuall ſinnes before Baptiſme onely; wherein although they would ſeeme to open the Lords hand very wide towards us, yet they are (indeed) notable Church robbers, which to maintaine their bellies, ſpoile us not of a piece, but of our whole ſalvation in Ieſus Chriſt, whilſt they ſend us to our own ſatiſfaction by prayers,

Mar. 16.16 faſting, whippings. &c. note therefore that our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that hee that beleeueth
Gal. 3. 27. and is baptized ſhall be ſaued: Paul, that Baptiſme hath ſaued vs, and Peter, that it doth ſaue vs: where
29. the ſalvation that through faith we haue in Baptiſme being applyed to the preſent, and time to come,
Tit. 3. 5. 7. that is to all times, it is evident that Baptiſme doth as well ſeale up unto us the remiſſion of the ſins
1 Pet. 3. 21 that we commit at the houre of death, as the inborne ſinne wherein we were firſt conceiued in our mothers wombs.

Wherefore Auguſtine teacheth, that by the laver of Regeneration and word of Sanctification, De Nupt. & all the evils of regenerate men altogether are cleanſed; not onely ſinnes paſt, which are all now for-concupiſc. li. given in Baptiſme, but alſo thoſe that are committed afterward, either by ignorance or by infirmity.
1. c. 33. And thus it is very true that he ſaith, that great is the pardon of baptiſme, which with you in truth is none at all, ſeeing one onely ſinne not forgiven in the bloud of Chriſt, whereof the water in baptiſme is the outward ſeale, is able to throw a man into the depth of hell, notwithſtanding all the paiments that be can make with prayer, faſting, watching, cutting, whipping, and other either commanded or forged penance poſſible.

Secondly, let it be obſerved, that it is ſaid, that he cannot be renewed againe by repentance, whereby it is evident, that the oppoſition which the Ieſuites make of the renewing by baptiſme and the renewing by repentance is vaine: for the firſt renewing by baptiſme was with repentance as well as this, & in this reſpect the author calleth repentance from dead works one of the fundamental doctrins of Chriſtianity: for this cauſe alſo the Scripture ſetteth forth the repentance of thoſe which repented bethey were baptiſed to be as grievous and as painfull as the repentance of any after baptiſme, which may evidently appeare by Paul, who for the ſpace of three dayes was in ſorrow and lamentation for Act. 9. 9. his ſinne, and neither ate nor dranke.

And whereas they ſay, that a man may not looke for ſo great and large grace by penance, as hee had by baptiſme, it is manifeſtly overthrowne by the Prophet, who declareth that whenſoever a man
Ezek. 18. repenteth him of his ſinne, ſhall be even in that moment of his repentance, touching the forgiueneſſe
27. 28. of his ſinnes, ſo dealt with, as if hee had not ſinned: wherefore as Ieromes ſecond table before anſwered, helpeth them not which referre this to a ſecond repentance which Ierome hath not a word of: ſo in truth there is no ſecond repentanee but one onely repentance, which being begun firſt by faith, is continued and increaſed from day to day, and is profeſſed openly more or leſſe, according to the exigent of the ſinnes that are committed. And they may as well make two faithes and two baptiſmes, as make two repentances: for ſeeing Baptiſme is a ſeale of our repentance, the ſeale of baptiſme being but one, the repentance which is ſealed cannot be many: And of the other ſide, the repentance

Epheſ. 4. that is ſealed, being a thing that is continuall, and drawne through the whole line of a Chriſtian life:
Auguſt. de it muſt alſo neceſſarily follow, that the fruit of baptiſme muſt be ſtrengthened accordingly. Not (ſaith Nupt & con- Auguſtine) that baptiſme ſhould be as oftentime miniſtred as ſinne is committed, but that by it that was once giuen, cupiſ. lib. 1. the faithfull do obtaine pardon of all their ſins whatſoeuer, both before and and after.
c. 33. Cyprian Epiſt. 52. hath nothing to proue that the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt can be forgiven.

Ambroſe,

Ambrose thinketh that by repentance this sinne may be done away: and indeed there is no sinne but by true repentance it may be forgiven, but the iust iudgement of God shutteth them from repentance, and leaveth no place thereto. The first place of Augustine epist. Parm. lib. 2. c. 13. hath nothing to this purpose. The other, Epist. 50. affirming that there may be sinnes against the Holy Ghost which shall bee forgiven, notwithstanding concludeth thus: Let t'em therefore understand that it is meant that not every sin, but some sin against the holy Ghost shall not be forgiuen Damascene lib. 14. c. 10. onely saith, that they which be baptized in the name of the Trinitie, and are instructed in it, if they be rebaptized, crucifie Christ againe; and therefore unlesse you will doe him this iniury, in esteeming that he thought rebaptization to be the sin against the holy Ghost, he can giue no voyce with you that that sinne may be forgiven. And if for the vpholding of yours, you will not spare his credit herein, yet must you proue the sinne of rebaptization pardonable, or else you cannot haue so much as this stubble to make up your wall with: but what the iudgement of Antiquity hath been in this case, let the Reader looke before upon Math. 2. 32. As for the Iesuites charge, that we are worse then the Novatians, it is most vaine. For their heresie was, that a man which had fallen into any crime after baptisme, could not be forgiuen. And our iudgement is, that any sinne whatsoever, though committed after baptisme, may bee forgiven, the malicious denyall of the knowne and acknowledged truth of Christian religion onely excepted.

Verse 10. For ! God is not iniust, that he should forget your worke and loue which you haue shewed in his name, which haue ministred to the Saints and doe minister.

RHEM. 4. [10 God is not vniust.] It is a world to see, what wringing and writhing the Protestants make, to shift themselues from the euidence of these words, which make it most cleere to all not blinde in pride and contention, that good works bee meritorious, and the very cause of saluation, so far that God should be vniust, if he rendred not heauen for the same. Gods iustice in rewarding meritorious workes. Reuera grandis iniustitia Dei (saith S. Hiereme) Si tantum peccata puniret, & bona opera non susciperet. That is, Indeed great were Gods iniustice, if hee would onely punish sinnes, and would not receiue good workes. Lib. 2. cont. Ionin. c. 2.

CARTVV. 4. [10. God is not vniust.] It hath appeared upon 2. Thes. 1.5. that wee neither wring nor wryth, but by the wrest of the holy Scripture wherewith wee bring into tune that which your unsatiable gut doth distune, which haue shewed that the iustice of God signifieth as well the truth of Gods free promise which he keepeth with his, as the recompence which he giueth unto every one according to his works. And therefore Ierom to proue that God should be iniust if hee should not receiue the good workes as well as punish the euill, is idlely set downe, seeing the not keeping his free promise of rewarding of good works were an untruth, and consequently an iniustice that cannot fall into God. And that the Author of this Epistle meaneth this kinde of iustice in this place it is evident by the discourse he maketh in the rest of the chapter, who travelleth to bring us into an assured and stedfast consolation of obtaining everlasting life, not in our worthinesse but in the truth of God, first in his promise, and after in his oath, that for Christs sake hee will receiue vs.

CHAP. VII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 2. TO whom also Abraham diuided tithes of all: first indeed by interpretation ‡ the King of Iustice: and then also King of Salem, which is to say, King of peace.

RHEM. 1. [2. The king of.] When the fathers and Catholike expositors pick out allegories and mysteries out of the names of men, the Protestants not endued with the spirit whereby the Scriptures were giuen, deride their holy labours in the search of the same: but the Apostles find high mysterie in the very names of persons and places, as you see.

CARTVV. 1. [2. The King of] The descant of allegories in names, or otherwise upon the plaine song of the Scripture, we utterly condemne, and therefore cannot but mislike it in the Fathers, which in the example of the Apostle haue no warrant, because they neither speake nor write inspired of God, as did the Apostles and holy men of God. Looke further answer before upon Gal. 4. 24. but that we deride the fathers for their allegories, goeth in the same liuery of untruth, that the rest of their charges against us do. 2. Tim. 3. 2. Pet. 1.

Verse 8. And here indeed, ‡ men that die receiue tithes: but there he hath witnesse, that he liueth.

RHEM. 2. [8. Men that die,] The tithes giuen to Melchisedech were not given as to a meere mortall man, as all of the tribe of Leui and Aarons order were but as to one representing the Sonne of God who now liueth and reigneth and holdeth his priesthood and the functions thereof for euer.

Vers. 25. Whereby he is able to saue also for ever going by himselfe to God: ‡ alwayes living to make intercession for us.

RHEM. 3. [25. Alwayes liuing.] Christ according to his humane nature prayeth for vs, and continually representeth his former passions and merites to God the Father.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. For this Melchisedec, the King of Salem, Priest of the God most high, who met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the Kings, and bleſſed him.

RHEM. 4 [1. Melchiſedec] The excellency of this perſon was ſo great, that ſome of the antiquity took him to be an Angell, & ſome the holy Ghoſt. Which opinion not onely the Hebrewes, that auouch him to be Sem the ſon of Noe, but alſo of the chiefe fathers of the Chriſtians do condemne: not doubting but he was a meere man and a Prieſt and a king, whoſoeuer he was, for elſe hee could not in office and order and ſacrifice haue been ſo perfect a type and reſemblance of our Sauiour, as in this Chapter and other is ſhewed.

Verſe 3. Without father, without mother, without genealogie, hauing neither beginning of dayes, nor end of life, but likened to the Sonne of God, continueth a Prieſt for ever.

The reſemblance of Melchiſedeck to Chriſt in many points

RHEM. 5. [3. Without father.] Not that he was without father and mother, ſaith S. Hierome ep. 126. for Chriſt himſelfe was not without father, according to his diuinitie, nor without mother, in his humanitie, but for that his petigree is not ſet out in Geneſis, as the genealogie of other Patriarches is, but is ſuddenly induced in the holy hiſtory, no mention made of his ſtock, tribe, begining or ending, and therefore in that caſe alſo reſembling in a ſort the ſonne of God, whoſe generation was extraordinarie, miraculous, and ineffable, according to both his natures, lacking a father in the one, and a mother in the other, his perſon hauing neither beginning nor ending, and his kingdom and Prieſthood ſpecially, in himſelfe and in the Church, being eternall, both in reſpect of the time paſt, and the time to come: as the ſaid Doctor in the ſame epiſtle writeth.

CARTVV. 5. [3 Without Father.] S.

Verſe 4. And | behold how great this man is, to whom alſo Abraham the Patriark gaue | tithes of the principall things.

By the ſundry excellency of Melchiſedecks Prieſthod, is proued the excellency of the Prieſthod and ſacrifice of the new Teſtament.

RHEM 6. [4. Behold.] To proue that Chriſts prieſthood far paſſeth the Prieſthood of Aaron, and the Prieſthood of the new Teſtament, the Prieſthood of the old law: and conſequently that the Sacrifice of our Sauiour and the ſacrifice of the Church doth much excell the ſacrifices of Moſes law: he diſputeth profoundly of the preheminences of Melchiſedec aboue the great Patriarch Abraham, who was father of the Leuites, CARTVV. 6. [4. Behold.] The Sacrifice of our Sauiour, and the Satrifice of the Church, is one and the ſame, as is the Baptiſme of Chriſt, and the Baptiſme of the Church. Our Sauiours ſacrifice for that he offered it, the Churches ſacrifice, becauſe it beleeueth it, and none other but it. And you which would cloſely by conſequence apply this to the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, noted by the ſacrifice of the Church, are blaſphemous, by comparing your Ointlings with Melchiſedec, who for the Soueraignty that the ſcripture noteth to haue been in him, ſetteth forth the onely perſon of our Sauiour Chriſt.

He receiued tithes of Abraham, and conſequently of Leui and Aaron.

RHEM. 7. [4. Tithes.] The firſt preheminence, that Abraham payed tithes, and that of the beſt and moſt chiefe things that he had, vnto Melchiſedec, as a duety and homage, not for himſelfe onely in perſon, but for Leui, who yet was not borne, and ſo for the whole Prieſthood of Leuies ſtock, acknowledging thereby, Melchiſedec not onely to be a Prieſt, but his Prieſt and Superiour, and ſo of all the Leuiticall order. And it is here to be obſerued, that whereas in the 14. of Geneſis, whence this holy narration is taken, both in the Hebrew, and in the 70. it ſtandeth indifferent or doubtfull, whether Melchiſedec payd tithes to Abraham, or tooke tithes of him, the Apoſtle here putteth all out of controuerſie, plainly declaring that Abraham payd tithes to the other, as the inferiour to his Prieſt and Superiour. And touching paiment of tithes, it is a naturall duetie, that men owe to God in all lawes, and to be giuen to his Prieſts in his behalfe, for their honour and liuelihood. Iacob promiſed or vowed to pay them, Gen. 28. Moyſes appointed them Leuit. 27. Num. 18. Deut. 12. 14. 26. Chriſt confirmeth that duety Mat. 23. and Abraham ſpecially here giueth them to Melchiſedec; plainely thereby approuing them, or their equiualent to be due to Chriſt and the Prieſthood of the new Teſtament, much more then either in the law of Moyſes, or in the law of Nature. Of which tithes due to the Clergie of Chriſts Church ſee S. Cyprian ep. 66. S. Hierom ep 1. c. 7. and ep. 2. c. 5. to Helidorus and Nepotianus S. Auguſtine ſer. 109. de tempore.

CARTVV. 7. [4. Tithes.] It is falſe that in the Hebrew and 70. it ſtandeth indifferent and doubtfull whether Melchiſedec tooke or paid tithes: for the circumſtances doe euidently proue, that tithes were paid to Melchiſedec. Firſt, by the perſons for whom Moſes wrote the booke, which being Iewes (amongſt whom the Prieſts, and none but they, tooke tithes at that time this was written) it is manifeſt that they could not but underſtand that Melchiſedec being high Prieſt, did take and not pay tithes.

Secondly, in that he ſaith, that the tither gaue of all, without adding of what, it is euident, that that muſt be referred to the ſubſtantiue going before, which is the ſpoile and ſubſtance that Abraham had reſcued from the handes of the Kings. And therefore the blinde Rabbins which are vnmeaſurable aduancers of the ſtock of Abraham, from whom they are deſcended, doe here notwithſtanding without any doubtfulneſſe, giue this honour to Melchiſedec, which being King of the Cananites, dwelling in Ieruſalem, was vndoubtedly a Cananite. This roguing ſentence wee would haue ſuffered to wander ſtill, but that it offereth to ſtrike at the plainneſſe and certainty of the holy Scripture.

Shelomo Iarchi Aben Eſra.

After followeth another falſhood, that payment of Tithes to Prieſts is a naturall dutie, which confuteth their former vntruth that the Hebrew is doubtfull, &c. for if it be a conſtant and perpetuall law (as it muſt needs be, if it be naturall) it followeth that thereby alone without further light of expoſition in this Epiſtle, it might be vndoubtedly known of thoſe that had skill in the Law, that Melchisedeck being the Priest received Tithe and gaue none. Secondly, it selfe is confuted in as much as this was a thing ceremoniall, whereby was signified that we in a tenth offered unto Christ, do declare that all that we haue is his. And therefore in the new Testament the Churches are never read either commanded to giue tithes, or yet according to the commandement in the old Testament to haue paid any to their Ministers; but onely that the Ministers bee liberally provided for, that they may do the work they are called to, both with ioy, and without care of their honest maintenance, which is a way more commodious both for the Church and for the Ministers: For albeit under the Law, this way of tything was fit in regard of the holy signification aboue mentioned, and in regard of the fertilitie of the land of Canaan, yet it is not now so fit in all places, some being so barren that the sixes will not maintaine the Minister, other some being so fruitfull that the twenties will suffice. Gal.6.6. 1.Cor.9,4. &c. 1.Tim.5.17

This was also the iudgement of the Church after the Apostles, as it appeareth evidently by the maintenance that Constantinus the Emperour gaue, who in divers places being noted to haue given lands and possessions to the maintainance of the Ministerie, some where also is read to haue given summes of money for the maintenance of the Ministers: but in no place that we remember to haue made provision for the Ministerie by tythes: which notwithstanding by positiue Law of Princes might be much better to the Churches good in the commodious provision of her Ministers, if as the Leviticall Law herein is followed in the matter of provision, it might be so observed in the manner of bringing it into the barnes, and other store-houses of the Ministers without their care or distraction from the Ministerie committed unto them. Euseb. Eccles. hist. lib. 10.c.6.vid. Malach. 3. 2.Chron.31

Augustines iudgement also herein is most cleare, who living of the possessions and lands of the Church, declared that he had rather haue lived of the collation and contribution of the people, then to sustaine the envie and the care in the government and disposing of the Churches lands: declaring that he sought for that kinde of maintenance in the Church which might be freest from care and from evill speach of men; which hee would not haue done, if he had esteemed it the naturall law of God, that the Minister should liue of tithes. Ambrose and Ierome also doe so define the maintenance of the Ministerie by sufficiencie, and not by Tithes, that they esteeme a man sufficiently provided for, by his own patrimonie, should rest therein without further charge of the Church. Possidonius in vita Aug. Ambros. 1. lib. Offic.c. 36. Hiero. Epist. ad Damas.

As for the reasons of the Iesuites they are more then childish; For the first out of Gen. 14. and this place, it maketh against them: for seeing it is evident that Abraham paid tythes no otherwise to Melchisedeck then for that he represented unto him the Son of God, and was his type; it is also manifest, that there being none that now can do so, there is none that can require Tythes as due but onely by Cesars Law. Secondly, they do not perceiue that in going about thus to fill their coffers, they make a hole in their purse bottome, seeing Abraham paid Tythes but once, and that onely of the chiefe spoile of the enemie, which they haue turned of his principall things: whether whereof soever they take, it is both against their practise, and against their doctrine, whereby they would proue a tythe of all that one possesseth.

The second example of *Iacob Genes.*28. that vowed a tenth unto God, doth utterly overthrow your tenthes: For a vow being of things which are in our choise whether we will giue or no, and not of things that by the Morall Law of God we are commanded to do; it must needs follow that Iacobs tythes being due by vow were not payable by any naturall duty, as you suppose: which appeareth yet further in that his vow was upon condition of his prosperous returne into his Countrey and fathers house, which condition hee could not haue tyed unto his promise of tythes if it had been absolutely due by naturall dutie. Numb.39. 2.&c. Deut.23. 21.22. Eccles.5.4. 5. Psal.66.13. 14.

The next testimonies out of *Levit.*27. *Numb.*28. *Deut.*12. 14.26. will not help you: For the same Law that appointeth tythes for the Church Ministers, commandeth them also for Stranger, Orphan and Widow: so that unlesse you will charge another tenth upon the Church to the behoue of these, or divide the Priests tythe with them, you can gather no tythe heere. The place of *Math.*23. maketh also nothing for you: for it being spoken of our Saviour Christ then when the Ceremoniall Law stood in force, it is no mervaile if he taught the necessitie of Tithes then most truely, which none can now do without great untruth.

Wee passe by your ignorance of esteeming that the Tithes under the Law were paid unto the Priests which were paid unto those that were simple Levites and not Priests and Aaronites, who onely had but the tenth of the Tythes called the Tithe of Tithes: so that by this reckoning your Priests succeeding (as you say) the Aronites and the Sacrificers, and not onely those Levites which did onely teach the Law, ought onely to haue a tenth of the Tythe, and not the whole tythe of the Church. Cyprian Epist.66. hath for you nothing at all, but teacheth onely that Ministers now as Levites under the Law ought to be provided for, so as they may be void of trouble as they were free which lived by tythes. Ierom Epist.1.c.7. sheweth that the Ministers liue of the Altar speaking (as the ancient Fathers often do) in the phrase of the Law, but meaning as Paul that they should liue of the Gospell. The like is Epist.2.c.5. to Helliodor and Nepotian, hee mittigateth the hardnesse of his former speach, teaching that the Minister being after a sort a Levite and Priest, and living of the tythes and altar, ought to be content if hee haue meate and drinke and cloathing: so that if lesse then a tythe will finde him things necessarie for his honest maintenance, Ierome will not stand upon title of tythes. In August.serm.119.de temp. there is no such thing, not to speak of the credite of the Sermon. Si quasi leuita & Sacerdos vivo de decimis, & altari seruiens altaris oblatione sustentor: habens victum & vestitum his contentus ero. Hieron. ad Nepotian. de vito Clericorum.

Verse.7. But without all contradiction, that which is lesse is blessed of the better.

RHEM.8.[7. Is blessed of the better.] The second preheminence is, that Melchisedec did blesse Abraham: which we see here S. Paul maketh a great and soueraine holy thing, grounding our Sauiours prerogatiue He blessed Abraham.

Blessing a great preeminence, specially in Priests.

prerogatiue aboue the whole order of Aaron therein: and we see that in this sort it is the proper act of priesthood: and that without all controversie, as the Apostle saith, he is greater in dignity, that hath authority to blesse, then the person that hath not, & therfore the Priests vocation to be in this behalf far aboue any earthly king, who hath not power to giue benediction in this sacred manner, neither to man, nor other creature. As here Melchisedec, so Christ blessed much more, and so haue the Bishops of his Church done, and do. Which no man can maruell that our forefathers haue so highly esteemed and sought for, if hee marke the wonderfull mysterie and grace thereof heere expressed. This Patriarch also which here taketh blessing of Melchisedec, himselfe (though in an inferiour sort) blessed his sonnes, as the other Patriarches did, and fathers doe their children by that example.

CAR TVV. 8. [7 Is blessed of the better.] We acknowledge the excellency of the blessing of Christ, and of the Ministers of the Gospell in his name, farre aboue the blessing of any mortall man even the King, but that it maketh nothing for the two fingred blessing of the Popish Bishops, which they are oftentimes more free of, then of a single halfe-penny, look before vpon Math. 10. 12. And although it is no controversie between us, yet let the Reader note the palpable ignorance of these Iesuites which match the Patriarches Isaac and Iacobs blessing vnto their children, with the blessing that Parents giue now vnto theirs, making the one ground of the other: for they blessed their children as Prophets of God appointed to declare the certaintie of that which should come to them, yea and to their posteritie after them, and that not onely in things of the life to come, but also of this present life. And if the Iesuites had any eyes they might see, that as the Patriarches compared with Melchisedeck were blessed as of the greater; so out of that comparison themselues also were the Lords Priests, who as they offered sacrifices for their children, so did they as Priests blesse their children. This can no parent do without both the spirit of prophesie, and a publick calling to the Church Ministerie, whose blessing toward the children standeth onely in prayer to God that he would blesse them, which although it ought more carefully to be done of the father in regard of the neere knot between him and the childe, yet may it be done of the vncle as well as of the father, and is then more effectually done by him, then by the father, when the vncles prayer is with more knowledge and zeale then is the fathers.

Gen. 27. & 28. & 49.

Verse. 11. If then consummation was by the Leviticall Priesthood (for vnder it the people received the Law) what necessitie was there yet another Priest to arise according to the order of Melchisedec, and not to be called according to the order of Aaron.

The full accomplishment of mans redemption was not by Aarons, but by Melchisedecks priesthood.

RHEM. 9. [11. If consummation.] The principall proposition of the whole epistle and all the Apostles discourse, is inferred and grounded vpon the former prerogatiues of Melchisedec aboue Abraham and Leui: that is, that the end, perfection, accomplishment, and consummation of all mans dueties and debts to God, by the generall redemption, satisfaction, full price and perfect ransome of all mankind, was not atchieued by any or all the Priests of Aarons order, nor by any sacrifice or act of that Priesthood, or of all the law of Moses, which was grounded vpon the Leuiticall Priesthood, but by Christ and his Priesthood, which is of the order and rite of Melchisedech.

CAR TVV. 9. [11 If consummation.] S.

The Apostle to confute the Iewes false persuasion of Arons Priesthood and sacrifices, speaketh altogether of the sacrifice of the Crosse.

RHEM. 10. [11. What necessitie,] The disputation of the preeminence of Christs Priesthood aboue the Leuiticall order, is against the erroneous perswasion of the Iewes, that thought their law, Priesthood, and sacrifices to bee euerlasting, and to be sufficient in themselues, without any other Priest then Aaron and his successours, and without all relation to Christes passion or any other redemption or remission, then that which their Leuiticall offices did procure: not knowing that they were all figures of Christs death, and to be ended & accomplished in the same. Which point well vnderstood and kept in mind, will cleere the whole controuersie betwixt the Catholikes & Protestants, concerning the sacrifice of the Church: for, the scope of the Apostles disputation being to auouch the dignitie, preeminence, necessitie, and eternall fruite and effect of Christs passion, hee had not to treate at all of the order, which is a sacrifice depending of his Passion, specially writing to the Hebrewes, that were to be instructed and reformed first touching the sacrifice of the Crosse, before they could fruitefully heare any thing of the other, though in couert and most euident sequele of disputation, the learned and faithfull may easily perceiue whereupon the said Sacrifice of the Church (which is the Masse) is grounded. And therefore S. Hierome saith, ep. 126. that all these commendations of Melchisedec are in the type of Christ, cuius prosectus Ecclesiæ sacramenta sunt.

CAR TVV. 10. [11. What necessitie.] If the accomplishment, consummation and perfection of our redemption and satisfaction be fully made in the passion of Christ, as you confesse in your former note, then it followeth, that your sacrifice of the Masse can haue no more place in the Church of Christ, then can the Iewes sacrifices: for if therefore the sacrifices of the Law must cease, because the sacrifice which Christ suffered in his own person, hath perfected our redemption: it followeth that your sacrifice of the Masse should never haue begun, as that which is an eakment vnto a thing that needeth not, and whereby there commeth as much good vnto the sacrifice of Christ, as when an old rotten patch is sowed vnto a garment spicke and span new. And the scope of the Apostle being to avouch not only the necessity, dignity, preheminence, and eternall fruit of Christs passion or sacrifice, but also the perfection, and full accomplishment of our redemption thereby: it is manifest that as none that went before it could bring any merit vnto the satisfaction for sinne: so none that commeth behinde it, can adde any thing that way. And if there had been any supply to haue been made, either this was the place to haue spoken of it, or none: for the Iesuites shift, that the Hebrewes being not instructed of the sacrifice of the Crosse, were vnfit to bee dealt with in the sacrifice of the Masse depending upon his passion, is full of grosse ignorance, being compared with their words in this note before, that they thought their Priesthood and Sacrifices to bee sufficient of themselues: for the Iewes which the Apostle wrote unto, called Hebrewes, did beleeue that Christ was the Saviour of his Church, by whose onely sacrifice they were saved, and held the old sacrifices onely as a worship commanded of God, whereby as they testified their faith in him that was to come: so now they were to testifie their faith in him already come: otherwise how could the Apostle haue reckoned them the Church of God and faithfull, if they had esteemed themselues saved by the worke of their sacrifices in themselues. And therefore notwithstanding this Epistle were written upon occasion of the error of the Hebrewes, yet the Scripture foreseeing the great Idol of the Masse, seemeth rather to haue indited this Epistle against it, which is more iniurious to the passion of Christ, as that which is supposed meritous by the upholders thereof: which the Iewish sacrifices were not of the Hebrewes to whom this Epistle was specially written; he needeth some other Art then Logicke which should forme an argument for the sacrifice of the Masse out of Ierom Epist. 126. cuius profectus Ecclesiæ sacramenta sunt, she is hard be-stead when she hath such sentences as this is to speake for her honesty. Gal. 3.

Verse 12. For the Priesthood being ! translated, it is necessary that a translation of the Law also be made.

No lawfull state of people without an externall priesthood

RHEM. 12. [12. Translated.] Note well this place, and you shall perceiue thereby, that euery lawfull forme and manner of law, state, or gouernement of Gods people dependeth on Priesthood, riseth, standeth, falleth, or altereth with the Priesthood in the law of Nature, the state of the people hanged on one kind of Priesthood: in the law of Moyses, of an other: In the state of Christianitie, of another: and therefore in the former sentence the Apostle said, that the Iewish people or Common wealth had their law vnder the Leuiticall Priesthood, and the Greeke more properly expresseth the matter, that they were legitimated, that is to say, made a lawfull people or communitie vnder God by the Priesthood, for there is no iust nor lawfull Common wealth in the world, that is not made legall and Gods peculiar, and distinguished from unlawfull Commonweales that holde of false Gods, or of none at all, by Priesthood.

External priesthood necessary for the state of the new Testament.

Whereupon it is cleere, that the new law, & all Christian peoples, holding of the same, is made lawfull by the Priesthood of the new Testament, and that the Protestants shamefully are deceiued, and deceiue others, that would haue Christian Common-weales to lack an externall Priesthood or Christs death to abolish the same: for, this is a demonstration, that if Christ haue abolished Priesthood, hee hath abolished the new law, which is the new Testament and state of grace, which all Christian Common-weales liue vnder. Neither were it true, that the Priesthood were translated with the Law, if all externall Priesthood ended by Christs death, where the new law began, for so the law should not depend on Priesthood, but dure when all Priesthood were ended, which is against S. Pauls doctrine.

Externall sacrifice also necessarie for the same.

Furthermore it is to bee noted, that this legitimation or putting Communities vnder law, and Priesthood, of what order so euer, it is no otherwise, but by ioyning one with another in homage of sacrifice externall, which is the proper act of Priesthood, for, as no lawfull state can bee without Priesthood, so no Priesthood can bee without sacrifice. And we meane alwayes of Priesthood and sacrifice taken in their own proper signification, as here S. Paul taketh them: for, the constitution, difference, alteration, or translation of states and lawes, rise not vpon any mutation of spirituall or metaphorically taken Priesthood, or sacrifice: but vpon those things in proper acception, at it is most plaine.

The translation of the old priesthood and sacrifices, must needs be into the said priesthood and sacrifice of the Church.

Lastly, it followeth of this, that though Christ truly sacrificed himselfe vpon the Crosse (there is also a Priest according to the order of Melchisedech) and there made a full redemption of the world confirmed, and consummated his compact, and Testament, and the law and Priesthood of this his new and eternall state by his bloud: yet that cannot be the forme of sacrifice into which the old Priesthood and sacrifices were translated, whereupon the Apostle inferreth the translation of the Law. For they all were figures of Christs death, and ended in effect at his death, yet they were not altered into that kind of sacrifice, which was to bee made but once, and was executed in such a sort, that peoples and nations Christened could not meete often to worship at it, nor haue their law and Priests constituted in the same, though for the honor and duety, remembrance and representation thereof, not onely we Christians, but also all peoples, faithfull both of Iewes and Gentiles, haue had their Priesthood and sacrifices, according to the difference of their states. Which kind of sacrifices were translated one into another: and so no doubt is the Priesthood Leuiticall properly turned into the Priesthood and sacrifice of the Church, according to Melchisedecks rite, and Christs institution in the formes of bread and wine. See the next note.

CART. 11 [12. Translated.] In the first and second Section of this note thus far we yeeld, that there is no good State of people without a Priesthood and Sacrifice; and would merveil at your brutishnes, which esteeme not the state of the people under the New Testament happy enough by the alone Priesthood and Sacrifice of our Saviour Christ, unlesse it haue some other to follow it, as it followed other, were it not that we see the wrath of God hot against you, to the seeling and sealing up of your eyes, that you should not see the most bright shining beames of the truth: for it is a small thing in the eyes of the Iesuites, that in stead of Aaron and his posterity (which were but mortall and miserable men) we haue Christ the immortall and blessed God to bee our Priest: or seemeth it to them to be a base exchange that for the thousands and ten thousands sacrifices of sheepe oxen, &c. we haue the immaculate lambe of God Christ Iesus? Is not this Priesthood reall and royall enough unlesse it be accompanied with the scab and rag of Popish Priesthood: or is not this sacrifice a sufficient table fully to satisfie the devouring wrath of God, unlesse it be enlarged by a hungry wafer cake, which is meeter to appease a child of two years old then God which is the ancient of daies. And as the whole course of this Epistle sheweth, that there is no other Priest or sacrifice in or under the new Testament: so doth this place mightily confirm it, out of the which the Iesuits would undermine it. Mal. 1. 7. 12.

1 For if there be a mutuall reſpect between the Prieſthood and the Law which dependeth thereupon, as the Ieſuites out of this place doe gather and we grant: it followeth, that forſomuch as the new Teſtament is ſufficiently ratified in the onely Prieſthood and Sacrifice of Chriſt, that there is no other ſacrifice but his.

2 Againe, the New Teſtament is not confirmed but by bloud and death: ſeeing therefore there is no
Verſ. 22. & c. 8. 6. Heb. 9. bloud and death in the Popiſh ſacrifice, it followeth, that it confirmeth not the New Teſtament, and therefore that the new Teſtament may ſtand without it upon the alone Prieſthood and Sacrifice of our Saviour Chriſt.

3 Moreover, as bloud is neceſſary for confirmation of the new Teſtament or Law: ſo is the bloud of the teſtator or Prieſt neceſſary; but in the Popiſh Sacrifice the bloud of the Prieſt is not ſhed: wherefore the Popiſh Sacrifice confirmeth not the new Teſtament ſo, but that without it the new
Heb. 9. Teſtament may ſtand.

4 And as there is relation between the Law and Prieſthood; ſo is there betweene the Prieſthood and the Sacrifice. As therefore under the old Teſtament, becauſe there was a carnall Prieſthood, it behoved the Sacrifice to be carnall: ſo under the new Teſtament, becauſe the ſacrifice is ſpirituall and eternall, it behoveth the Prieſthood to be ſo; either therefore you ſhould haue made your carnall Prieſts ſpirituall and eternall as you imagine your ſacrifice to be, or elſe for your carnall Prieſthood you ſhould haue framed a carnall and tranſitory ſacrifice ſutable unto your Prieſthood. Now when as this opinion ſwerueth from truth, ſo it falleth away from it ſelfe, they giue ſhrewd ſuſpition that they are none of the Lords corne, which will be carried with ſuch a puffe of reaſon as this is; if by externall Prieſthood be meant a true and reall Prieſthood, we ſay you ſlander us, when you ſuppoſe of us that we eſteeme the Prieſthood ended by Chriſt, which we hold yet to continue by interceſſion in heaven: but if by externall Prieſthood you meane that which may be ſeene of men, thereby to pinch our profeſſion, which haue no viſible Prieſthood; not to purſue your dotage herein (eſteeming nothing ſufficient which you cannot lay your hands and eyes upon) what ſhall become of your Sacrifice of Chriſt in the Maſſe, which hath no teſtimony of ſence either inward or outward: If you thinke therefore that the Prieſthood of the new Teſtament be without grace, unleſſe it be viſible, you haue given ſentence of condemnation againſt your Sacrifice, which your Prieſts themſelues with their ravens eye and beſt ſpectacles could never ſee. Where you ſay the new Law beganne by Chriſts death, thereby to proue that there muſt be Prieſthood after the Law begunne, or elſe that the Prieſthood could not be tranſlated with the Law, your diſputation is miſerable, neither true in Antecedent nor Conſequent: For it is well known that the new Teſtament began
Mat. 3. Mar. 1. Math. 11. Ioh. 15. 15. with the Preaching of Iohn, that both the full and perfect doctrine thereof was taught before, and the Sacraments miniſtred. And therefore wee returne your reaſon upon your own heads after this ſort. In the vertue of the ſacrifice of our Saviour Chriſt upon the Croſſe the new Teſtament had place, when the ſame ſacrifice was not yet offered and executed, albeit there was no other ſupply of ſacrifice: it followeth therefore that the Sacrifice being now offered and executed the new Teſtament ſhall be much more eſtabliſhed by it without any ſupply of other ſacrifice whatſoever. And if the New Law had not begun untill after the death of Chriſt, yet ſhould it not be without a Prieſthood, conſidering that it is blaſphemous to end the Prieſthood of Chriſt with his death.

Another reaſon they haue that the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe is not ſufficient without a ſucceſſion of a maſſing ſacrifice, becauſe it was not executed in ſuch ſort that Chriſtian Nations could meet often to worſhip at it, or to worſhip it, which is the meaning: where ſtill they fall at the ſame ſtone of the kind of worſhip, which eſteeme none lawfull, unleſſe it bee groſſe and Cæſar. Comment. carnall, not unlike the Germans in times paſt, of whom Cæſar reporteth that they would worſhip nothing but that which they ſee. But let them anſwer us why they haue not an outward Prieſthood, before which they may fall down and worſhip, as well as an outward ſacrifice: if therefore the alone ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, be not a ſufficient number of ſacrifices, becauſe that Chriſtian Nations cannot meete often to worſhip at it, it followeth that his Prieſthood is not therefore ſufficient, becauſe Chriſtian Nations cannot often meet to worſhip at it. And therefore as to make a ſufficient ſacrifice of the new Teſtament, you haue ſuch a one as may be worſhipped: ſo to haue a ſufficient Prieſthood you muſt provide Prieſts, to whom every name that is named in heaven and in earth may bow the knee. For the reſt of their reaſon, let the Reader marke whether as in looking againſt the Sunne of the truth, their blinde eyes become more blind: ſo in prattling againſt the truth they are become ſpeechleſſe, and their tongues ſo confounded, that their words carry no ſenſe nor reaſon good or bad: for thus they write, Though for the honour and dutie, remembrance and repreſentation thereof, not onely we Chriſtians, but alſo all peoples faithfull both of Iewes and Gentiles haue had their Prieſthood and ſacrifices according to their eſtate, which kinde of ſacrifices were tranſlated one into another, and ſo no doubt is the Prieſthood Leviticall properly turned into the Prieſthood and ſacrifice of the Church, according to Melchiſedeckes rite and Chriſts inſtitution in the formes of bread and wine: Where beſide the abſurd oppoſition of Chriſtians with faithfull Iewes and Gentiles, beſide the evident falſhood that faithfull Iewes and Gentiles haue had their Prieſthood and Sacrifices according to their ſtate, beſide their gibberiſh that the kinde of ſacrifices were tranſlated one into another, wee would gladly know his name that out of theſe words can frame either argument againſt us, or anſwer for them. But thus doth the Lord confound their language that build Babell. Laſt of all, beſide the inſufficiencie of anſwer that their wretched cauſe thruſteth them upon, let the Reader marke how without iudgement they ſwallow whatſoever they read or heare: for they ſay that in the Law of nature the eſtate of the people hanged on one kind of Prieſthood: Where it is well known that in the Law of Nature there is nothing but that alone which is written in the heart of man, and ſhould haue been done, if hee had never fallen into this corruption of ſinne whereunto he is ſhut. Seeing therefore the doctrine of Prieſthood is not borne with us, but taught of man in the Schoole of God unto Adam and others before Moses, and commeth no otherwise unto us, but by reason of sinne, which is not according to the law of nature, but contrarie unto it: it followeth that they which hold all the time before the Law of Moses, governed by the Law of nature, are fouly deceived, and by improper speach giue occasion of dangerous errour.

Verse. 17. For he witnesseth, That thou art a Priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedec.

RHEM. 12. [17. A Priest for euer.] Christ is not called a Priest for euer, onely for that his person is eternall, or for that he sitteth on the right hand of God, and perpetually prayeth or maketh intercession for vs, or for that the effect of his death is euerlasting: for all this proueth not that in proper signification his Priesthood is perpetuall: but according to the iudgement of all the fathers grounded vpon this deepe and diuine discourse of S. Paul, and vpon the very nature, definition, and proprietie of Priesthood, and the excellent act and order of Melchisedec, and the state of the new law, hee is a Priest for euer according to Melchisedecks order, specially in respect of the sacrifice of his holy body and bloud, instituted at his last supper, and executed by his commission, commandement, and perpetuall concurrence with his Priests, in the formes of bread and wine: in which things onely the said high Priest Melchisedec did sacrifice. For though S. Paul make no expresse mention hereof, because of the depth of the mysterie, and their incredulitie or feebleneſſe to whom hee wrote: yet it is euident in the iudgement of all the learned fathers (without exception) that euer wrote either vpon this Epistle, or vpon the 14. of Genesis, or the Psalme 109. or by occasion haue treated of the sacrifice of the altar, that the eternitie and proper act of Christs Priesthood and consequently the immutability of the new law, consisteth in the perpetuall offering of Christs body and bloud in the Church.

How Christ is a Priest for euer

Christes eternall priesthood consisteth in the perpetuall sacrifice of his body and bloud in the Church.

Which things is so well known to the aduersaries of Christs Church & Priesthood, & so granted, that they be forced impudently to cauill vpon certain Hebrew particles, that Melchisedec did not offer in bread & wine: yea and when that will not serue, plainly to deny him to haue been a Priest: which is to giue checkmate to the Apostle, & to ouerthrow all his discourse. Thus whiles these wicked men pretend to defend Christs onely Priesthood, they indeed abolish as much as in them lieth, the whole order, office, and state of his eternall law and Priesthood.

The protestants cauilling vpon particles against Melchisedecks sacrifice and Priesthood, directly against the Apostle.

Christs eternall Priesthood and sacrifice in the Church is proued out of the Fathers. Epist. 126.

* That is, from Adam to the end of the world, represented by sacrifice.

Finally if any of the fathers, or all the fathers, had either wisdome, grace, or intelligence of Gods words and mysteries, this is the trueth. If nothing well serue our Aduersaries, Christ Iesus confound them, and defend his eternall Priesthood, and state of his new Testament established in the same.

CARTVV. 12. [17 A Priest for ever.] The holy Ghost sheweth that the Priesthood of Christ is for ever, the reason also hee sheweth, because hee remaineth for ever, able to saue perfectly those which come unto God by him alwaies liuing to make intercession for them. These and such like speeches unto these which agree onely unto the person of Christ, are set down in this Epistle and none other. Notwithstanding all which they haue so hardned their fore-heads, and set their faces against the truth that they dare in despite of the truth affirme that these are not the onely causes why Christs Priesthood is not eternall, but in respect of the sacrifice of his holy body and bloud instituted at his last Supper, and executed by his commandement and perpetuall concurrence with his Priests in forme of bread and wine. The causes we alledge we read out of this Epistle, where reade you the cause which you assigne? But what should wee aske you where you reade that which is not written, yea the contrary whereof is evidently written? For the Authour of the Epistle shewing that Christ by his alone sacrifice once offered by himselfe doth perfectly saue all those that come unto God by him; thereby declareth that he saueth none in any sort through sacrifice offered by other then by himselfe. The sacrifice therfore of the popish Priest being neither once onely offered, nor yet offered by Christ himselfe, cannot be the sacrifice whereby Christ saueth those which come to God by him. Heb. 10.

Secondly, the Writer to the Hebrewes, shewing that our Saviour Christ liveth to make intercession for us, and not to sacrifice any more for us, doth evidently shew what action of his Priesthood is contained in his person which had not been onely as easie to say then as the other, if it had been true, but more to the question in hand, which was of the continuance of an externall sacrifice which the Hebrewes then, as the papists now, thought necessarie.

Last of all, it being said that Christ hath a Priesthood that cannot passe from him to another, it is evident ἀπαραβατον euident that the Priesthood of Christ can haue no succession in the Massing Priests. Now where they runne againe into their old hole, that S. Paul made no expresse mention of it, because of the depth of the mystery and incredulitie or feeblenesse of those to whom he wrote: sending the Reader to that before answered vpon Heb. 5. let him further note how they are hunted out of it by their owne words. For if the Hebrewes vnderstanding was feeble, the authour writing of it as they say he did, although not expressly, ought so much the more plainly and cleerely to haue written as they were dull of vnderstanding. Therefore in the wisedome of a good teacher he ought either to haue vtterly kept silence of it, or if he would needs write, he ought to haue applied himselfe to the capacitie of those he wrote vnto. And yet also euen in this very note they say euen of this point in controuersie, S. Paul had a deepe and a diuine discourse, whereby they doe not onely charge the Holy Ghost with writing so deeply to those whose vnderstanding was so shallow, but hew themselues most pittifully: for where before (vpon chap. 5. vers. 11.) they sayd that the writer hereof is forced to omit diuers deepe points concerning the priesthood of the new Law, among which the mystery of the sacrament and sacrifice of the Altar called the Masse, was a principall and pertinent matter: here (to proue that Christs Priesthood standeth partly in the massing Priesthood) they say it is according to the iudgement of all the Fathers grounded vpon this deep and diuine discourse of S. Paul. can there be any thing more contrary then to omit a point, and to discourse of the same deepely. howbeit this is not all the ware that these Gyants haue against the truth of this point: for lest any should goe beyond them in this shameleſse out-facing the truth, they affirme that Christs continuall intercession for vs, and everlasting effect of his death, proue not that in proper signification his priesthood is perpetuall, but, &c. Here we know not whether we should requite the Reader to right vp his eares to marke the fearefull iudgement of God vpon these wretches, or to stop them that the haire on their head stand not in hearing such blasphemous voyces. Shall that make Christ no perpetuall Priest in proper signification, which the holy Ghost doth expresly set downe? and yet that make him a Priest in proper signification, which the holy Ghost (both in truth, and according to the Iesuits own saying) omitteth to speake of? Shall an act of Christs Priesthood done perpetually in and by his own person, not make him a perpetuall Priest in proper signification, and an act of Priesthoods done of him neither in and by his owne person, nor yet perpetually shall notwithstanding make him a perpetuall Priest in proper signification? In your owne priesthood, as base it is, yet you esteeme him Priest all the dayes of his life, that never sung or said but his first Masse, you hold him for a Bishop, although he never preached but one Sermon.

Wherefore in denying the perpetuall Priesthood of our Saviour Christ, because he hath but one onely sacrifice; you take counsell of your bellies, which your Masse beareth plentifull mass vnto: rather then harken what is meet for you to say, euen according to the measure and scantling of your owne diuinity. And if there might be found such, either Priest or Bishop among you as could doe as much with one Masse or Sermon, as either all other Priests and Bishops could doe with all theirs, or he himselfe should be able to doe if hee should multiply his Masse or Sermon to the greatest number possible: we suppose you would confesse that he should not onely be both Priest and Bishop, but that his priesthood and Bishoply State should be most lawfull and sufficient all the dayes of his life for that one action. Now therefore seeing the alone sacrifice of our Sauiour Christ once offered, is more fruitfull then all others whatsoever, and as fruitfull and effectuall as if he had suffered oftentimes sithence the world: why cannot his priesthood find as much favour at your hand in his kinde, as yours in your kinde?

But to come to the figure of our Saviour Christs eternall priesthood in Melchisedec, wee demand how his blessing once given to Abraham, shall proue him a Priest in proper signification, no other action of priesthood being set downe either by Moses or by the Apostle, if beside the perpetuall force of Christs sacrifice once offered, his perpetuall both blessing and intercession will not proue him a perpetuall Priest in proper signification: for as for Melchisedeckes sacrifice in bread and wine, it is a meere forgery of your owne head, without so much as the least countenance of one word out of the Scripture, or onely sentence faithfully alledged out of the Fathers: For first of all, Moses saith, that Melchisedick brought forth bread and wine, and not offered bread and wine: the old Translator himselfe obseruing here the proprietie of the word, hath so turned it. Secondly, he brought it out to Abraham, and made no offering of it vnto God. And it being your owne doctrine that it is not lawfull to offer sacrifice but vnto God alone, and further manifest, that this bread and wine was offered to Abraham, it followeth necessarily that it can be no sacrifice. As for the Popish escape, that first he had offered it vnto God, or ever he brought it out to Abraham, it argueth that they are neere driven when they make such foule shift: for whom shall they perswade that hath his wits at home that Moses to set forth a sacrifice would mention the bringing it out to Abraham, which proueth no sacrifice and omit the offering of it to God, which argueth it to haue been one. In the meane season, let the Reader note that the proofe of Melchisedecks sacrifice in bread & wine standeth vpon an vnwritten veritie, as that which is neither mentioned, nor by any necessarie, no, not so much as probable consequence deduced. Thirdly, the Holy Ghost in this Epistle expounding the place of Moses, and comparing Christ with Melchisedeck diligently in that hee was King of Peace and Iustice, in that as a Priest he blessed Abraham, giveth not the least inckling of any sacrifice offered by him at that time he met Abraham, which notwithstanding hee would haue done if any had been; the chiefe disputation between him and the Hebrewes being (amongst other ceremoniall lawes) especially of the sacrifice. And where the holy Scriptures of the old and new Testament, not in Hebrew Particles onely, as you say (which notwithstanding as small graines cast in when the skoales are euen, pulleth down the cause of their side) but in whole discourses vtterly refuse you; you flie to the Fathers whose iudgement (you say) without exception and that whersoeuer they treate of this matter is that Melchisedecks sacrifice was in bread and wine, which impudent falshood would cause vs to wonder if it came not from you whose occupation and liuing by it, is either to coyne vntruthes or to stout them out when they are coyned. Let the Reader therefore understand that beside the old Translator which as hath appeared dreamed of no sacrifice. Tertullian, Ambrose and Augustine say that Melchisedeck offered bread and wine not unto God, but unto Abraham returning from the battell. Epiphanius, that Melchisedeck brought or set forth unto him, meaning Abraham, bread and wine; Chrysostome also as he is translated saith, that he brought forth bread and wine; and in the same place seeking what sacrifice Melchisedeck should offer, in regard whereof he should be called a Priest, the sacrifice in bread and wine was so far out of his minde that he fleeth to the sacrifice of sheep and oxen, namely such as Noe, Abraham, &c. offered unto God; whereas it is evident that to proue him a Priest by sacrifice he would never haue gone so farre, if hee had esteemed the bread and wine that was so neere his hand to haue beene a sacrifice. And that the same Chrisostome esteemed not the bread and wine that Melchisedeck brought forth to be a sacrifice, it is evident by that hee esteemed not so much as the bread and wine in the Lords Supper, whereof you say that this is a type to be any sacrifice: for speaking of his sacrifice offered upon the crosse, he saith, ‡ There is no other sacrifice, one hath purged us.

Tert contra Iudæos. Ambros. de Sacr. lib. 4. c. 3. Aug. quæst. ex utroque Test. 109. Epiph. contra Melchisedec. ἐξέβαλεν αὐτῷ ἄρτον καὶ οἶνον, Chrys. in Gen. hom. 35, extulit panem.

‡ Chrys. in Epist. Heb. hom. 13.

Now let us examine their testimonies, where if in so generall a consent of the Fathers without exception, and that not once but in all places where they speake of this matter, the witnesses they haue brought forth speak not a word for them of any reall and externall sacrifice of the Church, other then that which Christ in his own person offered upon the Crosse: the Reader may learne that it is a practise of Poperie even there to use the strangest asseveration of words where they haue least strength of matter to beare them out. In the first ranke there is not one, Arnobius excepted, that so much as in shew maketh for you: for they testifie onely that the Churches Priesthood and sacrifice is everlasting, which we most firmely beleeue, and most constantly professe; but deny that the perpetuitie of the one, or of the other standeth in your Priesthood or Masse, but in the proper and singular person and action of our Saviour Christ, against which it is so farre that the testimonies heere alledged haue any thing, that Ieromes ad Evagrium even in the same words that your selues haue set down doth evidently confirme it: For it Christs and the Churches Priesthood be both for the time past and to come: it followeth that by the same reason that Christs sacrifice tooke away the sins past before his comming without any offering of his person: that much more now he hath once offered himselfe, the vertue of his sacrifice shall cast forth the sweet savour therof unto all ages that are to come, albeit he be never after so lifted up in sacrifice againe.

Rom. 8. 34.

Touching Arnobius Psal. 109. 110. that by the mysteries of bread and wine he was made a Priest for ever, sheweth onely Arnobius to be of iudgement that Melchisedecks bringing forth of bread and wine (which by a trope of the part noteth the whole repast) was an act of Priesthood, which we esteeme a Kingly and royall act in feeding and feasting the whole array of Abraham and his Souldiers, returning wearie and faint from the Lords battels and slaughter of his enemies, which is the iudgement of the Hebrew Doctors, as Ambrose reciteth and reiecteth not, at the least we haue proued by evident reason out of the Scripture, and authoritie of ancient Writers, that it is no Priestly act: howbeit Arnobius affirming it to be an act of Priesthood saith not that his was a type of a sacrifice that the Church should offer after Christ, but that the mercifull God caused a memorie, and that by giving the food of his bodie unto those that feare him, not unto himselfe in sacrifice as you do: Wherefore let the Reader understand that as we follow not the exposition of some of the Fathers in this bread and wine presented by Melchisedeck unto Abraham: so is it not for any advantage that the Popish opinion of the Masse gaineth thereby, which must needs pine to death if it haue no other bread to feed on then Melchisedecks even as the Fathers set it on the Table, but onely because wee make conscience to build upon the golden foundation of the true doctrine which they held together with the stubble of expositions and termes not answerable or correspondent to the prize of their holy doctrine. For these Fathers do onely esteeme that this act of Melchisedeck was a type of the holy Sacrament of the body of Christ instituted in bread and wine, as Cyprian declareth in the same Epist. 63. which you haue alledged, saying in Melchisedeck the Priest wee see the Sacrament of the Lords sacrifice prefigured. And albeit we deny the bread and wine which Melchisedeck brought forth to be a sacrifice, or Melchisedeck a Priest in that regard, yet that we deny him to be a Priest, and that (as you say) plainly, is open untruth, well becomming that lying spirit whereby your false Priesthood is upholden, The allegation out of the Evangelist is answered in the proper place.

Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquit. cap. 11. calleth it ἐνζύια. Ambros. Look Iudg. 8. 4. 5. 6. 7 8. 9. & 2. Sam. 19. 33. Ambros. in hunc locum.

In the second ranke all the testimonies, Damascene excepted (which is no Alderman to sit upon the Bench with the ancient Fathers) are either of the onely Priesthood and Sacrifice of Christ upon the crosse, or else of the Sacrament of the Lords Bodie and Bloud, instituted in bread and wine, which the Fathers calling oftentimes a sacrifice, do nothing lesse then understand a reall externall and propitiatorie sacrifice, but onely by a borrowed speech signifie that it is through Christ a sacrifice of thankesgiving, of sweet perfume and good liking unto God, which may evidently appeare by their most certaine iudgement in this behalfe.

Iustine saith, that supplications and thankesgiving are the onely perfect sacrifice which Christians haue learned to offer. Chrysostome, If Christ be perfect, never sinneth, ever liveth, why should hee offer for us many sacrifices? there is no other sacrifice, one hath purged us. Augustine also saith that Christ onely is our Priest, our Sacrifice, our Temple: it would be too tedious to recite the places where the ancient Fathers in shewing the excellencie of our sacrifices aboue those under the Law, and teaching what sacrifices of ours haue succeeded to theirs, alledge no other but spirituall in the offering up of our selues, and that which is within us. The light of the truth heerein shall easily appeare unto the Reader by that which the evidence thereof hath wrested and wrunged from the Papists themselues, from whom the truth, which they would haue willingly holden captiue for evermore, hath broken loose.

Peter Lumbard their chiefe Rabbin asking if that which the Priest doth, may properly be called a sacrifice or offering, and whether Christ be offered daily, or were offered once onely, answereth thus, To this it may be briefly said, that that which is offered and consecrated is called a sacrifice and oblation, because it is the memorie and repreſentation of the true ſacrifice and holy offering made in the Altar of the Croſſe.

Another alſo that wrote a booke which he intitleth Interem written anno 1548. which approbation of the Pope himſelfe writeth after this ſort. The vertue and efficacie of this onely oblation (meaning Chriſt vpon the Croſſe) doth not onely ſerue for that time that Chriſt made himſelfe an hoaſt in the fleſh, but comprehending the ages of all times, it is ſufficient to do away the ſinnes of all men which were from the beginning of the world, or ſhall be after, but that all men might be partakers of this ſo effectuall an oblation, and draw the fruit of it vnto themſelues, which moſt fully, moſt ſufficiently and moſt perfectly hath deſerued the ſalnation of them all. And then ſhewing by what means God applied this ſacrifice of Chriſt to the fathers before the time of the Goſpel, he ſaith thus, euen ſo Chriſt did commend vnto his Church the pure and wholeſome oblation of his body and blood vnder the kinds of bread and wine whereby we ſhould eſt ſoones renue in our minds the memory of his body hanged vpon the croſſe and of his blood ſhed for vs, and apply vnto our ſelues the fruit of that bloudie ſacrifice, wherewith he made perfect for euer thoſe that are ſanctified, for this is to do it in his remembrance, that is to ſay with thankfull mindes to remember the Lords death, and by remembrance and merit of his paſſion to pray the father that he would be reconciled vnto vs. After hauing ſpoken ſomewhat of the inchantment of tranſubſtantiation, hee concludeth that Chriſt is offered, not that we by it now firſt deſerue remiſſion of our ſinnes, and ſalnation of our ſoules, but that minding the memorie of the Lords paſſion wee ſhould giue thanks vnto him for the ſalnation which is obtained for vs vpon the croſſe, and apply or appropriate vnto vs by faith and deuotion the deſerued forgiuenes and redemption of ſinnes. Now if the Reader will compare this popiſh diuinitie with that which the Ieſuites defend now, he ſhall eaſily ſee that it is in this ſpirituall tyrannie of the conſcience eſpecially as ſometimes it was in the tyrannies which Daniel ſpeaketh of that principally oppreſſed the bodies, namely that euery age as it is latter then other, ſo it is baſer, and as it were a more vile and harder metall then that which went before. Wherefore, if nothing will ſerue our aduerſaries, neither the plain words and ſenſe of the Scripture, and that by diſcourſe almoſt of a whole Epiſtle, nor the full conſent of antiquitie diuers times in plaine words, but alwayes in euident meaning, nor yet the force and might of the truth cauſing the Ieſuites greateſt friends, and her own moſt bitter aduerſaries to bow a knee and do a homage vnto her, if (ſay wee) all this can not cauſe them confeſſe that there is but one Prieſt, one Sacrifice, one Altar alone vnder the new Teſtament, our Sauiour Chriſt and his croſſe, Ieſus Chriſt (as he hath already begun) mightely confound them and defend his eternall Prieſthood and ſtate of his new Teſtament eſtabliſhed in the ſame.

For though the new Teſtament was inſtitued, giuen, and dedicated in the Supper, yet the warrant, confirmation, and eternall operation thereof, was atchieued vpon the Croſſe, in the one oblation and one generall and euerlaſting redemption there made.

meant that there is but one Prieſt of the new Teſtament.

The Apoſtle then meaneth firſt, that the abſolute Sacrifice of conſummation, perfection, and vniuerſall redemption, was but one, once done, and by his onely Prieſt done, and therefore it could not be any of the ſacrifices of the Iewes law, or wrought by any or by all of them, becauſe they were a number at once, and ſucceding one another, euery of their offices and functions ending by their death, and could not worke ſuch an eternall redemption as by Chriſt onely was wrought vpon the Croſſe. Secondly, S. Paul inſinuateth thereupon, that Chriſt neuer looſeth the dignitie or practiſe of his eternall prieſthood by death nor otherwiſe, neuer yeeldeth it vp to any, neuer hath ſucceſſors after him, that may enter into his roome or right of prieſthood, as Aaron and all other had in the Leuiticall prieſthood, but that himſelfe worketh and concurreth with his miniſters the Prieſts of the new Teſtament, in all their acts of prieſthood, as well of ſacrifice as Sacrament, bleſſing, preaching, praying, and the like whatſoeuer. This therefore was the fault of the Hebrewes, that they did not acknowledge their Leuiticall ſacrifices and prieſthood to bee reformed and perfited by Chriſts ſacrifice on the Croſſe: and againſt them the Apoſtle onely diſputeth, and not againſt our Prieſts of holy Church, or the number of them, who all confeſſe their prieſthood and all exerciſes of the ſame, to depend vpon Chriſts onely perpetuall prieſthood.

The meaning is that the abſolute ſacrifice of eternal redemption could not bee done away by thoſe many Aaronicall Prieſts, but by one onely, Chriſt Ieſus, who liueth a Prieſt for euer, hath no ſucceſſor, and achieſe Prieſt worketh and concurreth with all Prieſts in their Prieſtly functions.

CAR. VV. 16. [23. Being many.] The Author to the Hebrewes proueth, that there can bee no other Prieſts but Chriſt vnder the New Teſtament, for that he continueth for ever, conſidering that the number of Prieſts riſeth of the imperfection of the Prieſts, which by death were not ſuffered alwayes to exerciſe their Prieſthood, which thing agreeing as well to the popiſh prieſts as to the Leviticall (forſomuch as they are cut off by death as well as they) it followeth that this arrow ſhot at the Leviticall, ſtriketh through the popiſh Prieſthood alſo. But this argument receiueth anſwer firſt, that the place excludeth not the popiſh prieſts, becauſe it were againſt the Prophet Eſay 61. that ſaith there ſhall be Prieſts vnder the New Teſtament, but this anſwer is a greater argument of an euill conſcience, wittingly to fight againſt the truth, then colourably to yeeld ſolution of the reaſon which we alledge: for by prieſts here the Prophet meaneth all the people of God that ſhall be gathered vnder the banner of the Goſpell; and as the ſame Moſes, and after him the Apoſtle, teach that we are a royall prieſthood, and made Prieſts and Kings to God to offer up ſpirituall Sacrifices acceptable to him, through Chriſt; which is euident for that vnto the Lords Prieſts he oppoſeth all the enemies of the Church, which ſhall bee as it were their drudges, their plow-men, and their vine-dreſſers: unleſſe therefore the enemies of the Church and ſtrangers muſt be the prieſts vaſſails onely (which your ſhaven humour could not well like of, that make euen the Church of God your villaines) unleſſe alſo your prieſts haue alwayes vine-yards to dreſſe in the Countries where they dwell (as they commonly loue the wine bottles) it is euident that this cannot be the ſeuerall or incloſure of Popiſh Prieſts, which the Lord hath laid out in common vnto all the faithfull. Let the Reader remember therefore which hath been before obſerued that the Prophets in comforting the godly and thundring againſt the vnrepentant Iews, by an encreaſe and beautifying of the one ſort, and by iuſtling out and diſplacing the other through the calling of the Gentiles, uſeth to ſpeake to the one and to the other in termes wherewith they are beſt acquainted, the better to ſettle the doctrine in their hearts. And hereof it is that ſpeaking of the ſeruice of God vnder the Goſpell, hee uſeth to ſet it out by Sacrifices, Altars, Prieſts, Incenſe, &c. And becauſe the Land of Canaan was plentifull of vines, hee compareth the forreiners from the Church (which the Lord through an omnipotent hand will cauſe in their effect of deſtroying the Church to ſerue to the edification thereof) to Vine-keepers. And after this ſort the Prophet Eſay ſaith, that the Lord will accept the burnt offerings of ſtrangers vpon his Altar, that all the ſheep of Kedar ſhall be offered vnto him with the Rammes of Nebayoth, that the Gentiles ſhall go up to keep the feaſts of Tabernacles from yeere to yeere to Ieruſalem, that euery pot in Ieruſalem ſhall be holy vnto the Lord of Hoſts, and that all they that come to ſacrifice ſhall take of them and ſeeth in them: if therefore for the word of Prieſt they will binde the Goſpelling Churches vnto a reall and outward Prieſthood, they muſt by the ſame reaſon binde them to burnt offerings, to Lambes and Rammes, to the feaſt of Tabernacles to Cauldrons to ſeeth their ſacrifices in, and all in the Citie of Ieruſalem, and not in pilgrimage once in a life, but from yeare to yeare. And if their impudent faces will ſuffer them to bluſh at theſe, there is as good cauſe why they ſhould governe them here where is the ſame borrowed and figuratiue ſpeech.

Exod. 19. 6. 1. Pet. 2. 9. Apoc. 1. 6.

Eſay 56. 7. Eſay 60. 7. Zach. 14.

It is true that Ierome expoundeth the place of the Governours of the Church, or of the Apoſtles, contrary to the euident diſcourſe of the Prophets, but of any reall or externall ſacrifice, which is the point in controverſie, he hath not a word. And that, after a ſort and by trope, the Miniſterie of the Goſpell may be called a Prieſthood, in that by the ſword of the Spirit, which is the Goſpell, they ſlay the old Adam, and preſent men as liuing ſacrifices vnto God in Chriſt: it is that which we with the Apoſtle willingly confeſſe, and are well content to heare of in Ierom, or any other, ſo that they uſe it rarely as he doth, and in the ſame ſenſe that hee doth: And where they ſay that wee take away the lawfull ſtate of Gods Church with the Sacraments and externall worſhip, that which they moſt untruely ſlander us with, doth moſt duly agree vnto them: for if ſuch places of the Prophets as they alledge to bee availeable to proue an externall and reall Prieſthood, they being applyed of the Prophet (as hath been ſhewed) to all the faithfull: it followeth that there is no difference between ſhepheard and flock, Miniſter and People, but that the whole body is mouth to ſpeake, without eare to heare, and is eye to ſee without hand to worke. Beſide that the Ieſuites know right well, that howſoeuer we condemne their ſacrificing prieſts, yet we uphold the difference of Miniſter and people by greater railes and diſſeuerments of diſcretion both in calling and gifts, then they do amongſt whom he is for knowledge (commonly) prieſt good enough whom we would not receiue amongſt the people.

They adde for further anſwer to our argument, the ſumme whereof is, that the Apoſtle meaneth, that the absolute sacrifice of consummation and universall redemption, is but one, once done, and by one and that he continueth the practise of his priesthood without successour to enter his roome or right of priesthood. If Hypocrates were made a counsell with this cause, he would forbid to minister medicine unto it, as that which being desperate hath the sicknesse aggrieved as the medicine is multiplied. For first, the words of perfection and consummation in the sacrifice upon the Crosse, be as deadly vnto popish, heathenish and other sacrifices whatsoever, as they are to Iewish: for if the Iewes might not offer their sacrifices, because Christs sacrifice was perfect, and might not haue their sacrifice after Christs, because his was the consummation of all; it followeth also that the popish sacrifice being an addition unto that which is perfect as a needlesse patch, and comming after consummation, is worthy to perish of a consumption. And if the Iewish priests were unlawfull, because Christ in his priesthood hath no successour, the popish priesthood must be lawlesse, which entreth before the priesthood of our Saviour Christ be expired.

And if the Iesuites thinke to steale away vnder the words of vniuersall redemption ascribed vnto the sacrifice of the crosse where their sacrifice is more proper and speciall: besides that it is a blasphemous sophistrie to make the sacrifice of the Crosse an idle houering and fluttering ouer the heads of all men, but lighting vpon the head of no one speciall man; it is euident by the Prophet that in assigning the cause of his passion, he doth not onely declare it to be that we all haue sinned, but that euery one a part and seuered from the rest haue sinned: it is true that Christs sacrifice vpon the crosse must be applied to vs, but that the same is by the sacrifice of the masse is first the begging of the question and secondly absurd that one sacrifice should be applied by another, & that one propiciation for sins on the crosse should bee applied by another propiciation on the altar which is applied by the word and Sacraments outwardly, and by the operation of the Spirit working faith inwardly. And where they would put a difference, for that Christ worketh and concurreth with the Priests of the new Testament, it maketh no more difference then a white line drawen vpon a white wall: for there is no lawfull Church ministery wherewith Christ doth not concurre, and so hee did with the ministery of Aaron, in whose contempt Christ was contemned, whereupon it is said that their murmurings were not so much against Aaron as against Christ which was with them in the wildernes. And how easie a matter had it been for these Hebrewes which beleiued in Christ to haue answered that Christ in his euerlasting priesthood did worke and concurre, verily they might haue better said it, then you may with whom Christ worketh not, but is wrought vpon by you, and with whom he doth not concure, but which goeth on foote, and doth as it were lacky, where the popish Priest rideth on horseback, by vndertaking the office of sacrificing whilest hee glueth to Christ the place of the sacrifice. And therefore where they would put another difference that their Priesthood and the exercises thereof depend only vpon Christs perpetuall Priesthood, & not the Hebrewes. First they shamefully slander the Hebrews to whom his author wrote, which receiued (as hath bin shewed) our Sauiour Christ as the Messias & Sauiour, but esteemed that the sacrifices once commanded were not to be abolished, but might go in the account of Christian works. Secondly, they are herein more faultie then the Hebrews, who indeed esteemed their sacrifices to depend vpon the sacrifice of Christ; where they in vndertaking to offer vp Christ which was once offered on the crosse by necessarie consequence make the acceptance of Christ to depend vpon the popish Priest seing the offering is not accepted but for the offerers sake.

Gen. 4. 5. Leuit. 10. 19.

Verse. 27. Which hath not necessitie daily (as the Priestes) first for his owne sinnes to offer hostes, then for the peoples: for this he did once in offering himselfe.

RHEM. 17. [2. This did he once.] This is the speciall preheminence of Christ, that hee offereth for other mens sinnes onely, hauing none of his own to offer for, as all other Priests both of the old and new law haue. And this againe is the speciall dignity of his own person, not communicable to any other of what order of priesthood soeuer, that he by his death (which is the only oblation that is by the Apostle declared to bee irreiterable in it selfe) payed the one full sufficient ransome for the redemption of all sinnes.

CARTW. 17. [27. This did he once.] This note is true which affirmeth Christs death a full sufficient ransome of all sinnes, and glueth the lye in the throate of all Popish Priests, which blasphemously affirme the Masse to be a propitiatorie sacrifice for the quick and the dead.

CHAP. VIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 2. A minister of the holies, and of the true tabernacle, which our Lord pight and not man.

RHEM. 1. [2. Minister of the holies,] Christ liuing and reigning in heauen continueth his priestly function still, and is minister not of Moyses Sancta, and tabernacle, but of his owne body and bloud, which bee the true holies, and tabernacle, not formed by man, but by Gods own hand.

Verse 7. For ‡ if that former had been void of fault, there should not certes a place of a second been sought.

RHEM. 2. [7. If that former.] The promises and effects of the Law were temporall, but the promises and effects of Christs Sacraments in the Church be eternall.

CARTW

CARTVV. 2. [7 If that former,] The holy things under the Law, albeit they were in regard of representation of our Sauiour Christ that was to come temporall, as those which (as shadowes) must necessarily giue place to him, yet the promises and effects of them, in the right use of breeding and increasing faith were eternall; considering that the end of their faith was the same that ours, which is everlasting life. And therefore it is the Iesuites ignorance to esteeme the fruits and effects of those things temporall, because the use of them were for a time. And by the same reason they may say that the promises and effects of our Sacraments are temporall, seeing the use of them also shall cease at the time of the instauration of all things, as they ceased at the time of correction. And albeit barely considered in themselues and severed from Christ, they brought euen death euerlasting to the communicants, yet that being well vsed they were powerfull instruments to communicate Christ effectually (although not so aboundantly) as ours, let the Reader look before. vpon Iohn 6. 49. & 1. Cor. 10. 13. And besides the Iesuites errour in iudgement common to them with other Papists, let the Reader obserue their vnlearned speaches whereby they doe not so much as attaine the iudgement which they would deliuer, for in stead that they should haue said the promises vnder the Law they set down the promises of the Law, which are known to be the same that are vnder the Gospell although with other condition: For let them tell vs whether when our Sauiour Christ saith do this and thou shalt liue, hee meane not to promise life euerlasting to the doers of the Law or no: it is also an vnlearned opposition to oppose promises and effects of the law to the promises and effects of Christs Sacraments in the Church: as if in the Church vnder the Gospell, there were nothing else but Sacraments, and as if the Sacraments were the whole now, as the Law was the whole then.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3 For euery high priest is apointed to offer gifts and hostes, wherefore it is necessary that hee also haue something that hee may offer.

RHEM. 3. [3. Necessarie that he also.] Euen now being in heauen, because he is a Bishop and Priest he must needs haue somewhat to offer, and wherein to do sacrifice: and that not in spirituall sort onely, for that could not make him a Priest of any certaine order. And it is most false and wicked to hold with the Caluinists, *that Melchisedeks Priesthod was wholy spiritual. For then Christs death was not a corporall, externall, visible, and truely named sacrifice: neither could Christ nor Melchisedec be any otherwise a Priest, then euery faithfull man is, which to hold (as the Caluinists following their own doctrine must needs do) is directly against the Scriptures, and no lesse against Christs one oblation of his body vpon the Crosse, then it is against the daily sacrifice of body vpon the altar. Therefore hee hath a certaine host in externall and proper manner, to make perpetuall oblation thereby in the Church: for, visible and externall act of sacrificing in heauen hee doth not exercise.

Christ Priesthood & sacrifice is external, not spiritual only. * Baza schol. Test. Graecolat. in c. 7. Hebr. num. 8.

CARTVV. 3. [3. Necessary that he also.] The writer to the Hebrewes to proue that Christ is the true high Priest prefigured in Aaron and his successours sheweth that his body is the true tabernacle and the heauen the true holiest place. And that as the Leuiticall high Priest went by the tabernacle to the most holy place: so our Sauiour Christ went by the offering of his body into the heauen; now the Iesuites snatching at the old, and Erasmus his Translation, that say it is necessary that Christ haue some thing to offer, would make the Reader beleeue that our Saviour Christ even now being in heaven hath a sacrifice to offer, even his own bodie: where first the Greek hath no such verbe of the present time, but leaueth such a one to be understood as fitteth the circumstance of the place. Secondly, it is euidently and undoubtedly known that it is very usuall in all writings, especially in this Epistle, to use one time for another, especially making recitall of things past, as if they were presently in doing: so that neither the old Translator, nor Erasmus, meant any thing lesse then that the sacrifice of Christ was yet to be offered by him. And therefore if the Greek text had used the present time, as they do: yet were it more then childish Sophistrie thus to wrangle, not onely contrary to the usuall custome of this Epistle, but contrary to the evident discourse both of this place, and of the whole Epistle: for seeing by his sacrifice, as by the Tabernacle, he entred into heaven, he making no more entrie into heaven cannot offer any more sacrifice.

Heb. 1. 7. & 2. 11. & 7. 28. & 11. 14. 16. Heb. 9. 11. 12.

Againe, this collection is directly contrary unto that he offered not his sacrifice every day, as the priest, but once. The difference also is assigned, that where the priests offer every day and oftentimes the same sacrifice, Christ hath offered one sacrifice for sin, and after that sitteth for euer at the right hand of God. And where the Iesuites would make men beleeue that our Saviour Christ could be no priest in heaven, unlesse he had yet some sacrifice to offer every day, they abase our Sa. Christs priesthood, under the priesthood of the Law, which this discourse doth incomparably preferre unto it: for the priests of the Law which sacrificed in their course, that is, certaine dayes onely in the yeare, were notwithstanding priests all the yeare wherein they sacrificed, not as well as the dayes wherein according to appointment they in their proper courses offered sacrifice. If therefore the Leviticall priests in offering sacrifice certaine dayes onely, were priests the other dayes wherein they sacrificed not, as well as when they stood at the Altar: what horrible blasphemy is it to deny that our Saviour Christs offering a sacrifice, is not able to maintaine him in the right of priesthood, unlesse he offer it daily? what will they say of their owne priesthood, wherein if the perfection be measured by continuall and daily sacrifice; it will fall out that the priesthood of the popish Bishop will be found more maimed then the priesthood of every Sir Iohn, and the Popes priesthood more lame then the Bishops; considering that their Masses, and (in Massing) their sacrifices, are (as be the great Faires) seldome or once in the yeare: but let these blasphemous mouthes answer, whether our Sau. Christ were not a perfect Priest when he was upon earth, both before and after the time of his passion, although he offered himselfe for sacrifice but once during his abode upon earth. And if he were a Prieſt upon earth, euen then when neither he nor none for him offered ſacrifice: how much more being now in heaven is he a perfect prieſt, albeit he offer no externall ſacrifice either by himſelfe or by others.

Touching their charge againſt M. Beza, that Heb. c. 7. num. 8. hee affirmeth Melchiſedecks Prieſthood, and conſequently Chriſts to bee wholy ſpirituall, thereby gathering that hee excludeth the eternall ſacrifice of our Saviour Chriſt, they are like themſelues alwaies, lying and ſlandering: for his words are, that as in the Leviticall Prieſthood all things are carnall and tranſitorie; ſo in Chriſts are all ſpirituall and everlaſting, where although he ſay that all things are ſpirituall, yet hee ſaith not that they are wholy or onely ſpirituall, as they ſay: for every thing in the Prieſthood of Chriſt might be ſpirituall, eſpecially compared with the Leviticall Prieſthood, and yet haue ſomething externall, in which reſpect the outward Miniſterie of the Goſpell is called ſpirituall. And even the very outward ſacrifice of Chriſt being offered by the eternall Spirit cannot be but ſpirituall.

Verſe. 4. If then hee were | upon the earth, neither were hee a Prieſt: whereas there were that did offer gifts according to the Law.

How Chriſts bodie is made fit to bee ſacrificed and eaten perpetually.

RHEM. 4. [4. If upon the earth.] It is by his death, and reſurrection to life againe, that his body is become apt and fitte in ſuch diuine ſort to be ſacrificed perpetually. For if hee had liued in mortall ſort ſtill that way of myſticall repreſentation of breaking his body and ſeparating the bloud from the ſame, could not haue been agreeable, and ſo the Church and Chriſtian people ſhould haue lacked a prieſthood and ſacrifice, and Chriſt himſelfe ſhould not haue been a Prieſt, of a peculiar order, but either muſt haue offered in the things that Aarons Prieſtes did, or elſe haue been no Prieſt at all. For, to haue offered onely ſpiritually, as all faithfull men doe, that could not bee enough for his vocation, and our redemption, and ſtate of the new Teſtament. How his fleſh was made fit to bee offered and eaten in the B. Sacrament, by his death. See Iſychius lib. 1. in leuit c. 2.

Heb. 9. 24.

CARTVV. 4. [7 If upon the earth.] He proueth that which he ſaid in the ſecond verſe, that Chriſt is the Miniſter of the holy place, namely of heaven, as it is expounded afterward. And this hee argueth, for that if hee had remained upon earth the Leviticall Prieſthood ſhould haue ſtill ſtood in force: for ſeeing it was a ſhadow of the heavenly Prieſthood, it muſt needs follow, that untill ſuch time as there were a Prieſt in heaven the Leviticall Prieſthood upon earth as a figure, or ſhadow could not giue place unto the Prieſthood of Chriſt, as unto the bodie and truth: Wherefore it is evident by this argument of the Writer unto the Hebrewes that the Papiſts appointing an externall Prieſthood upon earth do utterly overthrow Chriſts Prieſthood in heauen. And where they ſay that by his death and reſurrection his bodie is made fit to be ſacrificed perpetually, it is not onely without any ground of this place from whence they would ſeeme to draw it, but contrarie to the nature both of a ſacrifice, and eſpecially of the ſacrifice of himſelfe: for the Writer to the Hebrewes affirmeth that if Chriſt ſhould be often ſacrificed, then he muſt alſo often die: ſo that the death of Chriſt argueth plainely that he cannot be offered any more. And as for his reſurrection, foraſmuch as it was with condition that Chriſt ſhould never die againe, it is further evident that the nature of the reſurrection of Chriſt will not endure that hee ſhould be ſacrificed any more: whereunto if they had added (as they ought to haue done) the aſcention of Chriſt into heaven, thereby would haue riſen another unlawfull proofe of the unfitneſſe of Chriſts body to bee offered any more upon earth, not onely for unlawfulneſſe, but for impoſſibilitie of it, ſeeing his body being in heauen when they imagine it ſacrificed, cannot be betwixt the Prieſts fingers. And although in truth neither the nature of his mortall, nor of his immortall bodie doth ſuffer, that the bodie of Chriſt ſhould be often offered in ſacrifice; yet your ſelues imagine even the mortall bodie of Chriſt ſuch as may be oftentimes offered in ſacrifice, contrarie to that which you heere ſet down, that by his death and reſurrection it was made fit for a perpetuall ſacrifice: And againe if he had lived in mortall ſort ſtill the way of myſticall repreſentation of breaking his bodie and ſeparation of his bloud from the ſame could not haue been agreeable. Why I pray you? If it bee as you ſay that Chriſt in his laſt Supper offered himſelfe as a ſacrifice before he came to offer it upon the Croſſe, and could even then offer his body, ſo that it ſhould not truely die, but die in a myſterie or in a Sacrament: it followeth that by the ſame rule hee could once do it, he could haue done it 10000 times. And therefore (by your own opinion) no need that he ſhould bee immortall to haue a perpetuall ſacrifice in his bodie. Withall I appeale to the conſcience of the moſt learned that ſhall reade either this place, or that before quoted in the Margent, whether the Ieſuites words carry any cleere and ſenſible meaning true or falſe, that hee may the better know how mightie the truth is at the which the enemies are ſo amazed, that being (otherwiſe) almoſt nothing but tongue, yet here are ſpeechleſſe. Note alſo that notwithſtanding that heere it ſtandeth upon their cauſes neck verſe, that they ſhew why rather the mortall bodie of Chriſt cannot be offered in ſacrifice then the immortall, yet do they (as it ſeemeth) in conſcience of their inhabilitie paſſe it ouer in ſilence. As for Iſyh. lib. 1. in Leuit. c. 2. he telleth us how his fleſh was made fit to be eaten, not offered in the Sacrament, for theſe are his words: The Croſſe of Chriſt was ſo ſtrong, that it ſubdued every creature to him that was crucified: and made his fleſh meet for meate by his paſſion, which before his paſsion was unfit to bee eaten, for who deſired to eate the fleſh of God? For if hee had not been crucified, we ſhould not haue eaten the ſacrifice of his bodie: But now we eate that meate, receiving the memorie of his paſsion: where you ſee he ſaith, by crucifying, the fleſh of Chriſt is made fit to be eated, not to be ſacrificed any more.

RHEM. 5. [5. Heauenly things.] As the Church or ſtate of the new Teſtament is commonly called called Regnum cœlorum & Dei, in the Scriptures, so these heauenly things bee probably taken by learned men, for the mysteries of the new Testament. And it seemeth that the paterne giuen to Moses to frame his tabernacle by, was the Church, rather then the heauens themselues: all S. Pauls discourse tending to shew the difference betwixt the new Testament and the old; and not to make comparison between the state of heaven and the old law, Though incidently, because the condition of the new Testament more neerly resembleth the same, then the old state doth, hee sometime may speake somewhat thereof also. Kingdom of heaven, an heavenly things spoken of the church

CARTVV. [5 Heavenly things.] By heavenly things are understood, not the Church alone, nor the Church principally, but Christ first and the blessing in him, then the Church and benefites on her, with duties required from her againe.

Verse. 10. For this is the Testament which I will dispose to the house of Israel after those daies, saith our Lord: Giving my lawes into their minds, and in their heart will I superscribe them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

RHEM. 6. [10. Into their mind] This also and the rest following is fulfilled in the Church and is the proper effect of the new Testament, which is the grace and spirit of loue, grafted in the hearts of the faithfull by the holy Ghost, working in the sacraments & sacrifice of the new law to that effect. Grace the effect of the new Testament.

CARTVV. 6. [10 into their mindes.] So far as by the old Testament is understood the law of the commandements: it was true then, and now also, and ever shall be true, that it giveth no grace, nor can giue which is given onely by the Preaching of the faith of Christ: but as by the old Testament is understood the whole dispensation and stewardship which the Lord used towards his children under the Law in teaching them by shadowes, it must needs be understood comparatiuely that he doth more plentifully write his lawes now then he did then, which is evident by the speech that followeth; for as he saith that under the Gospell he will write his Lawes in their hearts, so hee also saith, that hee will be their God, and they shall be his people: Vnlesse therefore the Iesuites dare say that the Iewes under the Law were not Gods people, and that he was not their God, there is no cause why they should presse these words to a shutting forth of the Fathers from the partaking of the Spirit, by writing the Lords Lawes in their hearrs. Gal. 3. 2. &c.

RHEM. 7. [10. Their God.] This mutuall covenant made betwixt God and the faithfull, is that which was dedicated and established, first in the chalice of his bloud, called therefore the new Testament in his bloud: and which was straight after ratified by the death of the testator, vpon the Crosse. The new Testament or covenant between God and man.

CARTVV. 7. [10. Their God.] The cup of the Lords supper (which you call the chalice) is therefore called the new Testament, because there is a seale and sacrament thereof according as it hath been shewed (upon Matthew 26.) an vsuall and receiued speech of Scripture to giue the name of the signe and seale to the thing signed and sealed. Not (as you falsely say) for thar the covenant was established therewith which could not be but by the reall death of the testator, And your selfe confute it in the next words, when you say that it was after ratified by his death vpon the Crosse: for if it were before established by the chalice, then it was not ratified by his death vpon the Crosse after, vnlesse either one and the same thnig may be done before and after both, or you be able to minse vs some diuersitie between establishing or ratifying; or last of all vnlesse you can shew that that which was once established by the chalice, was afterward disanulled that it might bee re-established by his death vpon the Crosse. Heb. 9. 17.

Verse. 11 And euery one shall not teach his neighbour, and euery one his brother, saying Know our Lord; because all shall know me from the lesser to the greater of them:

RHEM. 8. [11. Shall not teach.] So it was in the primitiue Church, in such specially as were the first founders of our new state in Christ. And that which was verified in the Apostles and other principall men, the Apostle speaketh generally as though it were so in the whole, as S. Peter applieth the like out of Ioel, and our Sauiour so speaketh, when he saith that such as beleeue in him shall work miracles of diuers sorts, Christian men then must not abuse this place to make chalenge of new inspirations and so great knowledge that they need no Scriptures or teaching in this life, as some Heretikes do: with much like reason as shew of Scriptures and the Protestants haue to refuse externall sacrifice. And it is no lesse phantasticall madnes to deny externall sacrifice, Sacraments of Priesthood, then it is to abolish teaching and preaching. The new Testament established by the death of Christ. Scriptures abused for phantastical inspirations. Acts 2. 10. 14. v. 12.

CARTVV. 8. [11. Shall not teach.] Your exposition of the place is untrue, and your collection absurd: your exposition, that this is understood of the first Christians in the Apostles times, when there were extraordinary gifts and miraculous, is manifestly refuted by the circumstance of the place, which is to oppose not the whole time of the Law to the beginning of the Gospell, but the whole time of the Gospell to the whole time of the Law, as your selues haue expounded it in other poynts and clauses of this testimony of the Prophet, which are of the same kind and sute with this. And therefore it is not rightly compared with Mark 16. and Acts 2. which are more restraintiue to the Apostles times and persons then this is, although even in those times of the Apostles wherein the miraculous gifts were rifest, it cannot (as we thinke) be shewed, that (the Apostles excepted) there were any which were taught the mystery of the Gospell otherwise then by the ministeriall teaching of men; yea your owne selues in another place (upon 1. Iohn 2. 27.) affirming, that there is no need that men should teach, but as the unction should teach, where there is more appearance of an immediate teaching of the Spirit without the Church ministery then is here, haue notwithstanding carried these words to the Christians of all times. The meaning therefore of the place is not to shut out from any other people or age the ministeriall preaching, but as in the former points to declare that in comparison of the former times under the Law, they shall all rather bee teachers then then ſchollers. And this is the reaſon why both in this place, and that of Iohn, this is ſpoken unto the Iewes alone, who having had experience of both teachings under the Law and under the Goſpell, might eaſily diſcerne of the great difference of light and knowledge in both eſtates, not unlike Matth. 11. unto that which is between the Scholler and Miniſter. In which regard alſo as Iohn Baptiſt that came in the dawning of the Goſpell, is preferred unto the Prophets: ſo the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, when the ſonne of God after his aſcenſion did by the gifts of the ſpirit ſhine (as it were the Sunne at noone dayes) is preferred unto Iohn himſelfe which is ſet before all the Prophets: but in the Ieſuits expoſition there appeareth nothing but ignorance; their collection is not without as much malice as blindneſſe: for they ſay, that it is no leſſe phantaſticall madneſſe to deny the externall ſacrifice or Prieſthood, then it is to aboliſh teaching. And more too, if by the externall ſacrifice and Prieſthood you meane Chriſts ſacrifice and prieſthood: for ſo much as ſome may bee ſaved without preaching, where none can be without the ſacrifice and prieſthood of Chriſt: but if you meane the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and popiſh prieſthood, what agreement between preaching and Maſſing, what kindred between the miniſtery of the Goſpell and your prieſthood, with what forehead can you place as much ſtrength to apply the death of Chriſt in mumming as in plain ſpeakings; in whiſpering in the eare, as in crying upon the top of the houſe; in hanging him by the heeles (for ſo in your favour we would rather ſay then by the necke) in a ſtring or between the Prieſts fingers, Gal. 3. as in crucifying him before the peoples eyes, as by liuely preaching of the word. Finally, with what Heb. 9.24. face can you ſay, that Chriſt is as well applied by a Maſſe, wherein you (as you ſay) offer Chriſt un- Rom. 15. to his Father, who himſelfe appeareth continually before him, as by the preaching of the Goſpell, wherein (by your owne confeſſion) he is offered to the people.

CHAP. IX.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſ. 8 THE holy Ghoſt ſignifying this: that the way of the holies was ‡ not yet manifeſted, the former tabernacle as yet ſtanding.

RHEM. 1. [8. Not yet manifeſted.] The way to heauen was not open before Chriſts Paſſion: and therefore the Patriarches and good men of the old Teſtament were in ſome other place of reſt vntill then.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Not yet manifeſted.] It is a curſed gloſſe which correcteth the bleſſed Text; and ſo much the more as it is ſo violent a wreſt, which in ſtead of that the holy Writer ſaith, that the way to heaven was not manifeſt in regard of the knowledge, hath ſet downe that the way was not open in regard of entry; as if the way could not be open to enter becauſe it was not manifeſtly knowne. By which reaſon they may ſhut out Chriſtian Infants at this day, which doth not onely not manifeſtly, but not at all know the way to heauen. And if the way to heaven be open to them for entry, although it be ſhut in knowlege: how much more was it open to the faithfull under the Law, which (to ſufficiencie) knew the way to the kingdome of heaven, although not ſo manifeſtly as we do, which is the driſt of the holy writer in all theſe places, where compariſon is made between the peoples of both covenants.

Verſe. 19 For all the commandement of the Law being read of Moyſes to all the people: he taking the bloud of calues and goates with ‡ water and ſcarlet wooll and hyſſope, ſprinkled the very booke alſo it ſelfe and all the people, RHEM. 2. [19. Water.] Here we may learne that the Scriptures conteine not all neceſſarie rites or truths when neither the place to which the Apoſtle alludeth, nor any other mentioneth halfe theſe ceremonies, but he had them by tradition.

CARTVV. 2. [19. Water.] The Writer to the Hebrewes having purpoſe in this whole diſcourſe to ſhew that in the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, were fulfilled all the expiatory ſacrifices under the Law, tied not himſelfe unto the place of Exod. 24. 8. alone, but gathereth a ſumme of the moſt ſolemneſt and moſt publicke ſacrifices for ſinne, whereupon he alludeth to the ſolemne ſacri- Levit. 16. fice of the goates, likewiſe unto the red Cow, of whoſe aſhes was made the water of expiation, or the Numb. 19. cleanſing water, in the confection wherof are ſpecified all the things here reckoned up, and moe too: and therefore it is an extreme either ignorance or impudency that the Ieſuites dare giue out, that not halfe theſe ceremonies are mentioned in any place, but were receiued by tradition, declaring to all the world what notable bankrupts they are, giuing their credit, or deſperate debts, which themſelues (as appeareth) knew they can never make good, onely thereby to gaine a little time with their ignorant and partiall heades.

Verſe. 9. Which is a parable of the time preſent according to which are offered gifts and hoſtes, which cannot concerning the conſcience make perfect ‡ him that ſerveth.

RHEM. 3. [9 Perfect him that ſerveth.] All things done in the old Teſtament and Prieſthood were figures of Chriſts actions.

CARTVV. 3. [9 Perfect him that ſerveth.] Not all things (for ſome prefigured his perſon, holineſſe and ſufferings, and ſome the benefites beſtowed upon the Church and other matters) but onely ſuch as may be ſo expounded by other Scriptures eſpecially of the new Teſtament.

ANNOTA-

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 4. Having a golden Sensar, and the Arke of the Testament covered about on every part with gold, in the which was a golden potte hauing Manna, and the rod of Aaron that had blossomed, and the Tables of the Testament.

RHEM 3.[4. A golden pot.] The Protestants count it superstitious to keepe with honour and reuerence the holy memories or monuments of Gods benefites and myracles, or the tokens of Christs Passion, as his Crosse, garments, or other things appertaining to him or his Saincts, and thinke it impossible that such things should dure so long: when they may here see the reuerent and long reseruation of Manna, which of it selfe was most apt to putrifie, and of Aarons rod, onely for that it sodenly florished by miracle, the table of the Testament &c. See a notable place in S. Cyril, li. 6. cont. Iulian, where he defendeth against Iulian the Apostataes blasphemie, the keeping and honoring of that Crosse or wood with Christ died on. See also S. Paulinus ep. 11. & what reuerence S. Hierom & the faithfull of his time did to the sepulchres of Christ & his Martyrs, and to their relikes We reuerence and worship (saith he) euery where Martyrs sepulchres, & putting the holy ashes to our eyes, if we may, we touch it with our mouth also: and do some thinke, that the monument wherein our Lord was buried, is to be neglected? But our Protestants cannot skill of this, they had rather follow Vigilantius, Iulianus the Apostata and such Maisters, then the holy Doctors and euident practise of the Church in all ages.

They continue without putrefaction. The Holy Crosse. The sepulchers of Christ and his Saints. Ep. 17. 5.

CARTWW 3.[4. A golden pot.] There is a greater difference between reseruation of Popish relicts and of the manna or Aarons rod, then between Mantua and Rome, which if these Italian shepheards could not see with their eyes, they might haue easily groped with their hands: For beside reseruation common to both, there is no resemblance neither in the things nor in their causes, nor in their effects, nor in any other materiall and pertinent point: For first of all these heere are the miraculous and wonderfull extraordinary workes of the Lord wherein his glorious Maiestie did euidently shine: whereas in the Crosse and other such trumperie of Saints Relickes, there is nothing beside the Carpenters Axe, or the Tailors Sheeres, &c. whereupon although there be as great difference, towards the care of reseruation, as between the Princes robe wherein hee goeth to Parliament, and the patched cloak of a beggar wherein he lyeth under a hedge; yet this is the last and the least, or rather no sufficient matter of reseruation, which wholy consisteth in that they were commanded to be reserved of the Lord, without the which commandement, not so much as Moses rod wherewith he wrought so many, so divers, and so great miracles, came unto the honour of reseruation. This commandement of the Lord when you cannot shew, your reseruation (religious especially) is (as the remnant of sacrifices under the Law kept aboue their appointed time) abhominable, or to speake more answerably to the baseneese of your Relickes, as the Manna which stunck when it was laid up upon any other day then the Saboth even, or as raw flesh in the middest of Summer, which having no salt to preserue it against putrefaction, casteth out a most noysome sauour to all such as approach it. And out of this difference of causes, the Lords commandement in the one, and your drowsie dreaming invention in the other, followeth this diversity of effects that they by the word of the Lord were preserved in their full strength, where yours wanting that salt and seasoning of the Lords commandement, mould, rot, weare away, and receiue all manner of corruptible change that their severall natures can admit. And even in this decay of your conserved things taught by daily experience of your selues which keep them, proved by whole Treatises of our men, confessed by men of your own sort, as hath been before alleaged, do manifestly as well convince the extreme difference of the Lords Manna, and your Mammockes, of his Rod and your rod, as proue that it is a meere wil-worship of your own braine. And notwithstanding all this excellencie of these reserved things, yet were not these holy monuments ever worshipped, as your scraps are: so that we could hardly haue made choise of a place of Scripture which sweepeth away the filth of your Popish Relikes cleaner then this which you haue brought for defence of them.

Look opusculaCaimni.

Cyril lib. contra Iulian. hath nothing of the reseruation of the crosse, but speaketh of making new the causeless cause of which superstition in the elder Churches, with good cause why (if then it were iust) it is now no more so, hath been before declared upon Math 14. But it is to be obserued that unto Iulian obiecting against the Christians the adoration of the Crosse, Cyril so answereth that he defendeth no adoration, but of it onely he affirmeth that it is made in remembrance of all good and vertue.

Touching the reverence and worship given to the sepulchre of Christ, and Martyrs in Ieromes time, looke the answer before upon Math. 17. 9. & 28. 1. What iudgement also the best antiquity in the elder Churches had of reseruation, the Reader may gather by their iudgemnt (upon 1. Cor. 1. 29.) against the reservation of the Sacrament.

Verse. 5. And over it were the Cherubins of glorie ouershadowing the propitiatorie, of which things it is not needfull to speake now particularly.

RHEM. 4.[4. Cherubins.] You see it is a sond thing, to conclude vpon the first or second commandement, that there should bee no sacred images in the Church, when euen among these people that were must prone to idolatrie, and grosse in imagination of spirituall things such as Angels are, and to whom the precept was specially giuen, the same God that forbad them grauen idols, did command these images of Angels to bee made and set in the soueraine holiest place of all the tabernacle or Temple. By which is plaine, that much more the images of Christ and his B. Mother and Saincts, that may be more truly pourtered then meere spirituall substances can bee, are not contrary to Gods commandemeut, nor against his honour or repugnant to any other Scripture at all, which condemne onely the idols or pourtraitures of the Heathen made for adoration of falſe Gods.

CART vv. 5. [5 Cherubins.] Vpon the ſecond onely, which commandeth all the kinds of outward worſhip, and not upon the firſt and ſecond commandement, we conclude againſt all making of images in caſe of Religion. Againſt which concluſion marke how not onely irregiouſly, but ſottiſhly the Ieſuites diſpute: for of that the Iewes (a people prone to idolatrie, and groſſe in imagination of ſpirituall things) had therein, they would conclude that he doth much more permit them unto Chriſtians under the Goſpell; as if they would ſay, that becauſe the Iewes being children, (as the Apoſtle calleth them) were ſuffered to haue ſuch groſſe rudiments to be their bookes to help their incapacity; therefore we being men grown, and of quick conceite of heavenly things, ſhould haue ſuch rude Schoole-maiſters. A ſecond compariſon they haue, that foraſmuch as theſe Cherubins were ſet in the holieſt place: therefore they may be ſet in other places which are not ſo ſacred as they: but if you remember that the holieſt place (by the Writers own interpretation) ſignifieth the higheſt heavens: then you muſt needs forthwith underſtand that this is your reaſon, that becauſe Images of the Cherubins were ſet up in the place which repreſenteth the heavenly ſtate of the life to come, therefore they muſt be ſet up in earth, and in this preſent life. Againe, becauſe they were ſet up in a place furtheſt removed from the peoples ſight, therefore they may be ſet up in places, where the people may not onely ſee them, but kiſſe them. The laſt compariſon is, that ſeeing the Angels were purtrayed, which cannot be ſo truely purtraied as Chriſt and his B. mother, therefore they much more: where cleane contrary we may conclude, for that the Lord ſetting up images would make none of things which can poſſibly be purtrayed by any Art of man, therefore men ought much leſſe to do it. And herein the Ieſuites are groſſely deceiued that they think there was any manner of repreſentation of the nature or ſubſtance of the Angels in the leaſt or ſmalleſt point of all, but the reſemblance is of their office and function alone: ſo that if this proue any Imagerie in the Church, yet it proueth none of the perſons of Chriſt and his Saints, but onely of their office.

Gil. 4.

Having thus diſcouered the ſottery of the Ieſuites reaſons, for fuller anſwer let the Reader know that this is a weapon of their fore-fathers, the old antient Idolaters in Tertullians time, who brought this reaſon of the Cherubins which the Ieſuites do: to whom as he anſwereth, that it was not done for worſhip, but onely for an ornament of the Arke: ſo it may be further anſwered, that to do the like of that which the Iewes did, contrary to the generall commandement, a man muſt haue the like ſpeciall commandement that they had from the Lord. As for their old reſtraint that the Scripture condemneth onely the pourtraitures of the Heathen made for adoration of falſe Gods, it is euidently confuted by Moſes, which oppoſeth the voyce of God heard in the Mountaine, to all Images, and namely to the Image of God himſelfe, who therefore is declared to haue appeared in no likeneſſe, leſt they ſhould make an image of him: whereas by the Ieſuites anſwer, to reſtraine the Iewes from Idolatry he ſhould haue oppoſed ſome likeneſſe of God and of his Angels to the reſemblance of the Gods of the Heathen: but heereof let the Reader ſee more otherwhere upon Math. 4. 11. & Act. 17. 29. Theſe giuing the title of bleſſed to the Virgine which indeed doth truely belong unto her; where Chriſt is nakedly ſpoken of in the ſame place they are both coupled together; in them (whoſe doctrine of her is ſo blaſphemous as hath been declared upon Act. 1.) may breed ſuſpition, that the preheminence they giue our Saviour Chriſt in naming him before the Virgine they will counterpoiſe, or even weigh down, by a title given to her which they vouchſafe not unto him. We are the more iealous of them as there is nothing (in a manner) of Poperie ſo groſſe, but theſe covertly and underhand will maintaine: but if it be otherwiſe it repenteth us not to note it ſhortly that it may ſerue them for a caution of more circumſpection in their writings.

Verſe. 10. Onely in meates and in drinkes, and diuers baptiſmes, and Iuſtices of the fleſh laid on them (untill the time of correction.

RHEM. 6. [10. Vntill the time of correction.] All thoſe groſſe and carnall ſacrifices, ceremonies, and obſeruations inſtituted to cleanſe and purifie the fleſh from legall irregularities and impurities onely, and not reaching to the purging of the ſoules and conſciences of men being commanded not for euer, but till Chriſts comming, ceaſed then: and better, more forcible, and more ſpirituall Sacraments were inſtituted in their place. For wee nay not imagine Chriſt to haue taken away the old, and put none in their place: or to alter the ſacraments onely into other ſacraments externall, and not alſo to tranſlate the ſacrifices to ſome other more excellent, for it is called, Tempus correctionis, non abolitionis ſacrificii aut legis: the time of correction not of aboliſhing ſacrifice or Law, Neither haue they more reaſon to affirme Chriſts one oblation vpon the Croſſe to haue rather taken away all kind of ſacrifice, then all maner of Sacraments. The time & ſtate of the new Teſtament is not made lawleſſe, hoſtleſſe, or without ſacrifice, but it is the time of correction or reformation and abettering all the foreſaid things.

Sacrifice not taken away by the new Teſtament, but changed into a better.

CART vv. 6. [10 Vntill the time of correction.] The ſhadow of the word correction is not able to keep your Popiſh ſacrifice from the Sunne burning of this Epiſtle which parcheth it even to the very root: For the correction of Gods worſhip will well abide the utter taking away of ſome things in the worſhip, without any manner of ſubſtitution, albeit it will not endure the utter removing of all: for ſeeing he which addeth that which was not, or taketh away ſome thing of that which was, correcteth, it is a childiſh and babiſh reliefe that you ſeek in the word correction, eſpecially ſeeing the Writer to the Hebrewes, even a little before declareth that the former worſhip touching the manner did even vaniſh away, being even neere to vaniſhing when the Prophet called it old; but granting that there muſt needs be in the time of the new Teſtament ſome Prieſthood and Sacrifice which muſt better the former under the Law, where ſhall it be found more ſoueraigne then in having one onely for many, one and the ſame for Prieſt, Sacrifice, and Temple which is able infinitely to work a better effect by that one and once one'y offered, then all the Prieſts and ſacrifices under the Law. And unleſſe there be a full accompliſhment of many things under the Law in the onely perſon of our Saviour Chriſt, tell us, I beſeech you, what haue you in ſteed of the brazen ſerpent, what for the Nazarites, what for the Propitiatorie, what for a hundreth things whereof there is no correſpondence under the Goſpell but in Chriſt alone?

Verſe 12. Neither by the bloud of Goats or of Calues, but by his own bloud entred in once into the Holies, eternall redemption being found.

RHEM. 6. [12. Eternall redemption.] No one of the ſacrifices, nor all the ſacrifices of the old law, could make that one generall price, ranſome, and redemption of mankind, and of all ſinnes, ſauing this one higheſt Prieſt Chriſt, and the one ſacrifice of his bloud once offered vpon the Croſſe. Which ſacrifice of redemption cannot be often done, becauſe Chriſt could not die but once, though the figures alſo thereof in the law of nature and of Moſes, were truely called ſacrifices, as ſpecially this high & maruelous commemoration of the ſame in the holy Sacrament of the altar, according to the rite of the new Teſtament is moſt truly and ſingularly (as S. Auguſtine calleth it) a ſacrifice. But neither this ſort, nor the other of the old law, being often repeated and done by many Prieſts (all which were and are ſinners themſelues) could bee the generall redeeming and conſummating ſacrifice: nor any of thoſe Prieſts, nor all thoſe Prieſts together, either of the law of Nature or of Aarons, or Melchiſedecks order (except Chriſt alone) could bee the generall redeemers of the world.

One onely ſacrifice on the Croſſe the redemption of the world, and one onely Prieſt (Chriſt) the redeemer thereof. Lib. de Sp. & lit. c. 11.

And this is the Apoſtles meaning in all this compariſon and oppoſition of Chriſts death to the old ſacrifices, and of Chriſt to their Prieſts: and not that Chriſts death or ſacrifice of the Croſſe ſhould take away all ſacrifice, or proue that thoſe Aaronicall offices were no true ſacrifices at all, nor thoſe Prieſts, verily Prieſts. They were true Prieſts, and true ſacrifices, though none of thoſe ſacrifices were the high, capitall, and generall ſacrifice of our price and redemption: nor none of them, or of thoſe Prieſts, could without reſpect of this one ſacrifice of Chriſts death, worke any thing to Gods honour, or remiſſion of ſinnes, as the Iewes did falſely imagine, nor referring them at all to this generall redemption and remiſſion by Chriſt, but thinking them to bee abſolute ſacrifices in themſelues. And that to haue been the errour of the Hebrewes, you may read in S. Auguſtine. lib. 3. doct. Chriſt. c. 5. And this, we tell the Proteſtants, is the onely purpoſe of the Apoſtle,

The Apoſtles diſputation being onely againſt the errour of the Iewes concerning their ſacrifices and Prieſts: the Proteſtants applying it againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and Prieſts of the new Teſtament.

But they be ſo groſſe, or ignorant in the Scriptures, and ſo maliciouſly ſet againſt God and the Churches truth, that they peruerſly and fooliſhly turne the whole diſputation againſt the ſacrifice of the B. Maſſe, and the Prieſts of the new Teſtament: as though he held, that the ſacrifice of the altar were the generall redemption or redeeming ſacrifice, or that it had no relation to Chriſts death, or that it were not the repreſentation & moſt liuely reſemblance of the ſame, or were not inſtituted and done, to apply in particular to the vſe of the partakers, that other generall benefit of Chriſts one oblation vpon the Croſſe. Againſt the Iewes then onely S. Paul diſputeth, and againſt the falſe opinion they had of their Prieſts and ſacrifices, to which they atributed all remiſſion and redemption, without reſpect of Chriſts death.

CARTVV. 6. [12. Eternall redemption.] Although the Ieſuites colours were faire, yet hauing no oyle of truth they could not cleaue: but this rotten ſtuffe gineth not ſo much as any colour. They would make ſhew of ſetting out to the full the vertue of Chriſts Prieſthood and ſacrifice, and of debaſing all others in compariſon of it. They doe (good Reader) neither the one nor the other. They ſay that no one Prieſt, nor all the Prieſts under or before the Law; no one ſacrifice, nor all the ſacrifices aboue named (Chriſts onely excepted) can be the generall ranſome and redemption of mankinde. Thou wilt ſay, Is it not well ſaid? if the words be taken, as they indeed and truth doe ſignifie, very well we will not deny: for thereof will follow, that if it be the generall price and ranſome of all mankinde, it is conſequently of every particular man which ſhall be ſaued, whereof muſt alſo follow, that all other after it are (to ſpeake no more) ſuperfluous and vnneceſſary, but their meaning is as may appeare by their whole courſe of doctrine, that although Chriſts Prieſthood and ſacrifice alone be the ranſome for all mens ſinnes, yet both the ſacrifices vnder and before the Law, and their Maſſing ones may be the ranſome and price of particular perſons or aſſemblies ſo far as they be referred vnto the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe, which is both falſe and blaſphemous, and confuted in this place: for it teacheth euidently, that none of the ſacrifices of the Law being carnall, were able to purge the conſcience of any man, or any one ſinne of his conſcience, but onely the ſacrifice of Chriſt offered up by the eternall Spirit. And therefore alſo it is ſaid, that the ſinnes committed vnder the old Teſtament, were purged by the death of Chriſt. It is true that the ſacrifices vnder and before the Law were true ſacrifices, and had a worthy fruit of repreſentation and figuring out the death of Chriſt, in whom the ſinnes were forgiven, but they never had vertue of themſelues to make expiation for any one of the leaſt when they were beſt and moſt lawfully uſed: how much leſſe can the ſacrifice of the Maſſe haue any ſuch vertue, which having no uſe to figure out the death of Chriſt already executed, is as abſurd as to ſet up a ſhadow when the body is come, a type when the truth is in place, and all one in effect as to bring Chriſt againe from heaven, or rather to deny that he is yet come in the fleſh, a poynt of the Antichriſtianitie which Iohn ſpeaketh of in his firſt Epiſtle. And if there can be no commemoratiue ſacrifice in the proper ſpeech, much leſſe can there be the ſame ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelfe as the Papiſts do blaſpheme. This is indeed a Sacrament of commemoration and repreſentation of his death and ſacrifice upon the Croſſe: but to haue a figuratiue ſacrifice of a ſacrifice already executed, is abſurd, ſeeing thereof it ſhould come that the Aaronicall ſacrifice being a figure of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, as it is indeed, and a figure of the Popiſh ſacrifice (as they ſay, and muſt needs follow of this aſſertion) there ſhould be one figuratiue and repreſentatiue ſacrifice of another. And therefore the ſpeech of Auguſtine and others calling the repreſentation of the death of Chriſt a ſacrifice, muſt needs be an unproper ſpeech. And euen in this place they haue alledged. lib. de spirit. & lit. c. 11. it is moſt evident, for he defineth in the ſame place, that it ſtandeth in thankeſgiving. And the very words of moſt true and moſt ſingular ſacrifice, do argue plainly, that there are other ſacrifices of the ſame kinde, otherwiſe this could not be the moſt true and moſt ſingular. Wherefore it is evident, that Auguſtine meaneth not any reall or externall ſacrifice, but onely a ſpirituall as is prayer, almes, &c. whereof this is the chiefe, otherwiſe if he ſhould meane it of externall and reall ſacrifice, he ſhould preferre it, and make it more true and more ſingular then the ſacrifice which Chriſt offered in his owne perſon, which hee maketh another ſacrifice from this, and whereof he calleth this a ſimilitude. As for their impudent ſhift in charging theſe Hebrewes that they gaue remiſſion and redemption to their Legall ſacrifices, without reſpect of Chriſts death, it hath been before confuted, and is alſo overthrown out of this place, where he ſpeaking of himſelf and the Hebrewes to whom he wrote, ſaith, that Chriſts blond cleanſeth our conſciences from dead workes to ſerue the liuing God; which could not be truely ſaid if they had reſted in the carnall ſacrifice without looking to Chriſt. In which words alſo is manifeſtly overthrowne the popiſh diſtinction, that Chriſts ſacrifice is a generall price, making the Maſſe a propitiatory ſacrifice for thoſe particulars for whom it is ſaid or ſong; whereas the Writer to the Hebrewes doth apply the ſacrifice of Chriſts death vpon the Croſſe to himſelfe particularly, and to the Hebrewes to whom he wrote. And where they would father this error of the Hebrewes, that they had no regard vnto Chriſt in their ſacrifices, vpon Auguſtine, lib. de doct Chriſt. 3. c. 6. they doe notably falſifie him, hee aſcribeth it vnto the Iewes: but it is their groſſe ignorance that they cannot put a difference between the Iewes and Hebrewes, by the later whereof in that time, are onely underſtood thoſe Iewes which dwelled in Ieruſalem; nay, Auguſtine doth ſay the cleane contrary to that they haue ſet downe: for in the ſame chapter he affirmeth that the beleevers in Ieruſalem, the ſame that here are called Hebrewes, did the cleane contrary of that which the Ieſuites aſcribe vnto them.

Apud Proſper. in Sent. Auguſt.

Verſe 15. And therefore he is the Mediator of the new Teſtament: that death being a meane vnto the redemption of theſe preuarications which were vnder the former Teſtemant, they that are called may receiue the promiſe of eternall inheritance.

RHEM. 7 [15. Of thoſe preuarications] The Proteſtants do vnlearnedly imagine, that becauſe all ſinnes be remitted by the force of Chriſts paſſion, that therefore there ſhould be no other ſacrifice after his death. Whereas indeed they might as well ſay, there ought neuer to haue been ſacrifice appointed by God, either in the law of Nature, or of Moſes: as all their arguments made againſt the Sacrifice of the Church vpon the Apoſtles diſcourſe, proue as well, or rather onely, that there were no ſacrifices of Aarons order or Leuiticall order at all. For againſt the Iewes falſe opinion concerning them, doth he diſpute, and not a word touching the ſacrifice of the Church, vnto which in all this diſcourſe he neuer oppoſeth Chriſts ſacrifice vpon the Croſſe, all Chriſtian men well knowing that the hoſt and oblation of thoſe two, though they differ in maner and externall form, yet is indeed all one.

The Apoſtle then ſheweth here plainly, that all the ſinnes that euer were remitted ſince the beginning of the world, were no otherwiſe forgiuen, but by the force and in reſpect of Chriſts Paſſion, Yet it followeth not thereupon, that the oblation of Abel, Abraham, Aaron, &c. were no ſacrifices, as by the Heretickes fooliſh deduction it ſhould doe, S. Paul not oppoſing Chriſts Paſſion to them, for the intent to proue them to haue been no ſacrifices, but to proue that they were not abſolute ſacrifices, nor the redeeming nor conſummating Sacrifice, which could not be many, nor done by many Prieſts but by one, and at one time, by a more excellent Prieſt then any of them, or any other mere mortall man.

Caluins argument againſt the ſacrifice of the altar, maketh no leſſe againſt the ſacrifice of the old Law.

And that you may ſee the blaſphemous pride and ignorance of Caluin, and in him, of all his fellows: read (ſo many as may read Heretical books) his commentarie vpon this place, and there you ſhal ſee him gather vpon this, that Chriſts death had force from the beginning and was the remedy for all ſinnes ſince the creation of the world, therefore there muſt bee no more but that one ſacrifice of Chriſts death. Which muſt needs by his deduction hold (as it doth indeed) no leſſe againſt the old ſacrifices then the new ſacrifice of the Church, and ſo take away all, which is againſt the Apoſtles meaning and all religion.

CARTVV. 7. [15. Of thoſe prevarications.] It ſeemeth that you haue the ſame religion in diſputing that you haue in praying, oftentimes to mumble up and repeate the ſame things, there being nothing here which was not in the former Annotation; where hath been ſhewed, that there was good and neceſſary uſe of the ſacrifices under and before the Law, where there is none under the Goſpell after the alone ſacrifice vpon the Croſſe. And it were a hard matter for the Writer to the Hebrewes to oppoſe the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe vnto the Churches ſacrifice, which hath none reall and externall but onely that alone which Chriſt in his owne perſon did performe, as appeareth both by the reaſons alledged, and by his perpetuall ſilence of it in that place where the ſpeech and treatiſe had been moſt fit. And you that ſay, we may as well deſtroy the ſacrifice under the Law before the offering of Chriſt vpon the croſſe, as deſtroy a repreſentatiue ſacrifice after it: may as well ſay, that we may deſtroy the Sancta Sanctorum under the Law, becauſe we admit no other typicall and figuratiue Sancta Sanctorum vnder the Goſpell, but onely the heauens which the holieſt place did ſhadow forth. But herein you paſſe your ſelues in impudencie, that affirme your ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be all one in ſubſtance with the ſacrifice of Chriſt; and onely to differ in the manner and externall forme from it. Is it not different in ſubſtance and in deed? that is moulden and mouſe-eaten, this living for ever, or (as you ſay) this alwayes living; this lying three dayes and three nights in the graue; that is in earth holden captiue in the Prieſts hands, this in heauen leading captiuitie captiue, and giuing gifts vnto the ſonnes of men; that neither able to ſtand nor to ſit, to goe nor to walke, this ſitting or ſtanding, walking and going in the heavens, as vnto his Maieſtie ſeemeth good: but hereof we ſhall haue cauſe to ſpeake more exactly afterward, although the world would would not containe the manifold differences and wonderfull distances more then of the East from the West, and of the heavens from the earth, that might be written of this bable of the Masse, and of the glorious person of the sonne of God. Your selues also holding it a remembrance of the sacrifice of Christ upon the Crosse, with what compasse of reason can you make it one and the same thing in substance, differing onely in manner and externall forme, seeing the thing signified and represented, must be substantially differing from the signe and thing that representeth it. And hereunto Augustines iudgement before alledged, which maketh these two most distinct and severall Sacrinces, that which our Sauiour Christ offered upon the Crosse, and the Sacrament offered in his last Supper.

Verse. 20. Saying, | This is the bloud of the Testament, which God hath commanded vnto you.

RHEM. 8. [20. This is the bloud.] Christs death was necessarie for the full confirmation, ratification, and accomplishment of the new Testament, though it was begunne to bee dedicated in the sacrifice of his last supper, being also within the compasse of his Passion. Which is euident by the words pronounced by Christ ouer the holy chalice, which be correspondent to the words that were spoken (as the Apostle here declareth) in the first sacrifice of the dedication of the old law, hauing also expresse mention of remission of sinnes thereby, as by the bloud of the new Testament. Whereby it is plaine, that the B. Chalice of the altar hath the very sacrificall bloud in it that was shed vpon the Crosse, in and by which, the new Testament, which is spirit, grace, and remission) was dedicated, and doth consist. And therefore it is cleere, that many diuine things, which to the Heretickes or ignorant may seeme to be spoken onely of Christs sacrifice vpon the Crosse, be indeed verified and fulfilled also in the sacrifice of the altar. Whereof S. Paul for the causes aforesaid would not treate in plaine termes. See Isychius li. 1. in Leuit. c. 4. paulo post initium, applying all these things to the immolation of Christ also in the Sacrament.

The correspondence of words in dedicating both Testaments, proueth the reall presence of bloud in the Chalice.

CART VV. 8. [20. This is the bloud.] This place is so cleere against their carnal and fleshly cup of the Sacrament, that it may bee a wonder the earth is able to set vp one that can wrangle with it: for if the Testament can haue no place but in the reall and actuall death of the Testator: it is euident that the cup which was before his death cannot be the blood wherein the Testament is established but alone, the seale and pledge thereof, according as it hath been sufficiently shewed before. Neither is it any maruell that the words of the law are applied vnto the Sacrament of Christs blood when by vertue of a sacramentall vnion the name of the thing signified is giuen to the figure, and on the other side the name of the figure is giuen vnto the thing signified: but where the writer to the Hebrewes restraineth the ratification of the new Testament vnto the reall death of Christ, the Iesuites (neuer answerlesse, how argumentlesse soeuer they be) say, that by the cup in the sacrament the new Testament was begun to be dedicated and ratified which was after accomplished by the bloud of his crosse. It is true indeed that all the sufferings of Christ from his conception by the holy Ghost vnto the last breath hee yeelded vpon the crosse are parcels of that great ransome which our S. Christ paid for our sins, and therefore that that part of our redemption begun before and was accomplished vpon the crosse: therefore it is a grosse ignorance of the Iesuites which to make the supper a sacrifice, set it within the compasse of the passion meaning (as it seemeth) the night of that day wherein he suffered, considering that his passion was intermingled throughout his whole life, there being no day in the whole course of his mortall life wherein he drunck not (at the least) some one drop or other of that cup which God had appointed him to drinke for vs: but that it was in the action of the supper any such speciall suffering as may lift vp to the dignitie and honour of a sacrifice in the bloud whereof the new Testament began to be dedicated, is a mere fable: for if the passion of Christ be considered more largely in all his sufferings, then it is euident that the Testament began not then to be dedicated but with his conception, yea it is so far that this Sacrament of the Eucharist should go in account of a sacrifice wherewith the sinnes of the world began to bee ransomed that it is foolishly and vnadvisedly reckoned amongst the passions of Christ which is as free from all suffering as any action can be: so that although it cannot be seuered from all manner of passion as no other action whatsoeuer, yet is it free from all perpession or painfull passion carried not unto that part of Christs obedience, which is in suffering whatsoeuer the Lord had laid upon him for our breach of the Law, but to that other part of his obdience which standeth in the accomplishment and fulfilling of the law for vs that we hauing remission of all our sins in his passions might haue the perfect righteousnes of the law by his actions. And if the Sacrament of the Lords supper be a beginning of the dedication of the Testament in Christs bloud: let them tell vs what was in the sacrifice of the law answerable and proportionable vnto this sacrifice vnder the Gospel. The sacrifices of the law are euery where compared with the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, & the beasts blood with his holy blood, but that they are compared with the sacrament of the supper is yet to seeke; especially for matter of purgation and expiation of sins Isichius li. 1. in Leuit. c. 4.

Verse 23 It is necessarie therefore that | the examplers of the Celestials be cleansed with these, but the celestials also themselues with better hostes then these.

In the old Testament were figures of the new: in the new is resemblance of the heauenly state.

RHEM. 9. [23. The examplers.] All the offices, places, vessels, and instruments, of the old law, were but figures and resemblances of the state and sacraments of the new Testament, which are here called celestials, for that they are the liuely image of the heauenly state next ensuing: which bee therefore specially dedicated and sanctified in Christs bloud, sacrificed on the altar, and sprinkled vpon the faithfull, as the old figures and people were cleansed by the bloud of beasts, and therefore by a transition vsuall in the holy Scriptures, the Apostle sodenly passeth in the sentence immediatly following, and turneth his talke to Christs entrance into heauen, the state whereof, both by the Sacraments of the old law, and also more specially by them of the new, is prefigured.

CARTVV.9. [23 The exampler.] Albet it be not againſt us which you heere ſet down, but againſt you directly, as that which implyeth that our Sacraments of the new Teſtament prefiguring (as you ſay) heaven and heavenly ſtate, are not the ſame with them, yet if you were put to proofe of this aſſertion, your honeſteſt anſwer would be to be none ſute: ſeeing not onely this place hath nothing for it, but the next verſe unto it doth overthrow it: for as it is ſaid that Chriſt entred into the holy places which haue no reſemblance or prefiguration of another holy place, as the holy place in the ſanctuary was a prefiguration of it: ſo it may be ſaid of all other the things of the new Teſtament, that they are the truth it ſelfe, not ſhadowes or figures of the heavenly things to come: ſo farre is it that they do more ſpecially prefigure the ſtate of heavenly things, then the holy things of the Law: for notwithſtanding that the holy Sacraments do figure and not prefigure (as you ignorantly and Iewiſhly ſpeake) our Saviour Chriſt yet they ſet forth rather what hee was in ignominy and upon the Croſſe, then what he is now, and ever hereafter in his glorie.

Heb. 1. 14. 17.

Verſe 25. Nor that hee ſhould ſ offer himſelfe often, as the high Prieſt entreth into the Holies, everie yeare in the bloud of other.

Chriſt once offered in bloody ſort, but unbloudily often, namely in the ſacrifice of the Altar.

RHEM.10. [25. Offer himſelfe often.] As Chriſt neuer died but once, nor neuer ſhall die againe, ſo in that violent, painefull, and bloudy ſort he can neuer be offered againe, neither needeth he ſo to be offered any more: hauing by that one action of ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, made the full ranſome, redemption and remedy for the ſinnes of the whole world. Neuertheleſſe as Chriſt died and was offered after a ſort in all the ſacrifices of the Law and Nature, ſince the beginning of the world (all which were figures of this one oblation vpon the Croſſe, ſo is he much rather offered in the ſacrifice of the altar of the new Teſtament, incomparable more neerely, diuinely, and truly expreſſing his death, his body broken, his bloud ſhed, then did any figure of the old law, or other ſacrifice that euer was, as being indeed, (though in hidden, ſacramentall, myſticall, and vnbloudy manner (the very ſelfeſame B. body and bloud, the ſelfeſame hoſt, oblation and ſacrifice, that was done vpon the croſſe.

The ſacrifice of the altar and that on the croſſe both one.

And his truth is moſt euident by the very forme of words vſed by our Sauiour in the inſtitution and conſecration of the holy Sacrament, and by the profeſſion of all the holy Doctors. Our ſacrifice ſaith S. Cyprian, is correſpondent to the Paſſion of Chriſt, And, The ſacrifice that wee offer is the Paſſion of Chriſt. ep.63.num.4.& num.7. S.Auguſtine de fid. ad Pet.c.19. in thoſe carnall ſacrifices was the prefiguring of the fleſh of Chriſt, which hee was to offer for ſins, and of the bloud, which he was to ſhed, but in this Sacrifice is the commemoration of the fleſh of Chriſt which he hath now giuen, and of the bloud which he hath ſhed in illis prænuntiabatur occidendus, in hoc annuntiatur occiſus. In them he was foreſhewed as to be killed: in theſe he is ſhewed, as killed. And S.Gregorie Nazianzene ſaith, orat in morbum, that the Prieſt in this ſacrifice, immiſcet ſe magnis Chriſti Paſſionibus. S.Ambroſe li.1. Offic.c.48. Offertur Chriſtus in imagine quaſi recipiens paſſionem. Alexander the firſt, ep.ad omnes Orthodox. num.4. 10.1. Conc. Cuius corpus & ſanguis conficitur, paſſio etiam celebratur. S. Gregorie, hom.37. in Euang. So often as we offer the hoſt of his Paſſion, ſo often we renew his Paſſion. And, He ſuffereth againe in myſterie. And Iſychius, li.2.c.8. in Leuit. poſt. med, By the ſacrifice of the onely-begotten many things are giuen vnto vs to wit, the remiſſion or pardoning of all mankind, and the ſingular introduction or bringing in of the myſteries of the new Teſtament.

The Fathers call it the vnbloudy ſacrifice of the altar.

And the ſaid fathers and others, by reaſon of the difference in the manner of Chriſts preſence and oblation in reſpect of that on the Croſſe, called this the vnbloudy ſacrifice, as Caluin himſelfe confeſſeth but anſwereth them in the pride of hereticall ſpirit, with theſe words. Nihil moror quod ſic loquantur veteres Scriptores, that is, I paſſe not for it, that the ancient writers do ſo ſpeak, calling the diſtinction of blouddy and vnblouddy ſacrifice, ſcholaſticall and ſtiuolous, and diabolicum commentum, a deuiliſh deuiſe. With ſuch ignorant and blaſphemous men we haue to do, that thinke they vnderſtand the Scriptures better then all the fathers.

Caluins contempt of the Fathers. Comment. in 9. Heb.

CARTVV.11. [25 Offer himſelfe often.] The Writer to the Hebrewes proueth that Chriſt cannot be offered againe, not ſo much as once a yeare, much leſſe daily, becauſe hee cannot die againe, for that his ſacrifice cannot be without his death. To this argument the Ieſuites anſwer, that hee cannot bee offered by a bloudie and violent death, but that he may be offered in a myſterie, which is a groſſe begging of that which hee affirmeth cannot be: For hee ſaith hee cannot be offered but by death, meaning violent, the Ieſuites in flat contradiction ſay that hee may be offered although it be not by violent death, And for colour of this anſwer they ſay he was offered often under the Law without his death, which is as ſottiſh as the anſwer it ſelfe: for doth it follow becauſe hee was offered before in a myſterie when he had no body to be offered truely in, that therefore he may ſo be offered after hee had a body; if they ſay he hath indeed a body, but a body wherein he can no more die then when hee had no body at all; yet that is no anſwer: for the offering which they fabulouſly imagine in his laſt Supper when hee had a body which could die (and which indeed died the day of that night wherein he miniſtred the Supper) ought to haue been truely ſlaine, or elſe (by this rule) not to haue the nature of a Sacrifice. And how forſaken are they of all iudgement which make the like reaſon of a repreſentatiue ſacrifice after the ſacrifice of the Croſſe exhibited and perfected, which was before it was extant: which is aſmuch as if they ſhould ſay that there is as great uſe of a portraite or counterfeit of a man when he is preſent before our eyes, as when he is abſent or rather never ſeen. It is true, that as under the Law his death to come was needfully ſhadowed, ſo being paſt it muſt behouefully be now remembred: which thing when it is done ſo effectually by the preaching of the Word (whereunto the Sacraments are appendant) as if Chriſt were againe crucified upon the croſſe before our eyes, what need is there of this forge of ſacrifice and other traſh (caſt in the mould of mens braine) to make repeſentation thereof. Chriſt therefore being (without your ſacrifice) ſufficiently repreſented unto men upon earth by the Word, and ſufficiently preſented before God in heaven in his own perſon, in which he continually appeareth before his his face for us; it followeth that your sacrifice of the Masse, neither profitable in earth, nor of use in heaven, ought to haue place in hell from whence it came. Last of all, notwithstanding that in the sacrifices of the Law our Saviour Christ died mystically, yet the nature of a sacrifice described in this place was alwaies obserued by death of those things that were offered, if they had life, or breaking and consuming, if they were without life. And therefore to haue a reall representatiue sacrifice at this time, it is necessary that it go under the same Law that all sacrifices both of the Law and the Gospell do; which not possibly being in our Saviour Christ who can no more die, be broken or consumed, as your selues confesse, it is euident that your sacrifice is not so much as a shadow of him as were the sacrifices of the Law, but an abhominable Idoll. And as the Scripture affoordeth you neither name nor thing, neither shew nor truth of any reall and externall sacrifice in the new Testament, but onely that which our Saviour himselfe offered upon the Crosse. So the Fathers, beside the bare name of sacrifice (which they willingly used, the rather to strike reuerence into mens mindes of religious receiving the holy Sacrament of the Supper) giue you not so much as a foot of ground whereupon your sacrifice can stand, which notwithstanding maketh chalenge unto a place of as large extent as is from the rising of the Suune to the going down thereof.

Cyprians purpose Epist.63. is to proue that there must be water in the Sacrament as well as wine, whereof whether soever be, your Idoll falleth flat on his face. And notwithstanding that the very words of correspondence unto the passion of Christ, are fitter to set forth the Sacrament of the Supper then the sacrifice of Christ himselfe, yet when he saith that they do that in commemoration of the Lords passion: hee sheweth yet a more straighter bond it hath with the Sacrament then with the Sacrifice; for the heaving of it aboue the Priests head whole and unbroken (beside that it is a deuise of their own) hath no such remembrance and representation of Christs death as when the bread is broken and the wine powred forth in the distribution of the Sacrament unto the Communicants: whereupon hee saith that this sacrifice of the passion of Christ doth declare the Christian unanimitie, or like-mindednesse, which as it frameth well with the Sacrament of Christs body, so that it should be said that our Saviour Christ himselfe doth signifie the Christian like-mindednesse is a Language that the Divines understand not. Cyprian lib. 1 Ep. 6.

Aug. de fid. ad Petr. cap. 19. is more euident against them, which opposeth Christs work upon the Crosse to the figure, and to the Preaching of it in the Sacrament, but let Augustine himselfe speak what he meaneth by the sacrifice of the body of Chirst, speaking of the vowes out of the Psalme, he saith; By vowes his he will haue understood the sacrifice of his body, which is the Sacrament of the faithfull: Where it is euident that by the word sacrifice hee understandeth Sacrament: Againe, the Priest offereth up the sacrifice of praise, not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchisedec: And againe, that which Melchisedeck offered to God now we see offered through the whole world. Aug. 120, Honorato. Aug. contra aduers. leg. lib. 1. c. 1.

Nazianz. orat. in Marc. saying that the Priest in his sacrifice mingleth himselfe with the great passions of Christ, saith nothing for you; for that there is nothing which is not better performed in our Sacrament where Christs crucifying is without comparison more liuely represented then in your sacrifice, whereupon otherwhere hee calleth Christ (if a man may so speake) insacrificable, or which can not bee sacrificed: but if our Saviour Christ may be said to be offered againe and the Iesuites will beleeue Nazianzene, he telleth them that hee thinkes that Christ offereth himselfe in heaven. And that by the word of sacrifice, Nazianzene meant the Sacrament, not a sacrifice, a thing received of men and not presented unto God, it is euident by his words, that the unbloudie sacrifice is received of the faithfull in the holy Communion: so that hee calleth it a sacrifice in that it is receiued of the Church when they communicate together. Naz. sanct. pass. orat. 4. Idem oratione funebri in Basil. Nazian. Apol. 4. orat. in Pelag. in laud Basil. & in Iulian. 1. 2. Orat.

Ambros. lib. offic. 1. c. 48. doth notably confute this Popish sacrifice: Those things (saith hee) are to bee desired of you in which there is perfection and truth, in one is a shadow, in another is the image, in the third is the truth; The shadow is in the Law, the image is in the Gospell, the truth is in heaven: before a lamb or calfe was offered, But now Christ is offered, but offered as a man, and as it were suffering, and hee offereth himselfe as it were a Priest that he might forgiue our sinnes here in age, there (he meaneth in heaven) in truth, that hee may be our intercessour: mount up therefore into heaven, and thou shalt see those things whereof here was the shadow or the image. where hee opposeth the truth which is the person of Christ now in heaven, as well to the shadowes under the Law, as the Images which are under the Gospell

Alexander. 5. Epist. Tom. Concil. 1. whose body and bloud is made, and passion celebrated, are manifestly against you: for thereby appeareth, that so his body and bloud be made as his passion is done and celebrated: his suffering therefore being in mystery and figure by your owne confession it followeth that his body and bloud is made after the same sort, that is to say, mystically and figuratiuely. In Gregory hom. 37. in Euang. beside the bare word of hoste, where it hath been answered, there is nothing which is not more favourable to us then you. Isych. lib. 2. cap. 8. in Levit. making the mysteries of the New Testament to be an effect of the sacrifice of the onely begotten Sonne, doth declare evidently that that which is now done in the Church, differeth from that which our Saviour Christ in his owne person as the cause and effect which is really, and not as you pretend in the manner and fashion onely; but let Bertrame one which understood the Fathers as well as the Iesuites, and whom they (we thinke) will hold for indifferent, speake what is meant by this sacrifice which they make adoe of; he comparing the sacrifice of the Law with this of the New Testament here debated, saith thus: For in those fleshly sacrifices there was a signification of the flesh of Christ, which he was to offer for our sinnes, himselfe without sinne, and of the bloud which he should shed for the remission of our sinnes; but in this sacrifice there is a thankesgiuing and commemoration of the flesh of Christ which hee offered for us, and of his bloud which the same God shed for us. Orthodox. Bertramus de corpore & sanguine domini.

Now where they alledge the Fathers which call it an unbloudy sacrifice; this phrase carrying in it hand both bread and stone, the word sacrifice hath not so much of the nature of bread to feed their fansie as the word bloudy hath the condition of a stone to breake their earthen device of a reall sacrifice: for calling it unbloudy, they meant that it was a shew and thankfull commemoration of the sacrifice, and not the sacrifie it selfe. And for proofe hereof amongst a number of testimonies to that purpose, let the Reader take one or two.

Epist. synod. Cyril, in an Epistle he wrote by the commandement of the Synode against the Nestorian heresie, calleth it an vnbloudy sacrifice and thankesgiving; where beside that he noteth that the vnbloudy sacrifice is a thankesgiving vnto God, he saith that there are many of them, which he could not haue done, if he had vnderstood by the name of an vnbloudy sacrifice, Christ himselfe, who being but one, cannot be multiplied.

Againe, Cyril calleth it a spirituall sacrifice, and an vnbloudy service, or worship: where although the word spirituall be sufficient to overthrow the externall sacrifice, (notwithstanding the sorry exception of the Papists against it) yet when he also calleth that sacrifice a service, or worship of God, he thrusteth them from all such foule and vnmannerly shifts: it being an absurd thing to call our Sauiour Christ a Service or Worship of God, who is the God himselfe that is serued in that sacrifice, as it is tearmed.

πνευματικην θυσιαν και ἀναιμακτον λατρειαν. Cyril. catech. Mystagog.

Last of all, inraged at the deadly stroke which this place giueth vnto the sacrifice of the Masse, and finding no receit in the Fathers of strength to heale it, they fall vpon M. Caluin, and most impudently belye him: it is true that he saith, that hee passeth not that the Fathers call it so as they do a sacrifice, it being not in the choyce of men to faine Sacrifices; but that he calleth the distinction of a bloudy and vnbloudy sacrifice, a diuellish deuice (although hee might well so doe in that sence the schoolemen haue deuised it) is an euident vntruth: for therein he addresseth himselfe not vnto the Fathers, but vnto your Synagogue, saying, that is a diuellish deuice to offer Christ ostentimes, which was farre from the Fathers once to dreame of, as hath been shewed. And yet forsomuch as the Fathers might erre, and (as you must confesse) haue erred; tell vs from whence commeth that errour but from the Father of lies, how godly and learned soeuer the pen-men were whereout it fell: verily vnlesse you will say it is a diuine precept, you must needs say, it is Diuellish deuice; so that if M. Caluin had spoken this, as you vntruly surmise, yet it being a thing which may fall into the best men after the age of the Apostles, there is therein no contempt of the Fathers, much lesse is there any blasphemy.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 20 WHich he hath dedicated to vs a new and liuing way by the veile, that is, his flesh, RHEM. 1. [20. He hath dedicated.] To dedicate is to be author and beginner of a thing. The Protestants translate, he hath prepared, for their heresie that Christ was not the first man that entred into heauen.

ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν ὁδὸν. Ioh. 10.

CARTVV. 1. 35. [He hath dedicated.] This marginall note bewrayeth first their ignorancee in the tongue whereof they pretend knowledge: for the Greeke word signifieth properly to renew, which implieth that there was a way before, that by the death of Christ was renewed and made fresher and easier to be known then it was vnder the Law. And so is the word vsed of S. Iohn, who by a word drawne and derived of this, doth note the feast of the rebuilding of the Temple, presupposing (as the truth is) that there was a Temple before decaied and fallen downe. And this very word is vsed to note the feast of the renewing of the Altar in the booke of the Machabees: yet the Iesuits (we thinke) haue not a forehead to say, that there was no Altar before Antiochus brake it downe, whereas they could not haue repaired the Altar vnlesse there had been one before which was broken downe: it is true that our Saviour Christ is the Authour vnto all that enter into heaven, and that there was never any that entred the heavens but by and through him; but that there entred no soule into heauen before our Saviour Christ entred, is wickedly and blasphemously to restraine the vertue of the passion, and other obedience of our Saviour Christ vnto the time of his comming, which reacheth vnto all times, being the Lambe that was slaine (in power and effectuall working) from the beginning of the world: but it is no newes that this Romish vermine alwayes should embase the vertue & strength of Christs death, yea it is euident that even the bodies of Enoch and Elias, were (in the merite of Christs resurrection) possessed of heauen many yeares and ages before the comming of our Saviour Christ.

1. Mach. 4.

Secondly, this note bewrayeth what trifling quarrellers they be, considering that our translation avoyding the word dedicated as forraine and Latinish, chose rather the word of prepared, as that which being a stranger borne, is by continuall vse euen of the most Idiots naturalized; otherwise that wee seeke no advantage thereof, it may appeare by M. Beza, who turning it into Latine, vseth the word of dedication, which (say the Iesuites) the Protestants haue avoyded to maintaine their heresie that Christ was not the first man that entred heaven: where (in truth) the speech of preparing the way, hath more colour and shew of the popish heresie that Christ was the first man that entred the heavens, then the word of renewing.

Last of all, if the word of preparing the way, do argue that some were in heauen before Christ came (as the Iesuites pretend) then our Saviour Christ using the same language and manner of speech that we doe, hath evidently so set his foot in the necke of this popish heresie, which holdeth that Christ was the first man that entred the heavens, that it shall never be able to rise againe.

Verse. 1. For the Law hauing a shadow of good things to come, not the very image of the things: euery yeere with the selfe same hosts which they offer incessantly, can neuer make the commers thereto perfect:

RHEM. 3. [1. A shadow.] The sacrifices and ceremonies of the old law, were so far from the truth of Christs Sacraments, and from giuing spirit, grace, remission, redemption, and iustification, and therevpon the entrance into heauen & ioyes celestiall, that they were but meere shadows, vnperfectly and obscurely representing the graces of the new Testament and of Christs death: whereas all the holy Churches rites and actions instituted by Christ in the Priesthood of the new law, conteine and giue grace, iustification, and life euerlasting to the faithfull and worthy receiuers, and therefore they bee not shades or darke resemblances of Christs passion, which is the fountaine of all grace and mercy, but perfect images and most liuely representations of the same specially the sacrifice of the altar, which because it is the same oblation, the same host, and offered by the same Priest Christ IESVS (though by the ministerie of man and in mysterie) is the most pure and neere image, character, and correspondence to the sacrifice of Christs passion, both in substance, force, and effect, that can be.

The old sacrifices obscurely shadowed, but the sacrifice of the altar most plainely representeth the sacrifice on the crosse.

CARTVV. 5 [1 A shadow.] There is not a shadow of a reason in this against the spirit and grace communicated with the Fathers under the Law: for what maketh it, to proue that they were not truely partakers of Christ, and of the graces in him because the representation of Christ was not so full as it is now; as if they were not as truely healed of the sting of the serpents whose eye sight was dimme and vnperfect that they could not behold the serpent cleerely and fully, as they whose eyes were of quicker and sharper sight; nay it proueth rather the contrarie of that which you gather: for we pertake now plentifully of the grace and spirit of Christ because we haue a fuller representation and knowledge of him then before; it followeth that the Fathers hauing some knowledge of Christ by those meanes which the Lord ordained to set him forth vnto them, haue also some of his spirit and grace according to the proportion and foot of knowledge. Beside that you are heere quite beside the cushion; For hee compareth not Sacraments with Sacraments, ours with theirs, but the Sacrifices and Priesthood of the old Testament, with the Sacrifices and Priesthood of the New. And this comparison doth cleane ouerthrow your sacrifice of the Masse? For seeing in matter of Sacrifices the difference is that those of the old Law were oftentimes offered, where this of the New is offered but once onely: it followeth that yours is not the Sacrifice of the new Testament which is so often offered: And if you thinke that the difference of holy things vnder the Law and the Gospell will further Christs carnall presence in the Sacrament: it must needs follow that in Baptisme also, which is a Sacrament of the Gospell, there must be the same carnall presence as in the Eucharist.

Num. 21. Iob. 3.

Verse. 2. Otherwise they should haue ceased to bee offered, because the worshippers once cleansed should haue no conscience of sinne any longer.

RHEM. 4. [2. They should haue ceased.] If the hosts and offerings of the old law had been of themselues perfect to all effects of redemption and remission, as the Hebrewes (against whom the Apostle disputeth) did thinke, and had no relation to Christs sacrifice on the crosse or any other absolute and vniuersall oblation and remedy for sinne, but by and of their own efficacy could haue generally purged and cleansed man of all sinne and damnation: then they should neuer haue needed to be so often repeated and reiterated. For being both generally auaileable for all, by their opinion, and particularly applied (in as ample sort as they could be) to the seuerall infirmities of euery offender, there had been no sinnes left. But sinnes did remaine euen those sinnes for which they had offered sacrifices before, notwithstanding their sacrifices were particularly applied vnto them. For, offering yeerely they did not onely offer sacrifices for the new committed crimes, but euen for the old, for which they had often sacrificed before: the sacrifices being rather records and attestations of their sinnes, then a redemption or full remission, as Christs death is. Which being once applied to man by Baptisme wipeth away sinnes past, God neuer remembring them any more, nor euer any sacrifice or Sacrament or ceremonie being made or done for them any more, though for new sinnes other remedies bee daily requisite. Their sacrifices then could not of themselues remitte sins much lesse make the generall redemption without relation to Christs Passion. And so you see it is plaine euery where, that the Apostle proueth not by the often repetition of the Iewish sacrifices that they were not sacrifices at all, but that they were not of that absolute force or efficacie, to make redemption or any remission, without dependance of the one vniuersall redemption by Christ: his whole purpose being, to inculcate vnto them the necessitie of Christ death, and the oblation of the new Testament. As for the Churches holy sacrifice, it is cleane of another kinde then those of the Iewes, and therefore hee maketh no opposition betwixt it, and Christs death or sacrifice on the crosse, in all this Epistle: but rather as a sequele of that one generall oblation, couertly alwayes inferreth the same: as being in a different manner the very selfesame host and offering that was done vpon the Crosse, and continually is wrought by the selfesame Priest.

The Iewes sacrifices were not absolute, & independet because they were often repeated.

The Apostle proueth by the often repeating of the Iewes sacrifices, not that they were none, but that they were not absolute and sufficient.

CARTVV. 4. [2 They should haue ceased.] As the Sacraments of the old Testament were attestations and records of sinne, so are the Sacraments of the new, and so much the stronger euidences as they be more liuely representations then they were, as of the grace which we haue in Christ, so of the sinne which we haue in our selues: so is the water in Baptisme applyed to the body, a record and witnesse of the corruption and filth of sinne; so is also the Sacrament of the Supper a witnesse of our spirituall affamishment and emptinesse of all things pertaining to the life to come: And as the Sacraments of the old Testament applyed unto the faithfull take away no sinne, but onely sealed the remission of sinne in Christ that was to come: so do the Sacraments of the new Testament take away no sinne, but onely seale the taking them away in Christ that is already come. And as the one sealed the remission of all sinnes past, present, and to come, so doth the other. The contrary whereof in way of a difference between the Sacraments of both times, being barely and nakedly affirmed of the Iesuites, and that most vagrantly, and from the purpose, shall be sufficient barely to deny, both in the evidence and cleerenesse of the truth which shineth in them, and having regard to the former treatise of them in divers places.

It is false also that there is no more remembrance of the sinnes, the pardon whereof is sealed unto us in Baptisme: for although Baptisme be not repeated, and that the faithfull haue no guilty conscience, neither of the sinnes past or to come, as those which they know to bee pardoned in Christ; yet because this knowledge is as it were in iourney and receiveth daily encrease, in their daily prayers they make sute unto the Lord, that hee would not remember against them their sinnes by-past, even their originall sinne wherein they were conceived, yea the sinnes of their fathers before them. And in the Sacrament of the Supper, by the breaking of the bread and powring forth of the wine, there is a remembrance of the death and passion of our Saviour Christ, for all our sinnes as well past as to come. And therefore the Iesuites haue heerein also ignorantly assigned the difference between the Sacraments of the old and new Testament: It is true, the Apostle proveth not that the Sacrifices under the Law were no Sacrifices, but he proveth they ought to cease after the great sacrifice of Christ upon the Crosse, because the same once being offered, the faithfull haue no more conscience of sinne, because they are sanctified by the oblation of the body of Christ once offered: finally, because by one oblation he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified: every reason whereof carrieth like shot, an equall bullet against the sacrifice of the Masse, as against the sacrifices of the Law: where your answer so often and so irkesomely repeated, that it is in a different manner the same sacrifice with that upon the crosse, is in effect as much as it is the same, and not the same; it is all one, and not all one: and surely to take you at your own word, if it differ in a manner, it is not the same; for those onely are perfectly the same which haue the same manner and fashion every way: howbeit the difference between your sacrifice and Christs, differeth by the greatest differences that can be. In the Efficient cause the one conceived by the Holy Ghost, the other begotten by foure ‡ small words, Hoc est corpus meum: in the Materiall cause, the one being made of the seed of the woman, the other being made of the graine of wheat: In the Forme, one having the frame and shape of a man, the iust length, bredth, height, and other proportion of a man, the other being not so like a man as an Apple is to an Oyster: In the End, the one under the Law that he might redeem us which were under the Law; the other under the bondage of the Priest to be swallowed and cobled up of him: In the Effectes, the one bearing up the whole world, the other borne of a worldling Priest; the one eating and drinking, the other eaten and drunken; the one wounded but not broken, the other broken and not wounded: In the Subiect, the one upon the crosse in Iewrie, the other upon the Altar in Spaine and Italy; the one offered by the eternall Spirit, the other presented by a caitife body which hath already one foot in the graue, and which having said Mattens in the morning liveth not to say Evensong at night. In the manner (wherein you place the difference onely) they are so extremely differing as that they cannot be one and the same Subiect: for beside the differing and divers qualities, that one was offered more then a thousand yeares before the other; that the one was three and thirty yeares old when it was offered, the other but a day old; they haue also contrary conditions which cannot fall into one and the same subiect, as to be light and heavy, to be powerfull and impotent, to be of glorious shew and of most vile and base regard: with such an infinite sort of other differences as can hardly bee found between the true and ever-living God, and the most abhominable Idoll that ever was worshipped of the Egyptians, or Caldeans, two of the grossest Idolaters that ever were in all the rout of Idolaters. Wherefore you say wisely therein that the Apostle doth alwaies covertly inferre your sacrifice of the Masse, even so covertly, that it cannot be seen but of those which haue the covering of ignorance before their eies, seeing that which is not, and not seeing that which is: but wherefore covertly alwaies? except it be that he knew that it was a night bird, and cannot abide the light of the truth: although if it were accorded you, that that which the Priest holdeth in his hands were the same with that of the crosse, yet ought it to remaine in the bare and single nature of a Sacrament, without pressing and climing so high as to the nature of a Sacrifice; seeing the Apostle doth not onely teach that there is under the Gospell but one onely Sacrifice, but that the same was once onely offered. Now all that haue a corne of good understanding know that one and the same singular action cannot be done twice by the same man which did it in the same place and at the same houre: much lesse by another in another place, and at another time. For if I write a line, and rasing it out againe write the same letters and syllables in the same place, with all proportion in length and bredth with the first: yet this second line cannot be (as you after say) the same line in number with that which is rased out, but differeth in the very nature and definition from the former before it was rased out: seeing therefore the Apostle (in effect) by your own confession, hath buried the sacrifice of the Masse in this Epistle, which (for the argument it handleth) should haue brought it forth, if it had been worthy to haue seen light: it will be good for you to lay it in graue, seeing the longer you keep it aboue the ground the worse it will stink, having no balme or sweet odors of the word of God to keep it from putrefaction.

Psal. 51. Math. 6. Rom. 7, Ezec. 9. 7

Or fiue small words, hoc est enim corpus meum. As in Missal. Rom. Cano. Missæ.

Annot. in vers. 11.

Verse 4. For it is ‖ impossible that with the bloud of Oxen and Goats sinnes should be taken away.

RHEM. 5. [4. Impossible.] The hostes and sacrifices of the old law, which the carnall Iewes made all the count of, without relation to Christs death, were not onely not perfect and absolute sufficient sufficient in themselues but they did not, nor could not remit any sinnes at all, being but onely signes thereof, referring the offenders for remission in deed, to Christs Passion. For the bloud of bruit beasts could haue no other effect, nor any other element or creature, before Christs death, the fruite whereof, before it was extant, could be no otherwise properly applied vnto them, but by beleefe in him.

The old sacrifices remitted not sins, but were only signs thereof.

CARTVV. 5. [4. Impossible.] The passion of Christ liuely represented to the eye of faith by the sacrifices of the Law, was effectually applied unto the faithfull then, by the Sacramens under the law, as it is now applied by ours; although not in the same measure. And as no element or creature could forgiue sinne before the passion of Christ, no more can any after the same, but onely God the Creator of all.

Esay 43. 12

Verse. 5. Therfore comming into the world he saith: Host and oblation thou wouldest not: but a body thou hast fitted to me.

RHEM. 6. [5. Host and oblation.] He meaneth not that God would no host nor sacrifice any more, as the Protestants falsely imagine: for that were to take away not onely the sacrifice of Christs body vpon the altar, but the sacrifice of the same body vpon the Crosse also. Therefore the Prophet speaketh onely of the legall and carnall sacrifices of the Iewes, signifying that they did neuer of themselues please God, but in respect of Christ, by whose oblation of his own body they should please.

God refuseth the Iewes sacrifices, not all sacrifice.

CARTVV. 6. [5. Host and Oblation.] Although by this testimony of the Psalme he doe not condemne the sacrifices of the Law, yet therewith he sheweth, that none is truly propitiatory, none acceptable under the Gospell, but that which he by the Holy Ghost caused to be conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin, and inabled to suffer whatsoeuer was by his iust iudgement to haue been inflicted upon us; neither whereof agreeing unto the sacrifice of the Masse, it is euident that it is not propitiatory, nor of the New Testament.

RHEM. 7. [5. But a body.] If Christ had not had a body, he could not haue had any worthy matter or any matter at all to sacrifice in visible manner, other then the hosts of the old law. Neither could he either haue made the generall redemption by his one oblation vpon the Crosse, nor the daily sacrifice of the Church: for both which, his body was fitted by the diuine wisdom which is an high conclusion, not vnderstood of Iewes, Pagans, nor the Hereticks of our time, that Christs human was taken to make the Son of God (who in his diuine nature could not be either Priest or host) fit to be the sacrifie & Priest of his father in a more worthy sort then all the Priests or oblations of the old law. And that this body was giuen him, not onely to be the sacrifice vpon the Crosse, but also vpon the altar, S. Augustine affirmeth in these words. The table which the Priests of the new Testament doth exhibit is of his body and bloud: for that is the sacrifice which succeeded all those sacrifices that were offered in shadow of that to come. For the which also we acknowledge that voice of the same Mediatour in the Psalme. BVT A BODY THOV HAST FITTED TO ME, because in steed of all those sacrifices and oblations his body is offered, and is ministred to the partakers or receiuers. Li. 17. Ciuit. Dei. c. 20. And againe li. 4. de Trin. c. 14. Who so iust an holy a Priest, as the onely Sonne of God: What might so conueniently be offered for men, of men, as mans flesh? and what so fit for this immolation or offering as mortall flesh? what so cleane for cleansing the vices of mortall men, as the flesh borne of the virgins wombe? and what can be offered and receiued so gratefully, as the flesh of our sacrifice, made the body of our Priest.

That Christ should haue a body was necessary for his Priesthood, and sacrifice.

The body of Christ is the sacrifice of the Altar.

CARTVV. 7. [5. But a body.] As to be the Priest of God it was necessary that he shou'd be God, having neither beginning of his dayes, nor end of the same; which the Papists vnderstand not; so to be a sacrifice for our sinnes, it was necessary that our Saviour Christ should haue a body, which the Protestants doe well vnderstand, and frankly confesse: upon the truth of the flesh of Christ, and reall suffering in the same, dependeth the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord in such sort, that of the truth of the bread and wine in it, and of the reall breaking thereof, the ancient Fathers haue proued the truth of the body, and sufferings of Christ against the heretiques which haue impugned both; whose hand is singularly strengthned by you which haue forged a Christ without so much as the shape of a man, and a suffering of his without any smart. Augustine de ciuitat. lib. 17. c. 20. hath been shewed to be of Christ onely, and his one sacrifice. The other would haue appeared euidently to haue the same meaning if wilfull blindnesse had not cut off that which goeth before, and followeth after: before are these words: It cannot be offered duly but by a holy and a righteous Priest, neither vnlesse it be receiued which is offered of them for whom it is offered, and (finally) that it be without fault, to the end it may be offered for the cleansing of those which are faulty. This verily we all desire that would haue a sacrifice offred unto God for himselfe. Now who is so iust and so holy a Priest as is the onely sonne of God, which hath no need by sacrifice to purge his sinnes, either originall or other, &c. And after the words which they alledge, he saith, That when there are foure things to be considered in every sacrifice, to whom it is offered, of whom, what, and for whom: one and the same true Mediator by the sacrifice of peace reconciling us unto God, should abide one with him to whom hee was offered, should make one with himselfe those for whom he was offered, and shou'd be one and the same who offered, and which he offered. All which being verified alone of the sacrifice upon the Crosse, and not otherwhere to be found, it is euident that Augustine understood this of the sacrifice of the crosse, and not otherwise: for euen the first line which (alluding to this Epistle) requireth a iust and righteous Priest with condition that otherwise it is not rightly offered, doth euidently declare that it is not meant of any popish Priest, whose sacrifice (if any be) is not the worse although he be euill.

Heb. 7.

Verse 8. Saying before, Because hostes and oblations, and holocaustes, and for sinne thou wouldest not, I neither did it please thee, which are offered according to the Law.

The Iewes sacrifices refused, not all sacrifice.

RHEM. 8. [8. Neither did they please thee.] By that he saith, that the things offered in the law did not please God, and likewise by that he saith, the former to be taken away, that the second may haue place, it is euident, that all hosts and sacrifices be not taken away by Christ, as the Heretickes fooliſhly conceiue: but that the old hosts of bruite beasts be abrogated to giue place to that which is the proper host of the new Law, that is, Christs own body.

CART vv. 8 [8. Neither did they please thee] As the former taken away are noted to be the sacrifices under the law: so the second that hath place is expresly restrained to that body which God so fitted unto our Saviour Christ, that it might be a slain offring and a whole burnt offering to be subiect to the fire of Gods anger, which fed upon it untill it had the fill thereof. And therefore it is cleare, that you are either beetle or brasen browed, which alledge this for proofe of a daily offering in the Church, as if there were no sacrifice beside the sacrifice of the Law, unto the which as unto a second, that should giue place, unlesse the the sacrifice of the Masse may thrust in, then which what can be more blasphemous so farre to advance the sacrifice of the Masse, that unlesse that be, there is none at all, no not the sacrifice of Christ upon the Crosse, which for so much as it is (although you trust) the second sacrifice which the Writer to the Hebrewes speaketh of, your sacrifice must be the third, that is to say, a bastard, which can convey no pedigree, nor draw no line of lawfull birth from either Prophet or Apostle.

Verse 11 And every Priest in deed is ready daily ministring and I often offering the same hosts, which can never take away sinnes.

We must often note that the Apostle speach of many Priests and often sacrificing, concerneth onely the Iewes Priests and sacrifices, not the Priestes and sacrifices of the new Testament.

RHEM. 9. [11. Often offering the same hosts.] As S. Paul is forced often to inculcate that one principle of the efficacie and sufficiencie of Christs death, because of the Hebrewes too much attributing to their legall sacrifices, and for that they did not refer them to Christs onely oblation, so we, through the intollerable ignorance and the importunitie of the Heretickes of this time (abusing the words of the Apostle spoken in the due defence and declaration of the valure and efficacie of Christs passion aboue the sacrifices of the Law) are forced to repeate often, that the Apostles reason of many Priests and often repetition of the selfesame sacrifices, concerneth the sacrifices of the Law onely, vnto which he opposeth Christs sacrifice and Priesthood: and speaketh no word of or against the Sacrifice of the new Testament, which is the sacrifices of Christs own Priesthood, Law, and institution, yea the same sacrifice done daily vnbloudily, that once was done bloudily, made by the same Priest Christ Iesus, though by his ministers hands: and not many hosts, as those of the old Law, were, but the selfesame in number, euen Christs owne body that was crucified. And that you may see that this is the iudgement of all antiquitie, and in the exposition of these and the like words of this Epistle, and that they seeing the very same arguments that the Protestants now make so much a do withall among the simple and vnlearned, yet well perceiued that they made nothing against the daily oblation or sacrifice of the altar, and therefore answered them before the Protestants were extant, 1200. yeeres: wee will set down some of their words, whose authoritie and exposition of the Scriptures must preuaile in all that haue wisdom or the feare of God, aboue the false and vaine glose of Caluin and his followers,

The Caluinist arguments against Christs body often offered, and in many places, answered by the fathers long ago, in 10. cap. hebr. ibidem.

Thus then first saith S. Ambros: Quid ergo nos &c. What we then; doe not we offer euery day: we offer surely: but this sacrifice is an exampler of that: for we offer alwayes the selfe same, and not now one Lambe, to morrow an other, but alwayes the selfe same thing: therefore it is one sacrifice, otherwise, by this reason because it is offered in many places, there should be many Christs, not so, but it is one Christ in euery place, here whole, and there whole, one body. But this which we do, is done for a commemoration of that which was done, for we offer not an other sacrifice, as the high Priest of the Law; but alwayes the selfe same &c. Primasius S Augustines scholler doth also preoccupate these Protestants obiections thus: What shall we say then? doe not our Priests daily offer sacrifice: they offer surely, because we sinne daily, and daily haue need to be cleansed: and because he can not die, he hath giuen vs the sacrament of his body and blond: that as his Passion was the redemption and absolution of the world, so also this oblation may be redemption and cleansing to all that offer it in truth and veritie. So saith this holy father, to witte, that as the sacrifice of the Crosse was a generall redemption, so this of the altar is, to all that vse it, a particular redemption or application of Christs redemption to them. In which sense also V. Bede calleth the holy Masse, redemptionem corporis & animæ sempiternam, the everlasting redemption of body and soule. lib. 4. c. 22. hist. Againe the same Primasius, The diuinitie of the word of God which is every where, maketh that there are not so many sacrifices, but one, although it be offered of many, and that as it is one body which he tooke of the Virgins wombe, not many bodies, euen so also one sacrifice, not diuers, as those of the Iewes were.

The generall redemption vpon the Crosse it particularly applyed in the sacrifice of the altar.

Primas. loco. citato.

S. Chrysostome also, and after him Theophylact, and Oecumenius, and of the Latines, Haimo, Paschasius Remigius, and others, obiect to themselues thus: Do not we also offer euery day? we offer surely, but this sacrifice is an exampler of that, for we offer alwayes the selfe same: and not now one Lambe, to morrow another, but the selfesame: therefore this is one sacrifice. Otherwise, because it is offered in many places, there should be many Christs. And a little after, Not an other sacrifice, as the high Priest of the old law, but the selfe same wee doe alwayes offer, rather working a remembrance or commemoration of the sacrifice. See the Annotation Luke 22. 19. vpon these words, A commemoration. Thus did all the ancient fathers Greeke and Latine treate of these matters, and so they said Masse, and offered daily, and many of them made such formes of celebrating the diuine sacrifice, as the Greeks and Latines do vse in their Liturgies and Masses, and yet they saw these places of the Apostle and made commentaries vpon them, and vnderstood them (I trow) as well as the Protestants.

CAR TVV. 9. [11. Often offering the ſame hoſtes.] The Holy Ghoſt in the Writer to the Hebrewes, in repeating ſo often, one Prieſt, one Sacrifice, once offered, did foreſee the abhomination of the Maſſe ſacrifice: and therefore diſcovering it out of his watch-tower, gaue great and often warning thereof, yet not without ſome advantage to the truth, and ſcourge unto the Maſſe. Wherefore this is no defence to your continuall pattering, and as you terme it, inculcating one and the ſame thing, which bringeth no helpe to your cauſe, but rather (as it befalleth to liers, by contrarietie of one tale with another, ſmiteth it in peeces: for where in three or foure parts of this Epiſtle, and euen in the Annotation next before, you hold out the words of this writer for defence of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, here in this repetition you confeſſe, that as he ſpeaketh nothing againſt your ſacrifice, ſo he ſpeaketh not a word of it: where once againe your blaſphemy appeareth, which ſaying hee ſpeaketh not a word of the ſacrifice of the New Teſtament (meaning your owne) doe thereby thruſt out the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, of which he intreateth ſo amply, out of the account of a ſacrifice of the New Teſtament. And yet if your ſacrifice be one and the ſame in number with that upon the Croſſe, it is moſt untrue that he hath not ſpoken a word of your ſacrifice, ſeeing every word ſpoken of the one, is ſpoken of the other. And although Chriſt in glory, and Chriſt in ignominie be one and the ſame in number, as Socrates a childe the ſame with Socrates a man growne, yet the word of (ſacrifice) the ſame with the Grecke word which ſignifieth (a ſlaine thing) cannot bee applied unto the glorious and immortall body of Chriſt, which you fanſie in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: where if you ſay, that it is ſlaine in a myſtery, it is evident that the ſame is ſaid by equivocation, where under one and the ſame name two divers and repugnant things are ſignified: ſo that although Chriſts glorious body be one and the ſame with the body of his weakeneſſe, yet the ſacrifice of his mortall body, cannot more bee one and the ſame with the ſacrifice of the immortall, then to die in truth is all one with dying in a ſimilitude; to dye actually and really all one with dying figuratiuely and picturally. And if the ſacrifices of Cakes, Fritters, and parched corne under the Law, for that they haue no ſence of their beating, ſeething, &c. are delivered as a divers kinde of ſacrifices from thoſe which were taken from the heard and the flocke: it muſt follow alſo that the ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt, which hath no ſence of all the evill uſage which the Prieſt intreateth it with, is of another kinde then that which had a moſt quicke and liuely ſence of all the iniuries wherewith the Iewes out-raged it. Levit. 2.

And here it commeth to minde to note how vnaduiſedly the Papiſts delt againſt their ſacrifice of Maſſe when they defined it to be propitiatorie and to haue ſtrength to purge ſinne: for when there muſt be a proportion between the ſacrifices of the Law and thoſe vnder the Goſpell, all propitiatorie ſacrifice (except the caſe of moſt extreme pouertie) being vnder the Law with bloud they ſhould haue much better prouided for their ſacrifice of the Maſſe, if they had defined it to haue been a ſacrifice of thankſgiuing, as that which would better haue framed with the impaſſible nature they imagine in the ſacrifice of the maſſe. How the antiquity hath no acquaintance with this new fangled ſacrifice of Popiſh maſſe it hath been ſeen and namely how theſe places of Ambroſe and Chryſoſtome here repeated are euidently againſt it. Primaſius words are manifeſtly againſt you euen as they are here alleadged: for in ſaying that becauſe he cannot die, therefore he hath giuen vs the ſacrament of his body and bloud: he thereby declareth that the oblation he ſpeaketh of, is nothing elſe but the ſacrament, and not a ſacrifice properly, and as a Sacrifice is diſtinguiſhed from a ſacrament; otherwiſe if the Ieſuites ſhould haue holden his pen they would haue made him write that although our Sauiour Chriſt can no more die, yet he ceaſeth not to be daily ſacrificed aliue, and although the Prieſt cannot offer him in bloud, yet he ceaſeth not to offer him without bloud: and that Primaſius meaning is by the word of ſacrifice to note the Sacrament, it appeareth euidently by his words in another place where he writeth. The ſame (Chriſt) being a Prieſt for ſacrifice offereth alſo an acceptable ſacrifice vnto his father by his Church, whileſt therefore we offer the Sacraments of his body he offereth: where it is euident that the Sacrifice and Sacrament are put for the ſame, And interpreting the heauenly things figured in the Law he expoundeth them the ſpirituall things which lead the obſeruers of them in truth to the heauenly places for (ſaith hee) is not ſaith our heauenly altar whereby wee offer daily our prayers vnto God? Levit. 5. 11. Primaſ. in 8. cap ad. heb.

Here are further alleadged diuers of the ancient fathers and Councels which beſide the bare title of Sacr fice, having nothing for the Popiſh ſacrifice; euerie one of them ſaying either in expreſſe words that it is a remembrance of the ſacrifice on the croſſe, yea ſome of them (as Euſebius and other) a ſacrifice not of propitiation but of thankſgiuing, or elſe by other circumſtance euidently and manifeſtly declaring the ſame. Amongſt all theſe teſtimonies raked together for proofe of a reall and outward Sacrifice of Chriſt, there is none that carieth greater ſhewe in wordes then Cyprians who calleth it a ſacrifice, a true ſacrifice, Chriſt, and ſuch like, but his chiefe purpoſe being to proue that there muſt needs be water in the cup of the Lords ſupper, the leaſt drop thereof is able to drown the Popiſh ſacrifice: and how thoſe words of his muſt be figuratiuely underſtood, the wordes following doe euidently ſhew ſaying. And becauſe we make mention of his paſſion in all his Sacrifice (for the ſacrifice which wee offer is the paſſion of Chriſt) wee ought to doe nothing elſe but that he hath done. Whereby it appeareth, that as the ſacrifice which the Church offereth is not the paſſion of Chriſt, but a remembrance of his paſſion: ſo it is not the very ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelfe, but onely a remembrance of the ſacrifice. And when it is evident of that which hath and ſhall be ſeen, that the ancient Fathers never ſo much as dreamed of the Popiſh ſacrifice, it may eaſily bee knowne, that the ancient Councels which were aſſembled of the ancient Fathers, never mooved foote, nor held up hand for eſtabliſhment of it. And ſeeing that thoſe whom the Ieſuites haue here choſen to ſpeak in the name of all the reſt, make not onely not for it, but utterly againſt it: cleerer it is then the Sunne that the other which are mute and tongue-tyed can ſay nothing for it: Whereby the Reader may easily understand how little need we haue for stopping of their mouthes lest they speak for the Popish sacrifice, whose mouthes the aduersary durst not open, lest in speaking one word for it, it should speake three against it.

Verse. 18. But where there is remission of these, I now there is not an oblation for sinnes.

When the Apostle seemeth to say, there is no remission or oblation for sinne, hee alwaits meaneth that full remission by Baptisme.

RHEM. 10. [18. Now there is not.] Christs death cannot be applied vnto vs in that full and ample sort as it is in Baptisme, but once: Christ appointing that large remission and application to be made but once in euery man as Christ died but once, for it is not meant that all sinnes shall cease after Christs sacrifice vpon the Crosse, nor that there should bee no oblation for sinnes committed after Baptisme, or that a man could not sinne at all after Baptisme, or that if hee sinned afterward, he could haue no remedie or remission by Gods ordinance in the Church, which diuers falsehoods sundry Heretickes gather of this and such like places: but onely the Apostle telleth the Hebrewes, as he did before chap. 6. and as he doth straight afterward, that if they fall now (whereunto they seemed very prone) to their old law, and voluntarily after the knowledge and profession of the Christian faith by Baptisme, commit this sinne of incredulitie and apostasie, they can neuer haue that abundant remission applied vnto them by Baptisme, which can neuer be ministred to them againe. And that generall full pardon he calleth here, oblation and afterward in the 26. verse hostiam pro peccato, an host for sinne.

CARTVV. 10. [18 Now there is not,] The reason that Christ died but once, to proue that his death cannot bee applyed so amply vnto vs but once in Baptisme, is directly contrary to the whole course which is holden in this Epistle, which is to shew that although the sacrifice of Christ be but one and once made, yet that it taketh away all sinnes, and that for ever, by it alone perfectly saving, all those that come vnto him, and were once sanctified: And it is directly contrary to Paul, who sheweth that it is not so in the grace and gift of God, as it is in the sinne, that as the sinne is but one whereby the condemnation came: so the grace which commeth by the sacrifice of Christ should be but for one sinne, but for many sinnes; and therefore not onely for the originall sinne which children haue when they are baptized, but for all sinnes which rise from that originall poison, the forgiuenesse of all which is sealed by the Sacrament of Baptism, once onely administred, whose force is as great in the day of death, albeit that it were a thousand yeares after the administration thereof although celebrated the day hee first saw light in the world. And let it bee obserued not onely how blasphemous the Iesuites be in making our Saviour Christs sacrifice vpon the Crosse the ransome for sinnes before Baptism alone, but how ridiculously they extoll the fruit of the death of Christ in Baptism by calling it an ample and large remission and application of his death; when notwithstanding in yong infants which are commonly and ordinarily those to whom Baptism is ministred, nothing is forgiven but onely originall sinne, if so be the fruite of Baptism be (as they falsly teach) restrained to the doing away of those sinnes wherewith they are defiled at the time of Baptism. Secondly, let it be obserued heere that where this place reasoneth that there being remission of sinnes purchased vnto all those that God hath made covenant with by the one oblation of Christ vpon the Crosse; there is now no more oblation, because there are no more sinnes to be offered for, nor to be taken away, then that which is taken away by the oblation vpon the crosse destroying all other sacrifice beside it: the Iesuites as stricken from heaven stagger and reele like drunken men, not knowing what to say, but bring in a tale that hath neither head nor foote, neither warranted by sound of words nor by any manner of circumstance either going before, or following after, namely, the Apostle (as Heb. 6.) telleth them that if they fall by Apostasie they can never haue that abundant remission applyed by Baptisme which can neuer be ministred to them againe: Which what kindred it hath with these words of the Holy Ghost, where there is remisson of these (meaning iniquities) there is not any more an oblation for sin, let all the world iudge, seeing to haue comen any thing neere to their exposition, the words should rather haue been where there is no remission there is no oblation for sinnes. And seeing both in the sentence before, and that after, he speaketh of the faithfull and those which are sanctified, it is strange that in this middle sentence hee should abruptly break into the throat of Apostasie: but let the Reader see how sottishly and rovingly these words are uttered.

Rom. 5.

For first of all, what should he threaten them with falling away and with Apostasie, which (by the Iesuites whole course of shifting in this Epistle) were never comen vnto Christ, nor ever beleeved in him, and which not onely continued the sacrifices of the Law, but referred them not to the sacrifices and oblation of Christ: men also, which esteemed (as they say) the sacrifices of the Law perfect in themselues to all effects of redemption and remission, which is to faile in the very ground and foundation of our Christian faith.

Secondly, for a greater and deeper sinne, as is falling away and apostasie from Christ, is appointed a smaller and fainter remedy, as it were, for a broader and more dangerous wound, a narrower and lesse healing plaister, for the sinne of Apostasie, greater then the sinne of any not baptized, especially of yong children before Baptisme, must not haue so aboundant remission as was applyed by Baptism: Howbeit this Apostasie is (as they imagine) done away by the sacrifice of the Masse, where Originall sinne in infants is alone forgiven by the sacrifice of the Crosse, and applyed by Baptism; it followeth that the sacrifice of the Masse is heerein exalted aboue the Sacrifice vpon the Crosse. And if they say, that the Sacrifice of the Crosse for the doing away of all sinnes after Baptism, is applyed by the sacrifice of the Masse: beside that it is absurd that one sacrifice can apply another, which is causally done alone by the Spirit of Christ in the gift of faith, and instrumentally by the Preaching of the Word, and administration of the Sacraments; it is an vtter ouerthrow of their own doctrine, which imagineth the sacrifice of the Masse the same with that of the Crosse; for if the one be an application of the other; it followeth, that the thing applying and applyed differ

mightily, as actiue and passiue, as cause and effect: they must needs differ also exceedingly amongst themselues; and if Baptisme applying the death of Christ, differ in the whole nature and substance thereof, from the death of Christ, there is no cause why the sacrifice of the Masse applying, as you teach, the death upon the Crosse, as Baptisme doth, should not receiue the same difference and separation of natures that they do. And yet magnifying your sacrifice of the Masse, one wayes aboue the sacrifice of the Crosse, marke how you cast it another way under the Sacrament of Baptisme: For when you make both Baptisme and the Masse applications of the death of Christ upon the Crosse, yet you ascribe more aboundant remission of sinne unto the Sacrament of Baptisme then can be giuen afterward by any meanes whatsoever, and consequently more aboundant then by the sacrifice of the Masse.

Verse 26 * For | if we sin willingly after the knowledge of the truth received, now there is not left an hoste for sins.

RHEM. 11. [26. If we sinne willingly.] As the Caluinists abuse other like places against the holy sacrifice of the Masse, so they abuse this as the Novatians did before them, to proue that an Heretick Apostata, or any that wilfully forsaketh the trueth, can neuer bee forgiuen. Which (as is before declared in the 6. chapter) is most wicked blasphemie: the meaning hereof being, as is there said, onely to terrifie the Hebrewes, that falling from Christ they cannot so easily haue the hoste of Christs death applied vnto them because they cannot be baptized any more, but must passe by sacramentall penance, and satisfaction, & other hard remedies which Christ hath prescribed after Baptisme in the Churches discipline. Therfore S. Cyril saith, li. 5. in Io. c. 17. Penance is not excluded by these words of Paul, by the renewing by the laner of regeneration. Hee doth not here take away the second or third remission of sinnes (for hee is not such an enemie to our saluation) but the hoste which is Christ hee denieth that it is to bee offered again upon the Crosse. So saith this holy Doctor. And by this place and the like you see, how perillous a thing it is for Hereticks and ignorant persons to read the Scriptures. Which by following their own fantasie * they peruert to their own damnation.

The Caluinists heresie against remission of sinns.

All sinns may be remitted by penance, but not so fully as by baptisme.

Perillous reading of the Scriptures. 2. Pet. 3.

CARTVV. 11. [26. If we sinne willingly.] This place is two-edged, and cleane cutteth off both the sacrifice of the Masse, and pardon of the sinne against the Holy Ghost: for in that there is no sacrifice for it, because the sacrifice of Christ upon the Crosse (as that which is scorned and troden under foot by this sinne) cannot helpe it, it is evident that there is no other sacrifice then that upon the Crosse, and seeing there is no sacrifice, there can be no remission of sin, which is strengthened with further words when he saith, that there is nothing remaining to be looked for, but an horrible expectation and waiting for of iudgement and of fire. And yet more clearely and out of all controuersie when he reasoneth, that as he that had deserued by the Law of Moses to die a corporall death, could not by any good iustice escape it: so (yea and much more) he that had sinned this sinne of wilfull Apostasie, could not escape the iust iudgement of God in his everlasting destruction. Against which evidence of words how ridiculous is the answer of the Iesuits, the Reader may looke before, where they struggle with the like plainnesse of words which they doe here, and with the same edgeless weapons they did there, onely they haue here added Cyrillus iudgement in this behalfe, whose iudgement being, as they say, against the evident Scripture, is not to be regarded. Beside that we haue shewed (upon Math. 12.) better and greater authority of men, then is the testimony of Cyril.

Verse. 29. How much more thinke you, doth hee deserue worse punishments which hath troden the Sonne of God under foote, and esteemed | the bloud of the Testament polluted, wherein he is sanctified, and hath done contumely to the Spirit of grace?

RHEM. 12. [29. The bloud of the Testament.] Whosoeuer maketh no more account of the bloud of Christs sacrifice, either as shed vpon the Crosse, or as in the holy Chalice of the altar (for our Sauiour calleth that also the bloud of the new Testament) then hee doth of the bloud of calues and goates, or of other common drinks, is worthy death, and God will in the next life, if it be not punished here, reuenge it with grieuous punishment.

Contempt of Christs blond in the sacrament.

CARTVV. 12. [29. The bloud of the Testament.] S.

Verse 31. | It is horrible to fall into the hands of the living God.

RHEM. 13. [31. It is horrible.] Let all Christian people do satisfaction and penance for their sinnes in this life, for the iudgements of God in the next life done by God himselfe, of what sort soeuer, whether temporall as in Purgatorie, or eternall as in Hell, be exceeding grieuous.

Penance.

CARTVV. 13. [31. It is horrible.] Hie you apace, and plie the Lord with your own satisfactions, that your table may be your snare, and that your sinnes kindling your fire in hell, your satisfaction and penance for them may be as brimstone to make your fire hotter, and more raging against you.

Verse. 34. For | you both had compassion on them that were in bondes: and the spoyle of your owne goods you tooke | with ioy, knowing that you haue a better and a permanent substance.

RHEM. 14. [34. You had compassion.] To be mercifull to the afflicted for religion, and to be partakers of their miseries, is a very meritorious work, and giueth great confidence before God in the day of repaiment or remuneration for the same.

Mercy to the imprisoned for religion.

CARTVV. [34. You had compassion.] A reward of compassion and recompences are acknowledged as the common language of the Scripture, and of this Epistle: but meritorious worke is the Dorick and barbarous speech of Rome, confuted in the next verse, where it is said, that the reward after endurance of all manner afflictions is by promise, and therefore not by desert of worke. Rom. 4. 13. 14.

RHEM

Losse of goods for Religion.

RHEM. 15. [34. With ioy.] If all Christian men would consider this, they would not thinke it so great a matter to loose their lands or goods: for defence of the Catholike faith.

CARTVV. 15. [34. With ioy.] S.

Verse. 38. And my iust ‖ liueth by faith. But if he withdraw himselfe, he shall not please my soule.

Faith is the comfort of the afflicted.

RHEM. 16. [38, Liueth of faith.] Faithfull men afflicted in this life, haue their comfort in their assured faith and hope of Christs comming to deliuer them once from all these miseries, and so by that faith and comfort they liue, whereas otherwise this miserable life were a death.

CARTVV. 16. [38. Liueth by faith.] If the faithfull haue their comfort in their assured faith and hope of Christs comming to deliuer them, what place remaineth to your doubting and mammering of Gods favour in your deliverance. The rest which belongeth to this testimony of the Prophet, let the Reader looke before, upon Rom. 1.17.

CHAP. XI.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 5 BY ‡ faith Henoch was translated, that he should not see death, and he was not found: becausе God translated him. For before his translation hee had testimony that he had pleased God.

RHEM. 1. [5. Henoch was.] Here it appeareth that Henoch yet liueth and is not dead: against the Caluinists. See the Annot. Apoc. c. 11.

CARTVV. 1. [5. Henoch was.] Looke the answer vpon Apocalypse the eleuenth.

Verse 6. But without faith it is impossible to please God. For hee that commeth to God must beleeue that he is, and is a rewarder to them that seeke him:

RHEM. 2. [6. Rewarder to them.] Wee must beleeue that God will reward all our good works: for he is a rewarder of true iustice, not an accepter or imputer of that that is not.

CARTVV. 2. [6. Rewarder to them.] It is blasphemie to say that there is no righteousnesse of Christ, you will say there is none imputed to vs, but that is your beggerie to craue that in question: and if there be no imputation what doth the word of imputation in the Scripture, vnlesse you will say that the Scripture deuiseth words without any thing contained in them. And when it is granted vnto men to shew fauours to those that are vnworthie in themselues for some ones sake that hath deserued fauours, is it not an impudent face of the Iesuits which denieth this to be iust in God which they will not alwayes and in euery case condemne in a mortall man. And when Paul willeth Philem. Onesimus debt should be imputed vnto him and set vpon his head, what is that but to hold him for a debter indeed. And euen the reward of our good works is not for the merit of the works, but for that Ex. 28.38. for Christs sake the infection which is in them is taken away and is not (in him and for him) taken and reputed as it is in it selfe.

Verse. 19. Accounting that God is able to raise up even from the dead. Whereupon he received him also ‡ for a parable.

RHEM. 3. [19. For a parable.] That is, in figure and mystery of Christ dead and aliue againe.

CARTVV. 3. [19.] He receiued him in a parable or after a sort aliue from dead for that the Lords sentence of Isaac that he should die, and Abrahams hand lifted vp with drawn sword to kill him was a kind of death, from whence being deliuered by the Lords commandement hee was, as it were raised from the death: for it is vsuall enough to the Scripture to call a great danger whereout a man Cor. 1. 9. 10. & 4.16 can not escape but by a high hand of God, a death, and consequently the deliuerance from it a resurrection from the dead. And therefore the Iesuites interpretation is foolish and from the purpose CARTVV. 4. [22. Concerning his bones.] Here is no translation of relikes but of the whole body of Ioseph whatsoeuer was left of him at the time when the children of Israell departed out of Egypt, Secondly it was vpon a speciall cause that Ioseph might thereby testifie that howsoeuer he were in great authority in Egypt, yet had he his minde lifted vp to the promise of God touching the land of Canaan, which hath no vse in this time when Gods presence is in all places where his Church and faithfull be, Last of all as they were neuer worshipped in Egypt but kept onely to be Act. 7. 16. caried- so they were carried not to be reserued much lesse worshipped (as you wickedly do (but to be buried.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. And ! faith is the substance of things to be hoped for, the argument of things ! not appearing.

RHEM. 5. [1. Faith is,] By this description of faith, and by all the commendation thereof through the whole chapter, you may well perceiue that the Apostle knew not the forged speciall faith of the Protestants, whereby euery one of these new Sect-masters and there followers beleeue their sins are remitted, and that themselues shall be saued, though their sects be cleane contrary one to another. Not onely of a speciall faith.

CARTVV. 5. [1, Faith is.] This is but one qualitie of a iustifying faith common vnto all manner of faith, aswell miraculous as historicall, as to the iustifying, to bee assured of those things that be beleeued aswell when they are not yet done, as if they were done; aswell when they appeare not either to reason, or sense as when they appeare to both. And this is that he saith, that faith is a substance &c. for that it maketh things that are hoped for to bee (in assurance) as present as if they were existent; which as it grindeth to powder the popish faith that is alwayes floating and wauering; so it bruseth not the iustifying faith whereof this here spoken of is one worthy qualitie and not the whole nature: but when the rest of the chapter declareth that the holy fathers and their good works were not accepted in themselues, but are made acceptable for their faith: also that this faith worketh by charitie and is alwayes fruitfull; with what face can the Iesuites draw these to their dead faith which neither maketh a man iust before God nor holy before men.

RHEM. 6. [1. Not appearing.] This is the praise of faith, saith S. Augustine, if that which is beleeued bee not seen. For what great thing is it, if that be beleeued, which is seene: according to that sentence of our Lord when he rebuked his disciple, saying: Because thou hast seene me Thomas, thou hast beleeued: blessed are they that haue not seene and haue beleeued. Aug. in Euang. Ion. tract. 79. Which may be a rebuke also and a check to all those faithlesse speaches, I would see him, tast him, touch him and feele his very flesh in the Sacrament, otherwise I will not beleeue. Faith is of things not seen, as in the B. Sacrament

CARTVV. 6 [1. Not appearing.] When the mysteries of the kingdome of heauen are taught out of the Prophets and Apostles, it is good that both reason and sense (as Augustine saith) bee bound, for once mouing against any word of theirs; but hauing to do with such iuglers and Inchanters as you be which teach nothing but your own gainefull dreames, it is good to haue our eyes in our heads and in our hands the better to discouer your ligier-demain and your playing vnder board; yea the very old heresies of the Eutichians and Acephalians which confounded the natures of Christ as you doe whilest you imagine a Christ without any lineaments, features, dimension, or other properties of his body.

RHEM. 7. [6. He that commeth.] Faith is the foundation and ground of all other vertues and worship of God, without which no man can please God. Therefore if one be a Iew, a Heathen or an Heretike, that is to say, bee without the Catholike faith, all his works shall profit him no whit to saluation. Nothing profitable or meritorius without faith.

Verse 21. By faith, Iacob dying, blessed every one of the sonnes of Ioseph, and ! adored the top of his rod.

RHEM 8. [21. Adored the top of his rod.] The learned may see here that the Apostle doth not tie himselfe to the Hebrew in the place of Genesis whence it is alleaged, but followeth the Septuaginta, though it differ from the Hebrew, as also the other Apostles and Euangelists as our Sauiour himselfe did: neither where they curious (as men now a dayes) to examine all by the Hebrew onely, because they writing & speaking by the holy Ghost, knew very well that this translation is the sense of the holy Ghost also, and as true, and as directly intended as the other: and therefore also that translation continueth alwayes authenticall in the Greeke Church, notwithstanding the diuersitie thereof from the Hebrew. Euen so wee that bee Catholikes, follow with all the Latine fathers the authenticall Latine translation, though it be not alwayes agreeable to the Hebrew or Greeke that now is. But Caluin is not onely very saucie, but very ignorant when hee saith that the Septuaginta were deceiued, and yet that the Apostle without curiosity was content to follow them: because it is euident, that* the Hebrew being then without points * might bee translated the one way as well as the other. Which they vnderstood so well (and therefore were not deceiued) that within three lines after, in the beginning of the next chapter, they translate the same word, as he would haue it in this place. *Gen. 47. 31 The citations in the new Testamẽt, not only according to the Hebrew, but to the Septuaginta. The vulgar Latine translation. מטה * * Augus. de ciu. Dei l. 15 c. 14. matteh, rod. xλίνη, bed.

Againe obserue in those words, He adored the top of his rod, that adoration (as the Scripture vseth this word) may be done to creatures, or to God at and before a creature: as, at or *before the Arke of the Testament in old time, now at or before the crucifixe, relikes, images; and in the Psalmes 93. 131. Adore ye his footestoole, Adore ye toward his holy mount. We will adore toward the place where his feete stood: or (which by the Hebrew phrase is all one) Adore yee his holy mount, Wee will adore the place where his feet stood, as also the Greeke fathers, S. Damascene li. 1. de imaginibus and Leontius cited of him, yea S. Chrisostome also do handle these places, and namely that of the Apostle we now speak of, interpreting the Greeke as our Latine hath, and as we do, Hee adored the rod or the top of his rod, that is, the scepter of Ioseph now Prince of Egypt, so fulfilling Iosephs dreames which foretold the same Gen. 37. and withall signifying as it were by this propheticall fact, the kingdom of Israell, or of the ten tribes that was to come of Ioseph by Ephraim his yonger sonne in the first king Ieroboam, thus the Greek fathers. Whereunto may bee added, that all this was done in type and figure of Christs scepter and kingdom, whom he adored by and in his Crosse, as he did Ioseph by or in his rod and scepter: and therefore the Apostle saith he did it by faith, as hauing respect towards things to come. By all which it is euident, that it is false which the Calvinists * Ioſh. 7. 6. Adoration of creatures, and namely of holy things. * Oecum. in Collect. * 3. Reg. 11 12.

teach, that we may not adore image, crucifixe, or any visible creature, that is, wee may not adore God at or by such creatures, nor kneele before them: and therefore their corrupt translation of this place for the same purpose is intollerable, saying thus (LEANING) upon his staffe hee adored (GOD) adding no lesse then two words more then is in the Greeke, which though it might be the sense of this place, and S. Augustine so expoundeth it, yet they should not make his exposition the text of holy Scripture, specially whereas hee onely of all the ancient fathers (as Beza confesseth) so expoundeth it.

CARTVV. 10. [21 Adored the top of his rod. The first section heere is answered before (in the answer to the Preface) that the Lords Pen-men in the new Testament do so farre yeeld to the seventy Interpreters, as their difference from the Hebrew is in words and not in sense. As in this place the matter is all one, whether Iacob (in the feebleness and crasednesse of his body) worshipped God leaning upon his bed, or upon his staffe: where also it hath been shewed that the Church never esteemed the 70 Interpreters authenticall; your charge of saucinesse and ignorance upon M. Calvin, for saying that the seventy were deceived in reading without points, favoureth not (as we think) the taste of your greatest favourers, who can hardly be so foolish as not to know, or so wicked as not to confesse, that M. Calvins great skill and rare gravity could not without blushing be lacked of such schullockes and skipjackes as you be. And is it not your ignorance in falling so hardly upon M. Calvin for this matter to charge Ierom by so much deeplier of saucinesse and ignorance, as (for the translation of this place) he hath lyen heavier upon the 70 Interpreters with his little finger, then Calvin hath done with his whole body.

In the second Section, although there is nothing which will not well beseeme a Iesuites forehead, yet so far as you are men we could cover our faces in your behalfe, who as if there were no preposition in the Greek, do face out a sense that both by the words of the Text, and by all circumstances of the Story is overthrown: For the very evident words are, that hee worshipped upon the top of his staffe, and not, as they haue falsly turned it, hee adored the top of his rod: So also also doth the Syrian Paraphrast reade, and so is hee translated of one of their own coate, which keepeth well the Preposition which these wretched Image mongers willingly and wittingly dissemble. Wherefore their charge that we haue added two words, meaning this word (upon) for one, is an untruth that the devill himselfe might be ashamed of. And for the word ῥάβδος used otherwhere in the new Testament for a walking staffe, agreeth fitly unto Iacob, who being both old and sick had need to stay himselfe thereupon, whilst he praised God in the undoubted assurance he had that it should be performed, which in Gods name hee had promised unto the sonnes of Ioseph as if it had been already executed: so it agreeth not unto Ioseph who was no King, and therefore had no Scepter, being inferiour to Pharaoh, as in his Throne, so in his Scepter which goeth with the Throne, and implyeth as much Princely Maiesty as it. And it is absurd that Iacob should now at last after so many yeares of his aboade in Egypt, where Ioseph was Governour, fulfill his Dreames in falling downe before Iosephs Scepter, where if it were a duty of his to his sonne, hee ought to haue done it long before, even at his first meeting; if it were none, then should it be indiscretely and dotingly done of him, especially at this time when hee did the office of a Prophet, when also he had bestowed such a benefite upon Ioseph as hee ought rather haue done reverence unto his father, then his father unto him. And as the time fitteth not this supposed homage unto Iosephs Scepter; so the place which was the private house of his father maketh it more unseemely and unfitting to be donne: for if Ioseph had Pharoahs Scepter upon his shoulder, or borne before him, yet it was meet that hee should let it fall when he came under the private roofe of his fathers house, Scepters being borne up ordinarily when Princes go to the iudgement hall, or to some publique place: at the least it had beene of greater convenience, and of greater respect to the authority Ioseph was in, that Iacob should haue rather risen before his sonne abroad, or in publicke place, then within private walles, where the Egyptians could not behold the reverend regard that Iacob bare to authority.

Gen. 41. 40

Last of all yeelding it unto the Iesuites which they labour for, that Iacob adored the Scepter of Ioseph and Ioseph in his Scepter, because there are godly learned of this iudgement, that Iacob bowed himselfe to Ioseph, yet what is this to proue worshipping of Images, or worshipping of God by images, as Iacob honoured Ioseph (as yee say) by his Scepter: as if there were the same law and rule in spirituall honour, which is in Civill; or as if there were that large and licentious scope to bee given in the worship of God, who will be served onely as hee hath appointed in his Word, and not as it seemeth best unto men; which is permitted in Civill honour, where much is given to the manner of the Country, and kinde of Governement; whereby also may appeare how ridiculous the Iesuites are, which in an Egyptian Scepter (if any were heere) seek a figure of Christs crosse.

The Iesuites are constrained to acknowledge Augustines exposition the same with our translation, a token that he liked as evill of Image worshipping as we do: But they finde fault that wee make his exposition our Translation, but why may not we adde a word in translation of a whole clause of a sentence, to explain the truth, having Augustine for warrant, when to the darkning of a place, they in the translation of one word adde two words in text letters, where we note the word in small letters to giue notice that it is understood, and not expressed in the Text; but they say that Augustine onely of all the ancient Fathers doth so expound it, let it be so: But who of all the ancient Fathers expound it as you do? not one: For Damascene and Leontius when there is question of ancient Fathers you may put up in your purse. But Oecumenius reporting the iudgement of the Greek Fathers, and Chrysostom, are plain against you, Oecumenius having the Preposition twice, which you leaue quite out, once leaveth it out, but yet putteth the word staffe in the datiue case, which is of the same value as if it had the preposition ἐπὶ, and can by no construction of grammer, be turned, he adored his Staffe. Againe, he affirmeth that by his bowing himselfe upon his staffe, he signified the Civill subiection that the ten tribes should yeeld to the tribe of Ephraim. The same is Chrisostomes iudgement, both which, referring this worship to a civill subiection, iection, do cleane marre your market of Church Imagery. As for worſhipping the footſtoole, Pſal.99. & 132. it is but your naughty tranſlation. The Prophets words in proper and ordinary ſignification note that the faithfull worſhipped the Lord at the ſanctuary, which is called the Lords foote-ſtoole, becauſe there were evident and viſible ſignes of his preſence, and for that there the Lord gaue anſwer of difficult matters. And when your ſelfe, expound it, that they worſhipped at or before the Arke, you do overthrow with your own hand your tranſlation of worſhipping his foote-ſtoole, it being another thing to worſhip God at, or before the Sacrament, and to worſhip the Sacrament: For even at this time unde the Goſpell, the true worſhip of God is more furthered and ſet forward by the uſe of the holy things which the Lord hath ordained for ſtrength of our faith, then without them: When therefore you can ſhew that Imagery is commanded of God for relieſe of our weakeeſſe, and better liſting up of our mindes unto the Lord, or that the Lord anſwereth our difficulties by the mouth of an Image, then we will not refuſe to worſhip God by them, as the Iewes did worſhip him by the Temple and by the Arke: The cleane contrary whereof being (as hath been ſhewed) commanded of the Lord; it is your extreme dotage to make them like, which the Lords Ordinance hath ſet ſo far in ſunder.

Verſe 33. Who by faith ouercome kingdomes, I wrought iuſtice, obtained promiſes, ſtopped the mouthes of Lyons.

RHEM. 10. [33. Wrought iuſtice.] Men are not iuſt by beleefe onely, as the Proteſtants affirme, but by working iuſtice. And we may note that in all this long commendation of faith in the fathers and holy perſons, their good works are alſo ſpecially recounted, as Rahabs harbouring the ſpies, Abrahams offering his ſonne (which their works S. Iames doth inculcate:) Noes making the Arke Gen.6. Abels better oblations then Cains Gen.4. & Heb 11.v.4 and ſo forth: therefore S. Clement Alexandrinus ſaith, that the ſaid perſons and others were iuſt by faith and obedience, by faith and hoſpitalitie, by faith and patience, by faith and humilitie. Not faith onely. Iac. 2. Lib.4. Strom. Pag. 240.

The Apoſtles purpoſe then is nothing elſe, but to proue to the Hebrewes (who made ſo great account of their Patriarches and forefathers and their famous acts) that all theſe glorious perſonages and their works were commendable & acceptable onely through the faith they had of Chriſt, without which faith none of all their liues and works ſhould haue profited them any whit: the Gentiles doing many noble acts (as heretickes may alſo do) which are of no eſtimation before God becauſe they lack faith. And that is the ſcope of S. Pauls Epiſtle to the Romanes, and of all other paſſages where hee commendeth faith: further prouing eſpecially of this Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, that all their ſacrifices were nothing elſe but figures and atteſtations of Chriſtian faith in Chriſt and his death. All which high reſolution and concluſion againſt the Iewes and Gentiles, that the Chriſtian faith is the true faith and religion, the Heretikes of our time ignorantly and brutiſhly abuſe againſt Chriſtian works, ſacrifice, and Sacraments, which the Apoſtle meant ſpecially to commend and eſtabliſh by his high commendation of the faith in Chriſt. No works of the Patriarkes or any other, profitable, but by their faith in Chriſt. Which is alwaies the Apoſtles meaning in commending faith.

CART VV. 10. [33 Wrought iuſtice.] This whole chapter of Examples of godly and worthy ſeruants of God, is a proofe of that generall ſentence which was cited out of the Prophet Abacuk in the end of the former chapter. And the manner of proofe is of two ſorts, the one by an Induction of ſingular perſons and times, as if he ſhould ſay, Abel, Henoch, Noah, Abraham, and ſo of the reſt, liued by faith, that is (as the Apoſtle expoundeth it) were iuſtified by faith: therefore whoſoeuer is iuſtified, is iuſtified by faith. And againe, the Fathers before the floud and after the floud, before the Law and after the Law, had no other way to be iuſtified but by faith: therefore none can otherwiſe be iuſtified then ſo.

A ſecond kinde of Argument is taken from compariſon, as if the Apoſtle would ſay, ſeeing thoſe men whoſe workes and innocency of life are ſo greatly commended, whoſe gifts and calling were ſo peereleſſe, were not iuſtified by their workes, but by their faith: it is a folly for others, whoſe workes are, in regard of theirs, inferiour, to looke for iuſtification by the ſame. Againe, thoſe whoſe liues were foule and offenſiue, as Rahab and Samſons, found plentifull ſalvation and iuſtice by faith in Chriſt: therefore it is evident, that by faith the way to life is ſure, as that which iuſtifying the greateſt and moſt grievous ſinners, is much more able to ſaue others, which by it in Chriſt come unto God. Hereof alſo it is, that Noah is ſaid to haue been partaker of the righteouſneſſe of faith, aſcribing the iuſtification unto the faith, and making all the good workes as fruites of faith, in the ſtrength whereof they wrought good workes: whereupon alſo declaring further what place good workes haue in a mans iuſtification, he ſaith twice together of ſeverall ones, and once of all generally, that they beare witneſſe that a man is righteous. Now to make a man righteous, and to beare witneſſe that hee is righteous: and againe, to be righteous, and to haue the good report of righteouſneſſe, be ſo farre removed, as are the cauſe and the effect, the ſubiect and that which cleaveth nnto it. Clemens Alexandrinus words of being iuſt by faith and obedience, maketh nothing againſt this ſole iuſtification by faith: for we are indeed iuſt by both, but by the one as by the cauſe, and by the other as by the effect: yea by both (if you will) as by cauſes, provided that the iuſtice be divers, the one perfect and inherent in Chriſt, as that muſt needs be which is gotten by faith, that laieth hold of Chriſt: the other unperfect and begun, inherent in our ſelues, which the Scripture alſo calleth righteouſneſſe, becauſe the imperfection thereof is through the interceſſion of Chriſt not imputed unto us. The reſt of that in this note is their old rubbiſh, which hath been ſwept out by the Apoſtles beſome, whereof let the Reader looke before upon Rom.1.3.4.5.9.10.11. Verſ. 7. Ver.4.5.39

*Verſe.*40. God for us providing ſome better thing, that they I without us ſhould not be conſummate.

RHEM. 11. [40. Without Vs ſhould not.] The fathers before Chriſt could not bee accompliſhed, that is, not admitted to the heauenly ioyes, viſion, and fruition of God, till the Apoſtles and other of the new law wee aſſociate to them, and the way to euerlaſting glorie opened by our Lords The Patriarks and other iuſt not in heaven before Chriſt.

Lords death and Aſcenſion. Neither ſhall either they or we be fully perfected in glory both of body and ſoule, till the generall reſurrection: Gods prouidence being ſo, that we ſhould not one be conſummated without an other, all being of one faith, and redeemed by one Lord Chriſt.

CARTVV. 12. [40. Without us ſhould not.] Theſe godly Fathers are ſaid to haue beene ſtrangers vpon Earth, and to haue ſought for their countrey which is in heauen, which if they miſſed of when they departed, they were greatly deceiued and much confounded, which faith cannot ſuffer them to be. Neither ſhould they haue had courage to haue left and loſt all by death, unleſſe they had been ſure to enioy their countrey when they departed out of this pilgrimage, nor would ever haue giuen over their tents, unleſſe that from thence they might haue paſſed into a manſion houſe, wherein they ſhould ever without remoue haue abidden, neither is there any man which can with ioy bee put out of the cottage of his body, to remaine afterward naked, but is willing therefore to lay it downe to the end he may be clothed. Wherefore he ſaith, that the Lord had even then when theſe old Fathers liued and beleeued, (long before the comming of our Saviour Chriſt) prepared them a Citty, whereas the Ieſuites make the ſoules pilgrimes, ſtrangers, and wanderers after they are departed hence: cleane contrary to this holy Writer, which defineth this their pilgrimage in this life, and bound it upon earth.

Verſ. 16.

Now whereas they are ſaid, not to haue receiued the promiſe, thereby is meant that they receiued not performance of the particular promiſe of Chriſts comming in their time, but ſaw it, as it were, a farre off: ſo that this not receiving of the promiſe, was a want in cleereneſſe of ſight and knowledge of the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, and not a deprivation of happineſſe of all whom even in this ſame chapter he affirmeth that they obtained the promiſes: howbeit in that we haue had the promiſe of his comming accompliſhed in our time, it is ſaid that the Lord had diſpoſed better for us then for them, and that to the end they before the comming of our Saviour Chriſt, and we after and in his comming might make one perfect body of the Church, whereof Chriſt is the head: whereas if our Saviour Chriſt had come in the dayes of the Fathers, whoſe ſufferings were appointed toward the end of the world; it muſt haue followed that ſome of theſe which were appointed to be called after our Saviour Chriſts comming, being ungathered, we and they could not haue perfected one myſticall body of Chriſt. This ſence of perfection is yet further confirmed in that the Fathers perfection which are now (by the Ieſuites owne confeſſion) in heaven, is matched with our perfection upon earth: where it is evident, that we being not yet in heaven, and yet notwithſtanding perfected with them, muſt haue ſome other ſignification of perfection, which may frame as well with us as with them, and contrariwiſe. And as the ſence of the place is thus true and plaine, ſo is not their ſence in the ſignification of perfection which they haue followed: for if the Fathers be therefore ſaid not to be perfected, becauſe they entred not into heaven before Chriſt aſcended thither, it followeth that now our Saviour Chriſt being entred, they are already perfected, which is untrue both in them and us, whoſe perfection ſhall not be untill the laſt iudgement. And granting alſo this unto the Ieſuites, that the eſtate of the godly Fathers was either bettered, or (if they needs will) perfected by the entry of our Saviour Chriſt into heaven, yet thereof followeth not, that they were not in heauen before, but rather that they were in heaven, although not in ſuch heaped meaſure of happineſſe, as at our Sauiours comming thither; otherwiſe they may as well conclude, that the ſoules of the faithfull are not now in heaven, becauſe they ſhall, being ioyned to their bodies in the day of their full reſurrection, receiue the full accompliſhment and perfection of their happineſſe.

Verſe 15. LOoking diligently leſt any man ‡ be wanting to the grace of God: leſt any roote of bitterneſſe ſpringing up to hinder, and by it many be polluted.

RHEM. 1. [15. Be wanting.] That we be not good, there is no lack on Gods part, who offereth his grace to us: but the defect is in ovr ſelues, that are not anſwerable to Gods calling of us, and grace toward vs.

CARTVV. 1. [15. Be Wanting.] Here is firſt a falſe tranſlation: for the Greeke prepoſition ἀπὸ will not ſuffer but that it be turned a warning that none ſhould fall from the grace of God, whereas to turne the verbe as the Ieſuites haue done, they muſt thus ſpeake, Looking diligently that no man be wanting from the grace of God, which is a barbarous ſpeech. And the Syrian Paraphraſt, as their owne men tranſlate, is, that none be found voyd of the grace of God. Laſt of all, their owne vulgar in S. Iohn turneth the ſimple verbe as M. Beza, and not as he doth in this place: howbeit their meaning being lewd, as tending to this, that a man hath free will to receiue or refuſe grace at pleaſure, their words are true: for that there is (indeed) neither lack nor defect in God, when he withdraweth his grace, or iuſtly hardeneth him whom he offereth his grace unto: for it being iuſt with God for ſinne committed, ſo to do, it is (if a man may ſo ſpeake of God) an ornament and complement in him: ſo farre is it from being a lack or defect in God, when he with-holdeth his grace, and hardeneth their hearts that they cannot receiue the truth into their hearts ſo deepely, as being covered with the mould of a good conſcience, it can never be made fruitleſſe.

ANNO.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 6. For whom our Lord loveth he chaſteneth: and ſcourgeth every child that he receiveth.

RHEM, 1. [9. He ſcourgeth.] By this we proue that God often puniſheth the ſins even of his louing children though not with eternall damnation, yet with temporall chaſtiſement and correction, and that he doth not alwayes together with the remiſſion of deadly ſinnes and eternall puniſhment exempt the offender received to his grace, from all fatherly correction either in this life or in the next, Neither haue the Hereticks of this time any reaſon or Scripture in the world, why they ſhould take away Gods chaſtiſement of his children in the next life, more then in this world. Temporall puniſhment after remiſſion of ſins, either here, or in purgatory.

CARTVV. 2. [6 Hee ſcourgeth.] By the ſame reaſon that the Ieſuites would proue that God puniſheth his with temporall puniſhment in this life, for that hee ſcourgeth, correcteth, and chaſtiſeth them: we proue that hee doth not puniſh them; for to puniſh and to chaſtice are repugnant: Wherefore if the one onely agree to him whoſe ſinnes are forgiven, the other cannot agree; And the words of the Author to the Hebrewes, that God in chaſtiſing his, offereth himſelfe unto the afflicted as a father, doth evidently convince this: for a father never ſeeketh ſatisfaction at his ſonne for faults committed in ſuch ſort, that if it were not onely to keep his ſon from the like ſinne, or that the evill example thereof ſhould not infect others of his family (children eſpecially) he would not once touch him for his fault hee hath committed: it is knowne alſo that the puniſhment of ſinne is death everlaſting both of body and ſoule for evermore: therefore no temporall paine can be the puniſhment of ſinne. Moreoveer, ſeeing the afflictions and chaſtiſements turne all to the good of thoſe which are exerciſed in them, by increaſe both of holineſſe in this life, and felicity of the life to come: who is ſo blind as not to underſtand that it is no puniſhment for ſinne, which is ſent for further grace in this life, and glory in that to come. Againe, ſeeing God hath puniſhed the ſinnes of the elect in his own Sonne, who bare our ſinnes in his own body, it is evident that if hee ſhould puniſh them againe in their perſons, whether it be in this life or the life to come, he ſhould puniſh one thing twice, which were againſt iuſtice: whereby alſo it is evident how brutiſh and blockiſh the Ieſuites are, that ſay there is neither reaſon, nor Scripture in the world why we ſhould take away Gods chaſtiſements of his children, in the next life more then in this: For Scripture, they haue heard before, and it would require a book to ſet down the Scriptures which might be alledged for it. The Reaſon alſo hath been touched, namely, that hee is heere chaſtened that hee might not ſinne againe, which can haue no place in the puling ſoules of Purgatory. Secondly, they are heere chaſtiſed to draw them to repentance and amendment of life, which in Purgatory is fruitleſſe. Thirdly, they are heere chaſtiſed, that other ſeeing the hand of the Lord upon them for their ſinne, may learne to feare and eſchew that which they ſee corrected in another, which were hard to be ſeen in Purgatory without a paire of Popiſh ſpectacles, and the ſlumbering ſpirit of Rome. Rom. 6. Rom. 8. 1. Pet, 1. 1. Eſay 53.

Verſe 17. For know ye that afterward alſo deſiring to inherit the benediction, hee was reprobated: for hee found not place of repentance, although with teares he ſought it.

RHEM. 2. [17. He found not.] It is not meant, that Eſau could not find remiſſion of his ſin at Gods hand: but that, hauing once ſold and yeelded vp the right of his firſt-birth to his yonger brother it was too late to be ſorry for his vnaduiſed bargain.

CARTVV. 3. [17. He found not.] It were great pitty but you ſhould haue the Ganders quill to make your pen of, which ſcrabble ſuch fooliſh and ſenceleſſe expoſitions: for ſeeing remiſſion of ſinnes and repentance go together, repentance refuſed to be given to Eſau, although he ſought it, (becauſe he ſought it not as he ought to haue done) it followeth that he could find no place of remiſſion of ſinne. And it is the darkneſſe of Popiſh Egypt that you underſtand not that in Iſaacs outward bleſſing was contained the ſpirituall bleſſing of Chriſt Ieſus, which Eſau both having loſt, and not ſeeking to grow into with his brother, could not be partaker of: for notwithſtanding that he would gladly haue had Iacobs bleſſing, ſo farre forth as it had promiſe of a fat and luſty ſoyle, of a pleaſant and delightſome land, yet regarded he not therein the delicateſt fruit of all, as it were, the Date or Pomegranate of that promiſe, which was our Saviour Chriſt; yea when his father by telling him that the bleſſing was already gone, did prouoke him to ioyne himſelfe with Iacob to become one body of a people with him, and as it were to come under his Tent; he ſought a ſeverall bleſſing by himſelfe, and refuſed the fellowſhip and communion of his brothers bleſſing, whereunto his father would fain haue driven him. Acts 5. 31.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 2. And ! hoſpitality doe not forget: for by this, certaine being not aware, haue receiued Angels to harbour.

RHEM 2. [2. Hoſpitalitie.] Hoſpitalitie, that is receiuing and harbouring of poore pilgrims, perſecuted and deſolate perſons, is ſo acceptable to God and ſo honorable, that oftentimes it hath been mens good happe to harbour Angels in ſtead of poore folke vnawares. Which muſt needs be euer a great benediction to them and their families, as we ſee by Abraham and Lot, Gen. 18. & 19. (and the like fell alſo to Gregorie, as Io. Diaconus writeth, to whoſe ordinarie table of poore men, not onely Angels but Chriſt alſo came in Pilgrims weed. In vit. lib. 1. c. 10. & lib. 2. c. 22. 23.) whereof if he had not example and warrant by S. Pauls words in this place, and many other expreſſe Scriptures of the old Teſtament, thoſe ſcornfull miſcreants of this time making ſo little account both of good works, & ſuch miraculous entrance of Chriſt and his Angels into holy mens harbour would make this alſo ſeeme fabulous, as they do other like things.

Hoſpitality. Angels harboured.

CARTVV. 2. [2 Hoſpitality.] Hoſpitality is an excellent vertue, and hath promiſes greater or leſſe, according to the quality of perſons, which in Chriſtian loue received are reſpectiuely for their calling and cauſe for which they be ſtrangers intreated: where your Pilgrims as waaton Calues, are no otherwiſe regarded then rogues, which with neceſſary paſſe that common humanity many not deny them, are by the whip (as due as their meat) to be returned home againe. Wee muſt beleeue, and it is certaine, that Angels haue been received to houſe and table, in habite of ſtrangers; and it is not impoſſible but they may be againe. Whether Pope Gregorie euer received any, as is fooliſhly (if not untruely) ſtoried of him, being at choiſe to beleeue or not to beleeue, wee meane to uſe our liberty; but that hee received our Saviour Chriſt is beſide your text, which maketh promiſe of Angels onely, and would (no doubt) haue mentioned Chriſt himſelfe, as being a ſingular incouragement to be harberous, if with truth he might haue done it: And it is a ſhame, and ſingularly derogatory to the Maieſty of Chriſt, not onely to bring him from the heavens to the earth, whether hee ſhall never come, but (at the latter day) into the aire onely; but euen to turne him into a beggars weed to aske an almes at Romes gates: directly contrary to that our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, The poore you ſhall alwaies haue with you, but me you ſhall not. And were it not for mentioning our Saviour Chriſt in ſuch a fable, a faithfull man might ſcornefully play upon this old whues tale, to the end that miſcreant Iewes and Turkes ſeeing thoſe Chriſtians eſteeme this tale as it is worthy, might take the leſſe offence in your dotage that (forſooth) will needs be Chriſtians.

Verſe. 4. ! Marriage honourable in all, and the bed undefiled. For fornicators and aduouterers God will iudge.

RHEM. 3. [4. Marriage honourable.] The Apoſtle (ſaith a holy Doctor) ſaith, Marriage honourable in all, and the bed vndefiled. And therefore the ſeruants of God in that they are not married, thinke not the good of marriage to be a fault, but yet they doubt not perpetuall continencie to be better then good marriage ſpecially in this time when it is ſaid of continencie. Hee that can take let him take. De fid. ad Pet. c. 3. apud Aug. in fine. Marke the doctrine of the fathers and of the Catholike Church concerning matrimonie, that it is honorable, and ſo honorable, that it is a holy ſacrament, but yet inferiour to virginitie and perpetuall continencie: honorable in all, that is, all ſuch as may lawfully marrie and are lawfully married: not in brother and ſiſter, not in perſons that haue vowed the contrary, to whom the ſame Apoſtle ſaith it is damnable. 1. Tim 5. v. 11. And this were the meaning of this place, if it were to be read thus. Marriage is honorable.

How marriage is honorable in al, if the Apoſtle did ſo ſay, as he doth not. 1. Cor. 7. 38

But to ſee how the Proteſtants in all their tranſlations, to abuſe the ſimple, do falſifie this ſentence of the Apoſtle, to make it ſerue for the marriage of Votaries, it is notorious. Firſt, they vſe deceite in ſupplying the verbe ſubſtantiue that wanteth, making it the Indicatiue moode thus, Marriage is honorable &c. as though the Apoſtle affirmed all mariage to bee honourable or lawfull, where the verbe to be ſupplied ought rather to bee the Imperatiue moode, Let mariage be honorable, that ſo the ſpeach may be an exhortation or commandement to them that be or will be maried, to vſe themſelues in that ſtate in all fidelitie, cleanlineſſe, and coniugall continencie one toward another; as when S. Peter alſo and this Apoſtle exhort married men to giue honour to their wiues as to the weaker veſſels, and to poſſeſſe their veſſels, in honour, not in the paſſion of ignominie and vncleanlineſſe: this is honorable or chaſte marriage, to which he here exhorteth, And that it is rather an exhortation, then an affirmation, it is euident by the other parts and circumſtances of this place both before and after: all which are exhortations in their own tranſlations, this onely being in the middes, and as indifferent to bee an exhortation as the reſt (by their own confeſſion) they reſtraine of purpoſe. Our text therefore and all Catholike tranſlations leaue the ſentence indifferent as it is in the Greeke, and as true tranſlatours ought to doe, not preſuming to addict it to one ſide, leſt they ſhould reſtraine the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt to their own particular fantaſie.

One ſhort place manifoldly corrupted by the Proteſtants. They reſtraine the ſenſe, to their heretical fanſie. 1. Pet. 3. 1. Theſſ. 4.

Againe *our new Tranſlatours corrupt the text in that they tranſlate, in omnibus, among all men, becauſe ſo they thinke it would ſound better to the ignorant, that Prieſts, Religious, and all whatſoeuer may marry: where they cannot tell either by the Greeke or Latine, that in omnibus ſhould bee the maſculine gender, rather then the neuter (as not onely Eraſmus, but *the Greeke Doctors alſo take it) to ſignifie that mariage ſhould be honorably kept between man & wife in all points, & in all reſpects. See S. Chryſ. and Theoph. in hunc locum. For there may be many filthy abuſes in wedlocke, which the Apoſtle Apoſtle warneth them to take heed of, and to keepe their marriage bed vndefiled. But the third corruption for their purpoſe aforeſaid, and moſt impudent, is, *that ſome of the Caluinists, for omnibus, tranſlate, inter quoſuis, with a marginall interpretation to ſignifie all orders, conditions, ſtates, and qualities of men. So boldly they take away all indifferencie of ſenſes, and make Gods word to ſpeake iuſt that which themſelues would and their hereſie requireth, in which kind they paſſe all impudency and all heretikes that euer were.

CARTVV. 3. [4. Marriage honourable.] This ſentence out of Auguſtine de fide ad Pet. cap. 3. is needleſſe, it being confeſſed (upon 1. Cor. 7. that the chaſtity of virgins is in ſome reſpect, although not ſimply, to be preferred vnto the chaſtity in marriage. In the two next Sections their quarrels againſt our tranſlations are childiſh. The firſt is, for that we ſupply the verbe ſubſtantiue rather in the Indicatiue then in the Imperatiue mood, and ſay that marriage is honourable, rather then let marriage be honourable: where they ought to underſtand, that the verbe ſubſtantiue neither in the Hebrew phraſe, nor yet in the Greeke Teſtament, which followeth the Hebrew phraſe, is ſo often underſtood, and ſo ordinarily as in the Indicatiue mood: beſide that to turne it by the Imperatiue mood, they muſt turne the adverſatiue coniunction that followeth, out of his naturall ſignification (as Arius Montanus doth in the margent) into a cauſall. Beſide that, whether it be turned Imperatinely or Indicatiuely, it hurteth not us, nor helpeth you; for that is honourable indeed and truth which is commanded ſo to be.

The ſecond quarrell is, that we tranſlate amongſt all men, which is (for the Greeke) indifferent to be turned in all poynts and reſpects, ſo that where we would take the word in the Maſculine gender, they will haue it in the Neuter: howbeit the Syriack Paraphraſt in ſaying that their bed is undefiled, doth evidently declare by the relatiue their, that he carrieth the univerſall note unto men, and turneth it as we doe, all men, your owne Denys alſo, and Bruno do the ſame. As for Theophilact, whom you alledge, he is againſt you, who referreth it to all perſons yong and old, all times both of affliction and of proſperity, and to all lawfull reſpects of keeping one in temperance. And Oecumenius whom you alledge, affirming it wholy and in all reſpects honourable, doth thereby teach, that it is alſo in reſpect of the perſons. Chriſoſtome ſpeaketh nothing at all of this matter which they alledge him for. And ſee how unadviſed you are in this wrangling: for in turning it in the Neuter gender, it ſoundeth more to the generality then if it were turned amongſt all men: even as when the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath concluded all under ſinne in the Neuter gender, he ſpake more ſtrongly againſt the iuſtification by workes, then if he had ſaid, all men. Laſt of all, the dogges tooth which you would ſet in M. Beza is broken, in that he expoundeth himſelfe, that marriage is lawfull amongſt any order or calling of men; which if you condemne in him, condemne it alſo in Paphnutius, yea alſo in the whole Councell of Neece, whereof the one alledgeth this ſentence to ſtay the divorce of Miniſters from their wiues: the other allowed it, as hath been ſhewed, upon Math. 8. 14.

RHEM. 4. [7. Remember your Prelates.] Wee be here warned to haue great regard in our life and beliefe, to the holy fathers, Doctors and glorious Biſhops gone before vs in Gods Church not doubting but they being our lawfull Paſtors, had and taught the truth of whom S. Auguſtine ſaid, That which they found in the Church, they held faſt, that which they learned, they taught: that which they receiued of their fathers, the ſame they delinered to their children. Cont. Iulian. li 2. c. 10. Which reſpect to our holy forefathers in faith, is now in this wicked contempt of Heretickes, ſo much the more to bee had. See the ſaid holy Doctors ſecond booke againſt Iulian the Pelagian throughout, what great account he maketh of them in the confutation of hereſies, and how far he preferreth them aboue the proud Sectmaſters of that time: as we muſt now do againſt our new doctors. This place alſo is rightly vſed to proue that the Church of God ſhould keep the memories of Saincts departed, by ſolemne holy dayes and other deuout wayes of honour.

We muſt haue regard to the faith and doctrine of the fathers.

Memories and feaſts of Saints.

CARTVV. 4. [7. Remember your Prelates.] Gods Paſtors are to be regarded when they are gone, and their good things to be carefully kept: but wee ſuppoſe the Ieſuites dote not ſo as to ſet them up in the ſeates of the Apoſtles, or that their Churches ſhould ſo hang of their mouthes, or be ſo ſervants to their pens, that they ſhould receiue what ever they taught one wayes or other. And therefore as Auguſtine carried a reverend reſpect unto the Fathers which went before him: ſo was it not without exception, who teacheth that neither Cyprian, nor Hillarie, nor Agrippines, nor any other, no nor all other Biſhops ought ſo to be read, as that it ſhould not be lawfull for us to think otherwiſe then they did. And it is wel known that your flight unto the fathers is not in loue or honor you beare unto them, or reliefe that you can finde amongſt them, but onely as the Iewes cleaved unto Caſar whom they hated, in further hatred of Chriſt: ſo you in miſlike and hatred of the pith and ſtrength of the Scriptures that grinde your popery to powder, which the Fathers doe in compariſon but cruſh: and for that the poynt of the Lords words is ſo ſet, that it cannot be turned away from the heart of your Popery, where the Fathers writings (as the words of men and not of God) may eaſilier be wreſted to giue that colour unto your filth, whereof the ſhew cannot be had out of the Scripture. The text doth expreſſe wherein the godly guides ſhould be remembred, namely, in the imitation of their holy faith, thereby manifeſtly preventing this and other ſuperſtitious remembrances of them by ſolemne holy dayes. And therefore it is your impudencie to ſay, that this place is rightly uſed to proue ſuch a kinde of honour. And if either of theſe two things might be naturally gathered, which you violently ſtraine out of this place, yet ſhould it binde onely thoſe particular flockes upon whom the good Paſtors haue had their watch. So that Cyprians authority and ſolemne feaſts ſhould be bounded within Carthage, and Auguſtines ſhould not paſſe the territories of Hippo; the exhortation being, that euery particular Church ſhould lift up their eyes to their owne governours, which is anſwer more then ſufficient to the marginall note of the ninth verſe.

Iudaical abstinence from meates.

RHEM. 5. [9. Not with meates.] He speaketh not of Christian fastes, but of the legall difference of meates which the Hebrewes were yet prone vnto: not considering that by Christs faith they were made free from all such obseruations of the Law.

CARTVV 5. [9. Not with meats.] It is true that he speaketh not against Christian fasts, but he speaketh against Popish fat fasts, as well as against Iewish abstinence, and so much the more, as they cannot be content with the name of abstinence as the Iewes did, but will needs be said to fast when they are full, and consequently (according to the common proverbe which their fast was father of) fasting full; beside that the Papists haue lesse colour of their difference and forbearance of meat, which is none in drinke: of flesh, which is none in fish, then the Iewes which once received a Law for discerning of them, from the Lord.

Verse. 10. We haue an Altar: whereof they haue not power to eate which serue the tabernacle.

Materiall Altar for the sacrifice of Christs body.

RHEM. 6. [10. We haue an altar.] Hee putteth them in mind by these words, that in following too much their old Iewish rites, they depriued themselues of another manner and a more excellent sacrifice and meat: meaning of the holy altar, and Christs own blessed body offered and eaten there, of which, they that cont nue in the figures of the old Law, could not be partakers. This altar (saith Isychius) is the altar of Christs body, which the Iewes for their incredulitie must not behold Li. 6. c. 21. in Leuit. And the Greeke word (as also the Hebrew answering thereunto in the old Testament) signifieth properly an altar to sacrifice on, and not a metaphoricall and spirituall altar. Whereby we proue against the Heretickes, that we haue not a common table or prophane communion boord to eate meere bread vpon, but a very altar in the proper sense, to sacrifice Christs body vpon: and so called of the fathers in respect of the said body sacrificed. Greg. Nazian. in orat. de sorore Gorgonia. Chrysost. demonst. quod Christus sit Deus Socrat. li. 1 c 20. 25. August. Epist. 86. De ciuitate Dei. li. 8. c. 27. & lib. 22. cap 10. Confess. lib. 9. cap. 11. 13. Contr. faust. Manich. lib 20 cap 21. Theophylact. in 23. Matth. And when it is called a table, it is in respect of the heauenly foode of Christs body and bloud received.

CARTVV. 6. [10 We haue an Altar.] The Writer to the Hebrewes exhorting them to seek establishment of their hearts in the grace which was brought vnto them in the Gospell, and not in the discretion of meates, alledgeth this for proofe, that euen as those which serued the Tabernacle were not partakers by eating of those beasts whose bloud being brought into the holy place, their bodies were burnt without the campe: Euen so, those which holding fast the ceremonies of the Law, are euen yet as it were in the Tabernacle, cannot be partaker of our Saviour Christ, who suffered out of the gates of Ierusalem, and is the truth of those shadowes and figures which were burnt without the Camp. This being the very naturall meaning of the text, let the Reader obserue, how not childishly onely, but absurdly also, the Iesuites apply this place to proue a reall Altar, and consequently a sacrifice of Christ in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: For first, what is that which the Iewes are threatened to be deprived of the eating of: If the Iesuites will answer according to their drift heere of proving an Altar of stone, and not a Communion Table, they must say that for reward of their obstinate cleaving to the ceremonies of the Law, they shall not eat stones, a small punishment for so great a sinne, which if the Iesuites were put unto, they would (I think) cry for a Communion Table, as of some better digestion then the Popish Altar: Whereby it is euident how sottish it is which they straine so much at touching the proper signification of the Greeke word, and the Hebrew answering thereunto: which as if those words which properly signifie one thing, cannot by borrowed speech signifie another thing vnproperly: And as though they were ignorant that the word as properly signifieth a reall sacrifice, as this word signifieth an altar were not in this very chapter translated from the property of it to signifie a spirituall sacrifice. Wherefore by the Altar is meant our Saviour Christ, so called, for that as hee is the Priest and Sacrifice, so also hee is the Altar which sanctified himselfe to be offered vnto his holy Father, as the Altar did sanctifie the gift which was vpon it. And it is Christ, not sacrificed vpon an Altar of stone by a Priest, but which offered himselfe vpon Mount Calvary, without the gates of Ierusalem, as is expresly mentioned heere in this place. Neither doth the Writer to the Hebrewes meane Christ suffering in a Mysterie, but that oblation of himselfe which hee once offered, wherein the fire of Gods anger fed vpon his body and soule to haue (as were the sacrifices of beasts) consumed them, if that his humanity had not beene supported and borne up by the eternall spirit of his God-head, wherein he offered himselfe vnto his holy Father. And Isychius li. 6. c. 21. in Leu. saying that Christs body is the Altar, confuteth you plainely, that heereof would ground an Altar of stone: and saying that the Iewes for their incredulity must not behold him, he giueth you another blow, thereby declaring that the eating of Christ is the beholding of him, and not the carnall eating of him, or swallowing him down the throate. And the beholding of Christ he placeth in the eye of faith, which the incredulous Iewes wanting must not behold him.

Ioan. Vers. 16. Ioh. 17. Math. 23.

What cursed spirits therefore are these, which vpon the confidence of this place, making as much for their Altar as for Baals; scoffe at the holy Table of the Lord in calling it a common and prophane board, which must needs (vnlesse they haue hardned their faces to all impudency) grant that the first and last time that ever our Saviour Christ ministred the Eucharist in his own person, did it at a Table, and not at an Altar, and at the same Table also at which hee eate his common repast, which notwithstanding we do not, nor (in the peace and quiet of the Church) think meet to bee done: But of this matter let the Reader see more before vpon 1. Cor. 11. 29, where also he shall see how vnworthily the ancient Fathers are abused for maintenance of Massing Altars. And let it be here obserued how the euidence of the truth presseth them, which are faine to confesse that the Fathers call it as well a Table as an Altar, but say they that is vnproperly in respect of the heauenly food of Christs body and bloud receiued. And I pray you what should let us to say that when they call it an Altar, they do it unproperly, because of the spirituall sacrifice of thankes giving that is offered at it. Set aside the truth of the cause triable by other reasons what warrant haue you for your answer which we haue not for ours. Nay we may much trulyer say it then you can; which having shewed it before will heere content our selues with one place, and the same taken from your own allegations. And from him who may well be in stead of all the rest, for August. epist. 86. speaking of that which under the Gospell succeeded that under the Law saith thus: One Altar ought to giue place to another, sword to sword, fire to fire, bread to bread, beast to beast, bloud to bloud: Where by the same reason that the beast which is offered must needs bee an unproper speech, and the fire that consumeth it a metaphoricall fire: it followeth that the Altar whereupon the beast is laid and consumed must needs be an unproper speech. And indeed this unpropriety of speech in the Altar is yet further confirmed, when in the same place Augustine obiecteth to one as an ignorance that hee understood not the name of Altar to be more used in the writing of the Law and of the Prophets, then under the Gospell: but most evidently of all, in that hee proving that there is mention of an Altar in the new Testament, alledgeth the place in the Apocalipse, which the Iesuites themselues interpret of our Saviour Christ. You were heere also greatly over-seen to bring this place; seeing he against whom this ignorance is objected, affirmed that in stead of a beast, we haue now bread in the Sacrament, and in stead of bloud we haue the cup: where you would beare the world in hand that Beringarius was the first that denied Transubstantion: And Augustine answering it, and affirming that bloud succeeded to bloud, yet doth evidently declare that he meant a figuratiue and Sacramentall bloud, in that where the other said we had in stead of a beast bread, Augustine answereth, that as the Iewes had the presence bread, so we in the Supper of the Lord: and when he saith, that every one taketh a peece of the Immaculate Lambe; it is evident that hee meaneth by the Lambe, the figure and Sacrament of the Lambe, unlesse you will dare to say that our Saviour Christ in the Supper is cut or broken in peeces: but as for your shift it is not so honest: for presupposing (as you do) that it is very bloud and raw flesh which is there received: the word of Table fitteth it not so well, but rather the word of Altar ought to haue been retained; considering that men use not to bring any of these dishes to their Tables, and yet were usually brought under the Law to the Altar: which Altar if you be ashamed to build up againe to haue place meet for your Popish dishes, you shall repaire to the Butchers shamble or slaughter house, where this Marchandise of yours is most saleable.

Verse. 15. By him therefore let us offer the host of praise alwaies to God, that is to say the fruit of lips confessing his name.

RHEM. 7. [15. The host of praise] Though it may signifie the spirituall sacrifices of praise and thanks giuing of what sort soeuer: yet it specially may be thought to signifie the great Sacrifice of the B. body and bloud of Christ, not as vpon the Crosse, which was but once done in bloudy sort, but as in the Church, new Testament, where it is daily done unbloudily, being the proper host of laude and thanks giuing & therefore called the Eucharist, and being the fruite and effect of Christ & his Priests lippes or words, that is of consecration: because this sacrifice is made by the force of the holy words. And when we read in the Psalm & other places of the old Testament, of the host of praise, it may be thought to be a prophecie of the new Sacrifice, and not euery vulgar thanksgiuing. And so the old fathers in the primitiue Church to hide the mysteries from the vnworthy or heathen, often speake. What is (saith S. Augustine) a more holy sacrifice of praise, then that which consisteth in thanks-giuing all which the faith all do know in the sacrifice of the Church Li 1. cont. aduers. leg & proph. c. 18. Again c. 20. The Church from the times of the Apostles by the most certaine successions of Bishops offereth to God in the body of Christ the sacrifice of praise. And a little afterward, Now Israel according to the spirit, that is, the Church offereth a singular sacrifice according to the spirit: of whose house he will not take calues nor goates, but will take the sacrifice of praise, not according to the order of Aaron, but according to the order of Melchisedec. See ep. 120. c. 19. & ep. 57. ad q. 1. in fine. Thus you see, when the holy fathers handle the Scriptures, they find Masse and sacrifice in many places, where the ignorant heretickes or the simple might thinke they speake onely of a common thanks-giuing.

The sacrifice of the altar is principall host of praise and thanksgiving, therefore called, Eucharistia.

CARTVV. 7. [15 The host of praise.] If there were any greater note of confusion then Babylon, that, might worthily be applyed unto these Romish Babylonians, to whom it is a small matter to sow two kinds of seeds in the most holy ground of the sacred Scriptures, unlesse the Princely Eagle of the Lords praise be also iumbled together by them, with the buzzardly and blinde Iay of the Popish Masse. Lev. 19.

Let it be observed therefore first, that the whole Church being here exhorted to offer this sacrifice of praise, if the sacrifice of the Masse should heere be meant, then every one in the Church must be a Masse Priest. The Writer to the Hebrewes having moved all the Church in the former verses, by the example of Christ to be content to beare reproach for his sake, and even to forsake our Countries if need be; in this verse he exhorteth them that they should do the same (as did the Apostles, and as some of themselues had done) gladly, even praysing the Lord that they were thought worthy to suffer for Christ: And therefore in the next verse ioyning unto this holy service of thankes giving to the Lord, the charitable assistance that is given unto the Brethren, hee saith, that God is well pleased with such sacrifices: ranging this thankes giving unto God mentioned in this verse, to one and the same kind of Sacrifice with the reliefe that is given unto the needy members of Christ. Act. 5. 41. Heb. 10. 34

Iuxim.

Secondly, the word here used signifieth properly in the Greek tongue, and in the Hebrew tongue answering to this, a slaine sacrifice: If therefore the word before, because it properly so signifieth, proue a true Altar made of stone, this word heere must proue a true reall, and not onely a figuratiue or mysticall death of Christ onely.

Thirdly, this sacrifice of praise must be (as is heere expressed) offered through the Mediatour and in the name of Christ: if therefore Christ be heere the sacrifice of praise; it followeth, that Christ the sacrifice must be offered and made acceptable unto God by himselfe, and consequently must be his own Mediator. Fourthly, the Writer to the Hebrewes expounderh what is this ſacrifice, ſaying, that it is the fruit of the lips which giue thankes unto his name: whereby may eaſily appeare how the Ieſuites were bereaved of their wits when they referre theſe words, to the foure words Hoc eſt corpus meum, wherewith the Prieſt maketh his Maker: for here the ſacrifice of praiſe is all one and the ſame (as is expreſly noted) with the fruite of the lippes, which confeſſe or giue thanks unto his name: whereas the hoſt of the Maſſe is the effect of the foure words ſpoken by the Prieſt, and the words mumbled by him are the efficient cauſe (at the leaſt inſtrumentally) of the hoſt which the Prieſt maketh.

Thus the Reader may ſee what fine noſed curres theſe Ieſuites be, which can ſmell out a Maſſe where the ſent of it is ſo dead. It is true indeed, that it is an uſuall thing amongſt the ancient Fathers, to call the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, a ſacrifice of praſe, as indeed both it is, and ſo taught and willingly yeelded of us to be even in the choiſeſt thanke-giving of all other: but it is utterly overthrown of theſe wretches, who making it a propitiatory ſacrifice for ſinne do leaue no place wherein the ſacrifice of thanke-giving may reſt her head, one and the ſame ſacrifice never being both a ſacrifice for ſinne, and of thanks at once. We let paſſe their unlearned diſtinction of their Maſſing hoſts from the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, whilſt in way of diſcretion of one from the other, they ſay that it is as in the Church and new Teſtament, as if the ſacrifice upon the Croſſe was not likewiſe done both in the Church and new Teſtament, except by the Church, they underſtand the Church which is builded of wood and ſtone, in which ſtraight ſignification the Maſſes which are ſaid in Cellars and Butteries, will hardly come in account of Church Maſſes, but muſt be called Cellar and Buttry Maſſes.

Verſe. 16. And beneficence and communication do not forget, for with ſuch hoſts God is promerited.

The Proteſtants anoyd the word merit.

Δαπισεῖται. Good workes meritorious.

RHEM. 8. [16. God is promerited.] This Latin word promeretur, cannot bee expreſſed effectually in any one Engliſh word. It ſignifieth Gods fauour to bee procured in the foreſaid works of almes and charitie, as by the deſerts and merites of the doers. Which doctrine and word of merites the Aduerſaries like ſo ill, that they flee both here and elſe where from the word, tranſlating here for promeretur Deus, God is pleaſed, more neere to the Greeke, as they pretend. Which in deed maketh no more for them then the Latine, which is agreeable to moſt auncient copies as wee ſee by Primaſius & Auguſtines ſcholler. For if God be pleaſed with good works and ſhew fauour for them, then are they meritorious, and then onely faith is not the cauſe of Gods fauour to men.

Heb. 11. 5. 21.

CARTVV. 8. [16. God is promerited] It cannot bee denied by any modeſtie, but that the words ſignifie, that God is well pleaſed, or God is pleaſed, and therefore that our tranſlation is true, and the vulgar not ſo, or at the leaſt not ſo dew. And the vulgar and the Ieſuites after it, having ſo tranſlated it before, it is ſo much the greater fault there not to giue the ſame weight of words in the tranſlation, where the ſame valuation is in the Originall. And although the ancient Writers, as Primaſius following this tranſlation, and Cyprian as they haue alledged him before, uſe this word, yet that they varry from this Popiſh ſence of meriting, this one ſentence of Ierome doth notably declare, ſo much the more to be regarded as the Ieſuites will needs haue this tranſlation Ieromes. Let therefore Ierome himſelfe, the father (as they ſay) of this tranſlation expound himſelfe. It is (ſaith he) a great bleſſednes to deſerue the grace of God without the labour of the Law and of repentance, as when one receiueth a dignitie of nought: then which what can be more pregnant to the advancement of Gods free grace without all manner of worke. Looke alſo Pontianus which was Cyprians Deacon, who uſeth the ſame word that Cyprian, declareth that his meaning is no other then that God is pleaſed with ſuch good duties. And if in this barbarous language of the old Tranſlator, nothing riſeth but the Popiſh deſert of works, how much leſſe groweth there any thing unto it in the natiue tongue of the H. Ghoſt: and therefore it is too extreame boldneſſe of the Ieſuites to ſay, that the pleaſing of God with theſe workes is of the ſame value with deſert by them: as if they could be ignorant how inconſequent it is that becauſe a father is better pleaſed with the ſtammering tongue of his childe, then with the filed and cunning ſpeech of a ſtranger: therfore the ſtutting tongue of the liſping babe deſerueth more favour then the gracious ſpeech of the eloquent man: beſides that it hath been ſhewed, that whatſoever pleaſure is taken in the workes, is not in their merit, but in regard of faith, ſo farre as by faith Chriſt is apprehended and laid hold by of it.

Verſe. 17. Obey your Prelates, and be ſubiect to them. For they watch as being to render account for your ſoules: that they may doe this with ioy, and not mourning: for this is not expedient for you.

The Apoſtle doth inculcate obedience to the Pireſis and Biſhops of Gods Church

No perſon exempted from this obedience in matters of Religion.

RHEM. 9. [17. Obey your Prelates.] There is nothing more inculcated in the holy Scriptures then obedience of the lay people to the Prieſts and Prelates of Gods Church, in matters of ſoule, conſcience, and religion. Whereof the Apoſtle giueth this reaſon, becauſe they haue the charge of mens ſoules, and muſt anſwer for them: which is an infinite preheminence and ſuperiority, ioyned with burden, & requireth maruelous ſubmiſſion & moſt obedient ſubiection of all that be vnder them & their gouernment. From this obedience there is no exception nor exemption of kings nor Princes, be they neuer ſo great. If they haue ſoules, & be Chriſtian men, they muſt be ſubiect to ſome biſhop, Prieſt, or other Prelate. And whatſoeuer he be (though Emperour of all the world) if he take vpon him to preſcribe & giue lawes of religion to the Biſhops and Prieſts, whom he ought to obey and be ſubiect vnto religion, hee ſhall be damned vndoubtedly, except he repent, becauſe he doth againſt the expreſſe word of God and law of nature. And by this you may ſee the difference of an hereticall and a diſordered time, from other Catholike Chriſtian dayes. For hereſie and the like damnable reuolts from the Church of God, is no more but a rebellion and diſobedience to the Prieſts of Gods Church, when men refuſe to be vnder their diſcipline, to heare their doctrine and interpretation of Scriptures, to obey their lawes and counſels. This diſobedience and rebellion from the the ſpirituall Gouernour vnder pretence of obedience to the Temporall, is the bane of our dayes, and ſpecially of our Country, where theſe new Sects are properly maintained by this falſe princip'e, That the Prince in matters of ſoule and religion may command the Prelate: which is directly and euidently againſt this Scripture and all other, that command the ſheep of Chriſts fold to obey their ſpirituall Officers.

CARTVV. 9. [17. Obey your Prelates.] It is true that no Prince nor Keiſar is exempted from the obedience of his Paſtor in things that belong unto God, ſo farre forth as they deliver and teach nothing but that which they haue in commandement from the Lord, but this maketh nothing for the Pope which is not our Biſhop or Paſtor, but againſt him, ſeeing Princes are to be ſubiect in Gods matters unto their owne, not to forraigne and ſtrange Biſhops and Paſtors.

Againe, we are bound (by the rule) to obey thoſe Paſtors which are to giue an account of our ſoules: ſeeing therefore the Pope holdeth not himſelfe accountable for our ſoules, eſteemeth that he may throw headlong into hell many thouſands of them without being once asked, Sir, why do ye ſo? it is evident that he is none of our Paſtor, but a cruel & a horrible Wolfe. Neither is it any more due unto your Popiſh Biſhops and Prieſts, then to the Pope; conſidering that thoſe to whom this obedience is done, are before deſcribed (verſ. 7.) ſuch as ſpeake the word of God unto their ſeverall flockes: where they either ſpeake not, or if they ſpeake, deliuer their owne and other mens fanſies, and not the word of God.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE EPISTLE OF S. IAMES.

RHEMIST.

THIS Epiſtle (as the reſt following) is directed ſpecially, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, againſt the errour of onely faith, which ſome held at that time alſo, by miſconſtruing S. Pauls words. Yea not onely that but many other errours (which then alſo were annexed vnto it, as they are now) doth this Apoſtle here touch expreſly.

Hee ſaith therefore that not onely faith, but alſo good workes are neceſſary: that not onely faith, but alſo good workes doe iuſtifie: that they are acts of Religion, or ſeruice and worſhip of God: that to keepe all the commandements of God, and ſo to abſtaine from all mortall ſinne, is not impoſſible, but neceſſary: that God is not author of ſinne, no not ſo much as of tentation to ſinne: that wee muſt ſtay our ſelues from ſinning, with feare of our death, of the Iudgement or hell: and ſtir our ſelues to doing of good with our reward that we ſhall haue for it in heauen. Theſe points of the Catholike faith he commendeth earneſtly vnto vs, inueighing vehemently againſt them that teach the contrary errors. Howbeit he doth withall admoniſh not to neglect ſuch, but to ſeeke their conuerſions, ſhewing them how meritorious a thing that is. Thus then he exhorteth generally to all good works, and dehorteth from all ſinne, but yet alſo namely to certaine, and from certain: as, from acception of perſons, from detraction and raſh iudging, from concupiſcence and loue of this world, from ſwearing: and to prayers, to almes, to humility, confeſſion and penance: but moſt copiouſly to patience in perſecution.

Which Iames wrote this Epiſtle.

Now, who this Iames was: It is not he, whoſe feaſt the Church keepeth the 25. of Iulie, which was S. Iohns brother, & whoſe martyrdom we haue Act. 21. but he, whom the Church worſhippeth the firſt of May, who is called Frater Domini, our Lords brother, and brother to Iude, and which was the firſt Biſhop of Hieruſalem, of whom we reade, Act. 15. & 21. and alſo Gal. 2. of whoſe wonderfull auſterity and purity of life, the Eccleſiaſticall ſtories do report. Euſebius lib. 2. cap. 22. Hierome in Catologo.

Therefore as the old high-Prieſt had power and charge ouer the Iewes, not onely in Hieruſalem and Iurie, but alſo diſperſed in other Countries (as we vnderſtand Act. 9. v. 1. & 2.) ſo S. Iames likewiſe, being Biſhop of Hieruſalem, and hauing care not ouely of thoſe Iewes with whom hee was reſident there in Iewrie, but of all the reſt alſo, writeth this Epiſtle, To the twelue tribes that are in diſperſion, and in them, to all Chriſtians vniuerſally diſperſed through the world.

THE CATHOLICKE EPISTLE OF IAMES THE APOSTLE.

Catholike Epiſtle.) The word Catholike though in the title of this Epiſtle and the reſt following (called the Catholike Epiſtles) be not wholy in the ſame ſenſe, as it is in the Creed, yet the Proteſtants ſo feare and abhor the word altogether that in ſome of their Bibles they leaue it cleane out, although it be in the Greeke, and in ſome they had rather tranſlate ridiculouſly thus, The generall

The Proteſtants abhor the word Catholike.

Euſeb. lib. 2. hiſt. c. 22. Epiſtles, for that they are written to the whole Church, not to any peculiar people or perſon, as S. Pauls are.

CARTVV. What this large quotation of Auguſtin meaneth without reſtraint either of Tome or book: the reader, not altogether partiall, may eaſily vnderſtand. For ſeeing they ſet the Dice on him euer when they alleage booke and chapter; that they now play falſe when they ſet him to range ouer Auguſtines whole works, is (euen of Charitie it ſelfe) more then to be ſuſpected. Wherein the better to vphold the reader, and to the end that Auguſtines iudgement touching the doctrine of this Epiſtle may be the better known, let it be a little conſidered what he writeth of this matter. Wherefore going about to recount the appearance of repugnancie between Paul and Iames, thus he ſpeaketh. If Chriſt bee the foundation, then, out of controuerſie, the faith of Chriſt is alſo, for Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by faith. Moreouer, it is the faith of Chriſt, euen that which the Apoſtle defineth, which worketh by Charitie: for the faith of Deuils cannot bee taken for a foundation, when as they alſo do beleeue and tremble, and confeſſe Ieſus the ſonne of God. Wherefore becauſe it is not that faith which worketh by charitie, but which is declared by feare, therefore the faith of Chriſt, the faith of the Chriſtian grace, that is, that faith which worketh by charitie, being laid or ſet vpon the foundation, ſuffereth no man to periſh, where there are many gibbets to hang the popiſh doctrine on in this behalfe. As that firſt, hee maketh it all one to haue CHRIST our fouudation, and to haue faith our foundation, teaching thereby, that the iuſtifying faith hangeth not in the beleefe of GOD, and of all things belonging vnto him, but is reſtrained vnto Chriſt, as vnto her proper obiect whereof it onely layeth hold. Hereupon hee calleth it the faith of Chriſt, and the faith of the grace in Chriſt, noting thereby, that it faſteneth it ſelfe vpon the grace of God, which is ſhewed vnto men for Chriſt. Thereof it is alſo that he oppoſeth it to the faith of the Deuils, which haue no ſenſe of the grace of God in Chriſt; where the Papiſts confound the faith which Paul affirmeth to iuſtifie, with that of the Deuils. Secondly hee affirmeth that the faith which iuſtifieth, alwayes worketh by Charitie, which he other where confirmeth more
Lib. de 38. queſt. 470. pregnantly, ſaying, for he that is iuſtified by faith, how can he but worke iuſtly? where the Papiſts hold, that good works may be ſeuered from Chriſtian faith. Thirdly, hee ſaith that the faith which Paul ſpeaketh of, ſuffereth no man to periſh; directly contrary to the popiſh doctrine, which teacheth that a man may periſh which hath that faith. Otherwhere alſo hee doth ſet downe the Lib de 83. queſt. 76. ſtate of the queſtion notably. Paul (ſaith he) teaching that a man is iuſtified by faith without works, is ill vnderſtood of thoſe which take it ſo ſpoken, as if men that had once beleeued in Chriſt, might be ſaued by faith, although they liued wickedly and criminouſly. And againe, Iames is againſt them, which preſuming of faith alone, will not work well. Not as you pretend him ſpeaking againſt thoſe which plead the whole cauſe of Enarratione in Pſal. 31. Preſatione. their ſaluation in faith alone. Which yet appeareth more, in that Abrahams good work of offering his ſon, is ſaid to be of faith and a fruit or effect of faith: where you make it a fellow cauſe of Iuſtification with faith.

As for the commendation of Iames his authoritie over the Iewes Countrey, thereby to magnifie
Math. 28. 19. his Miniſtery aboue others, it is vnlearned, if he meane to compare him with other Apoſtles, who had authority in all the world. And if they meane that by compariſon and compact amongſt the Apoſtles, his ſpeciall charge lay towards them, it is true: but nothing therby groweth vnto Iames, which
Gal. 2. 7. 9 agreeth not to Peter and Iohn as well as vnto him. In which regard their Epiſtles are generall as well as his. Where alſo let the Reader iudge of the cauilling and ſnaring ſpirit of theſe trifling Ieſuites, which granting this, do yet finde fault that we haue tranſlated it rather generall, which is a meere Engliſh tearme, and of no doubtfull ſignification, then Catholick, which is both Greeke, and (by their ſaying) of double and therefore doubtful ſignification. Although theſe Idiots, ſaying that theſe Epiſtles were written to the whole Church, and not to any one people, are exceedingly confuted by the Inſcription of both this and S. Peters Epiſtle, which teacheth, that they were written not to the whole Church, but onely to one people, the twelue tribes of the Iewes; although the doctrine of them (as doth alſo the moſt ſpecialleſt of Pauls) belongeth vnto the whole Church. Which thing being expreſly ſet downe of Iames and Peters Epiſtles, may eaſily (if need were) bee proued of Iohns
1. Ioh. 2. 2. firſt Epiſtle; there, ſaying (of the difference of Catholick; here, from Catholicke in the Articles of our beleefe, which is not ſhewed) likewiſe of our abhorring from the word of Catholick, which is euidently falſe. And laſt of all, of our leaving out this Title in ſome of our Bibles, which is (if it be true) friuolous, conſidering that it were a leauing out of a few words of the Greeke Scholiaſt, and not of the Apoſtles themſelues) is vnworthy any anſwer.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 6. But let him | aske in faith nothing doubting: for hee that doubteth, is like to a waue of the sea, which is moved and carried about by the winde.

What faith is required in prayer.

RHEM. 2. [6. Aske in faith nothing doubting.] The Protestants would proue by this, that no man ought to pray without assurance that he shall obtain that which he asketh. Where the Apostle meaneth nothing els, but that the asker of lawfull things may not either mistrust Gods power & habilitie, or be in diffidence and despaire of his mercy: but that our doubt be onely in our own vnworthines or vndue asking.

CARTVV. 2. [6 Aske in faith nothing doubting.] If the Protestants would proue by this, that none must pray without assurance of obtaining that hee asketh, they proue it by the plaine and expresse words of the Scripture, which teach the same, not onely otherwhere in words of the same value, but in this place, in as many and as strong words as they affirme it in. Against which the Iesuites evasion, that the Apostle meaneth it not, is as much as if they said, that hee speaketh one thing, and meaneth another; and that hee thinketh one thing and speaketh another, notwithstanding that he speaketh in plaine words, in vnfigured, and vnborrowed speaches, which if their forehead, (harder then the adamant) will say of Iames, yet ought they to blush to ascribe such double dealing to the H. Ghost who spake in Iames. But if it be not his meaning which the Protestants (vsing the same words do) affirm, it is much lesse his meaning which the Iesuits, swaruing from the words, pretend. And what do the Iesuits say his meaning to be; that the lawfull asker may neither mistrust Gods power, nor dispaire of his mercy. But how do these wretches gather that which Iames neuer saw, for what syllable is there to restrain the assurance rather to the trust of Gods power then his mercy. And if to the obtaining of any thing it be necessary to be assured of the power of God, why is it not as well necessary to be assured of the mercy of God? And if it be enough to the getting of our petitions, onely not to despaire of Gods mercies, although we be not assured of them, why should it not be enough to the obtaining of our sutes, that we dispaire not in the power of God, although we haue no vndoubted faith of this ability to perform them? where the truth is, that these words, rather respect the vndoubted faith of the Lords good will, then of his power; as it appeareth by our S. Christ, who compareth diuers times this cõmon faith of Gods children, with the particular faith of working miracles, Wherefore, if the Iesuits be ashamed to say, that the faith of miracles, rather consisteth in beleeuing that God is able to do wonders by them whom he calleth thereunto then that hee will work by them, they also ought to couer their faces here. As for that they adde, that our doubt should onely be in our own vnworthinesse, it is very sottish, for if we regard our own unworthines, we are not only to doubt of Gods mercy, but vtterly to dispaire of it; and to be out of all doubt, that in steed of all the good we prayed for, we shall receiue the euils that are most contrary thereunto: our assurance of trust, standing onely in the mercy and free grace of God, which hee hath made promise of, to all that beleeue in him.

Verse. 13. | Let no man when he is tempted, say that he is tempted of God. For | God is not a tempter of evils, and he tempteth no man.

God is not author of euill.

RHEM. 3. [13. Let no man say that he is tempted of God.] We see by this, that when the Scriptures (as in the Pater noster and other places) seeme to say, that God doth sometimes tempt vs, or lead us into tentation: they meane not, that God is any wayes the author, causer, or mouer of any man to sin, but ouely by permission, and because of his gratious power hee keepeth not the offender from tentations. Therefore the blasphemy of Heretikes, making God the author of sin, is intolerable See S. Aug. ser. 9. de diuers. c. 9.

CARTVV. 3. [13. Let no man say that he is tempted of God.] That the Iesuites doe belye vs in saying that we make God the author of sin, and that they are truly charged with that which they falsly accuse vs of, let the reader look before upon Math. 6. 13

Partiall and nulfull translation.

RHEM. 4. [13. God is not a tempter of euils.] The Protestants as much as they may, to diminish the force of the Apostles conclusion against such as attribute their euill tentation to God (for other tentations God doth send to trie mens patience and to proue their faith) take and translate the word passiuely, in this sense that God is not tempted by our euils. Where more consonantly to the letter and circumstance of the words before and after, and as greatly to the Greek, it should bee taken actiuely as it is in the Latin, that God is no tempter to euill, for being taken passiuely, there is no coherence of sense to the other words of the Apostle.

* ἀπείραστος κακῶν

CARTVV. 4. [13. God is not a tempter of euils.] Neither doth the circumstance of the place nor the Greeke word suffer it to bee translated as the Iesuites, after the vulgar, haue done, for the purpose of. Iames, being to shew that no man is tempted to euill by God, his reason is drawn from pares: that as God cannot be tempted to euill, so he can tempt none to it, where, in translating it as the Iesuits haue done, it is a meere nugation, wherein the proofe and the thing proued are all one. Besides that if this were the meaning, that God is not a tempter of euils, then the first coniunction should haue been turned into the later place, and contrariwise. And in steed of this, For God is not tempted of euils, as he verily tempteth none, it should haue been, God verily is not a tempter of euils, for he tempteth no man. Besides that it is well known, that this word is formed of a particle of the passiue, and neither of actiue nor meane voyce. Whereunto also commeth the authority of the Syriack Paraphrast, who expoundeth it as we doe, passiuely. Likewise, of the Greeke Scholiast, who doth evidently so interpret it, alledging first the saying of the heathen, who affirme that that which is divine and blessed, (meaning God) is neither busied himselfe, nor busieth others. And a little after he expoundeth it in his owne words, saying: He hath sufficiently shewed that the diuine Nature neither can it selfe be tempted, nor do that to others. We paſſe by Eraſmus who hath amended the vulgar in this point, where the Reader may eaſily ſee, how beſides the Ieſuites Ignorance both in Logicke and in the tongues, they are extreamely impudent, that could not paſſe that in ſilence, wherein themſelues lie open to ſo evident reproach.

And for δὲ he should haue said γαρ.

Verſe.15. Afterward ſ concupiſcence when it hath conceived, bringeth forth ſin, but ſ ſinne when it is conſummate, ingendreth death.

Concupiſcence of it ſelfe no ſinne.

RHEM.5.[15 Concupiſcence when it hath conceiued.] Concupiſcence (wee ſee here) of it ſelfe is not ſin, as Heretikes falſly teach: but when by any conſent of the mind we do obey or yeeld to it, then is ſin ingendred and formed in vs.

CARTVV.5. [15 Concupiſence when it hath conceiued.] If concupiſcence be not ſin unleſſe there come conſent; then it followeth, that the breach of the tenth commandement is not ſin, ſeeing the deſire that is with conſent is againſt the other commandements: and vnder the tenth, thoſe onely contained which come not to conſent; when therefore concupiſence without conſent is againſt the Law, and whatſoever is againſt the Law is ſinne, it followeth alſo that concupiſence without conſent is ſinne. Againe, when the Apoſtle declareth that there is ſinne even in the yong infants which cannot giue conſent, it is manifeſt that there are ſinnes that are not done with conſent. Moreover, when the Apoſtle Iames aſſigneth the concupiſcence without conception or conſent, the cauſe of ſinne, the effect being ſinne, the cauſe from whence it commeth muſt needs be ſo: Except they dare ſay that our Saviour Chriſts rule faileth of the goodneſſe of the fruite if the tree bee good, and naughtineſſe thereof if the tree be naught. And why elſe doth hee here exhort againſt it, complaining it to be a baite. Laſt of all, when hee ſaith, that the deſire that is without conſent is not of God, hee thereby implyeth that it is of the devill, there being no lawfull deſire but may well be ſaid to be of God. Whereupon Auguſtine ſaith, that the concupiſcence of the fleſh doth ſomewhat when the conſent of the heart is not given: And asking after, what that ſomewhat is, he anſwereth, evill and filthy deſires. Now let the Ieſuites ſhew how deſires without conſent may be evill and filthy, and yet not ſinne. Another ſaith, that ſinne is committed foure waies in the heart: by ſuggeſtion, by delight, by conſent, and by a boldneſſe to defend it. And therefore the Papiſts heerein are more ſhamefull heretickes then the Pelagians; for in denying that there is no ſinne but that whereunto conſent commeth, they are their fellowes which denied the originall corruption to be ſinne. But in that they deny to be ſin, not onely theſe firſt motions that come from naturall corruption, and break out from the beſt men, without all manner liking of them, but thoſe alſo wherewith the fleſh is tickled and delighted, although not to conſent and reſolution to do them: they are worſe then the Pelagian Heretickes. Nay, by the Ieſuites ſaying, not ſo much as concupiſence with conſent ſhould be ſinne, ſeeing Iames doth not ſay here, that concupiſence which conceiveth or conſenteth, is ſin, but that it bringeth forth ſinne: wherefore, when Iames ſaith, it bringeth forth ſinne, his meaning is, that it bringeth forth the ſinne which he ſpeaketh againſt in this place, namely actuall, as to ſay that God is the Author of this tentation.

Aug. lib. de Imp. Iuſt. lib. 2. c. 19. de ſummo bono, called ἐξαίρεσις of S. Iames: called by him, ἐπιστροφὴς.

Not every ſin mortall.

RHEM.6.[15. Sinne conſummate ingendred death.] Here we ſee that not all ſin nor all conſent vnto concupiſcence is mortall or damnable, but when it is conſummate, that is, when the conſent of mans mind fully and perfectly yeeldeth to the committing or liking of the act or motion whereunto concupiſcence moueth or inciteth vs.

Rom.6.23. Rom 5.14. Eſay 5.20.

CARTVV.6. [15 Sinne conſummate engendreth.] The reward and wages of ſinne is death: and if the ſinne of infants without conſent deſerue death, as the Apoſtle teacheth: how much more, that which is with conſent? and therefore to ſay as the Ieſuites do heere, is as much to ſay, that ſome concupiſcence with conſent, is no ſinne at all, which becommeth you well, that the curſe due to thoſe which ſay evill is good evill, and good is, ſowre is ſweet, and ſweet is ſowre, may lay hold of you; and that you may ſhew your ſelues to be the men which teach, that we are nothing beholding unto our Saivour Chriſt, for the pardon of many our grievous ſinnes, as thoſe which deſerving no damnation, needed not to be ranſomed by the death of Chriſt. Go on forward hardly, play the men, and fill up the iniquitie of your fathers; that upon you and your Baſtards may come the bloud of the Sonne of God, which you ſo manifeſtly do offer wrong unto: whereas Iames by the conſummation of ſinne, doth not meane every actuall ſinne, but ſinne cocked and heaped up to ſuch a height as that it calleth for an utter and uncurable and unreſiſtable deſtruction, from the iuſt revenging hand of God: as when a man doth not onely walk in the counſell of the wicked, ſtand in the way of ſinners, but even ſit him down in the ſeate of the ſcornefull: which are of ſuch deſperate hope, as Salomon will not haue them once checked, the onely remedy of recovering them, if they were recoverable.

Pſal. 2.1. Pro.9.7.8.

What is the law of liberty in the new Teſtament.

RHEM.7.[25. The law of perfect libertie.] The law of the Goſpell and grace of Chriſt is called the law of liberty, in reſpect of the yoke and burden of the old carnall ceremonies, and becauſe Chriſt hath by his bloud of the new Teſtament deliuered all that obey him from the ſeruitude of ſinne and the Diuell. But not as the Libertines and other Heretickes of this time would haue it, that in the new Teſtament euery man may follow his owne liking and conſcience, and may chooſe whether hee will bee vnder the lawes and obedience of Spirituall or temporall Rulers, or no.

Verſe.27. ſ Religion cleane and unſpotted with God and the Father, is this, to viſite pupilles and widowes in their tribulation: and to keep himſelfe unſpotted from this world.

Good works a parts of mans iuſtice.

RHEM.8.[27. Religion cleane.] True religion ſtandeth not onely in talking of the Scriptures or onely faith, or Chriſts iuſtice: but puritie of life and good works, ſpecially of charity and mercy, done by the grace of Chriſt. This is the Apoſtolicall doctrine, and far from the Hereticall vanitie of this time.

CARTVV.

CARTVV. 8. [27 Religion cleane.] Seeing the word Religion containeth the whole ſervice of God, and doctrine of pietie, it is no marvell although it ſtandeth not in faith, or in the Iuſtice of Chriſt alone, when to a true worſhip of God, good workes are neceſſarily required. But if you meane thereof to conclude, that we are not ſaved by faith alone, it will require more cord to binde it, then all your robbers of the poore and ſimple ones will affoord.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 20. BVT wilt thou know ‡ O vaine man, that faith without workes is idle.

RHEM 1. [20. O vaine man,] He ſpeaketh to all Heretikes that ſay, faith onely without works doth iuſtifie, calling them vaine men, and comparing them to Deuils.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 1. My brethren, Haue not the faith of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt of glory ‖ in acception of perſons.

RHEM 2. [1. In acception of perſons] The Apoſtle meaneth not, as the Anabaptiſts and other ſeditious perſons ſometime gather hereof, that there ſhould be no difference in common weales or aſſemblies, betwixt the Magiſtrate and the ſubiect, the free man and the bond, the rich and the poore, betwixt one degree and another, for, God and nature, and the neceſſity of man, haue made ſuch diſtinctions, and men are bound to obſerue them. But it is meant onely, or ſpecially, that in ſpirituall gifts and graces, in matters of faith, Sacraments, and ſaluation. and beſtowing the ſpirituall functions and charge of ſoule, we muſt eſteeme of a poore man or a bond man, no leſſe then of the rich man and the free, then of the Prince or the Gentleman: becauſe as Chriſt himſelfe calleth all, and endueth all ſorts with his graces: ſo in ſuch and the like things we muſt not be partiall, but count all to be fellowes, brethren, and members of one head. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith with a ſpeciall clauſe. That wee ſhould not hold or haue the Chriſtian faith with or in ſuch differences or partialitie.

Scripture abuſed by the Anabaptiſts, to make no diſtinction of perſons.

What the Apoſtle meanes by acception of perſons.

CARTVV. 2. [1. Acception of perſons.] Not onely in matters controverſed, but even in others of greateſt evidence and plainneſſe, the vaile of ignorance is upon theſe Ieſuites hearts. For it is evident that he ſpeaketh here of the acception of perſons in civill meetings, and common tables: ſo farre is it that he meant ſpecially, much leſſe onely, of accepting of perſons in ſpirituall gifts and matters of faith: for he checketh them that they ſo farre regarded the outward perſon or face of a man, that in gueſting certaine to their houſes, they preferred the wicked rich unto the godly poore: and not onely preferred them, but even neglected or contemned the other; that where the Farmer had an honorable place at their Tables, the other had ſcarce any place as it were with their Dogges. And notwithſtanding that it be true generally that is here ſaid, that no acception of perſons is admitted in ſpirituall gifts: yet (beſides that it is not the ſpeciall, much leſſe the onely meaning of Iames) it is untrue, that in ſpirituall functions and charge of ſoules, there ought to be no diſtinction of bond and free: it being not onely inconvenient that a ſervant ſhould be a Miniſter of the Church, but unlawfull alſo, as one that being under bond ſervce cannot attend the Miniſtery of many. It is the common ſhame of all Papiſts, that their Munkeries are Receits of children ſtarting from their fathers, and of ſervants running from their maſters: but it is (as we eſteeme) the proper dotage of our Engliſh Ieſuites to teach that a bond-man may haue charge of ſoules in a ſpirituall function, as well as a free.

Verſe 10. And whoſoever ſhall keepe the whole Law, but offendeth in one, ‖ is made guilty of all.

RHEM 3 [10. Is made guilty of all.] He meanth not, that whoſoeuer is a theefe, is alſo a murderer, or that euery murderer is an aduouterer alſo: or that all ſinnes be equall, according to the Stoikes. and the hereſie of Iouinian: much leſſe, that he ſhall haue as great damnation that tranſgreſſeth one commandement, as if hee had offended againſt euery precept, but the ſenſe is, that it ſhall not auaile him to ſaluation, that he ſeemeth to haue kept certain and not broken all the commandements: ſeeing that any one tranſgreſſion of the Law, proueth that he hath not obſerued the whole, which he was bound to do, ſo far as is required and as is poſſible for a man in this life. S. Auguſtine diſputing profoundly in his 29, Epiſtle to S. Hierom, of this place of S. Iames, expoundeth it thus: that he which offendeth in one, that is, againſt the generall and great commandement of loue or charitie (becauſe it is in maner all, as being the ſumme of all, the plenitude of the Law, and the perfection of the reſt) breaketh after a ſort and tranſgreſſeth all, no ſin being committed but either againſt the loue of God, or of our neighbour.

How he that offendeth in one commandement is guilty of all.

CARTVV. 3. 10. Is made guilty of all.] Here are two expoſitions; the one of Auguſtines, and the ſame (as they ſay) profound: another of their owne, which (in truth) although they ſpeak it not in ſo many words, they eſteeme profounder then Auguſtines; yet neither of them (by Auguſtines good leaue, and the Ieſuites good or bad) is to the purpoſe of that which Iames ſpeaketh. For whereas thoſe which made much of the wicked-rich, with contempt of the godly-poore, alledged for their defence, that in entertaining them which were their neighbours, as well as the poore, they followed the Law of Charity, and of common humanity, which is, to do good to all men, even to their enemies: Iames replieth, that if they entertaine the wicked-rich in regard of loue and conſcience to obey the Lord, they will much more make account of the godly poore, and entertaine them courteouſly, as thoſe which which are not onely in the common reckoning of neighbours, and children of one Father Adam, but as those which are knit more straightly in the spirituall consanguinity of being the children of one heavenly father in Iesus Christ their elder brother. And thereupon the better to discover their shamefull hypocrisie, he saith, not that he that breaketh one commandement offendeth against all; but that whosoever maketh no conscience of keeping of one commandement, the same (though hee yeeld an outward and civill obseruation of other commandements) doth it not in regard of obedience unto God, but either to avoyd losse, or to obtaine honour and gaine, or for some such by-respect. For if he that abstaineth from murder doth it in regard of conscience to God-ward, and reverencing the Lords authoritie in that commandement, it is certaine that the same will haue a care of not committing adultery, which bindeth his conscience towards God as well as the other, and is inhibited by the same authority of Gods commandement that the other is.

Verse. 13. For iudgement without mercie to him that hath not done mercy. And mercy exalteth it selfe aboue iudgement.

Workes of mercy exceeding gratefull to God.

RHEM. 4. [13. Iudgement without mercy.] Nothing giueth more hope of mercy in the next life, then the works of almes, charitie, and mercie, done to our neighbours in this life. Neither shal any be vsed with extreme rigour in the next world, but such as vsed not mercy in this world. August. de pec. merit. li. 2. c. 3. Which is true, not onely in respect of the iudgement to euerlasting damnation but also of the temporall chastisement in Purgatorie, as S. August. signifieth declaring that our veniall sinnes bee washed away in this world with daily works of mercy, which otherwise should be chastised in the next. See ep. 29. aforesaid in fine and li. 21. de Ciu. Dei c. 27. in fine.

Mat. 22. 36 37. 38. 39.

CARTVV. 4. [10. Iudgement without mercy.] Augustine lib. de peccat. meritis lib. 2. cap. 3. saith not either the same words or same sence, that nothing giueth more hope of mercie in the next life, then the workes of Almes, Charitie, and Mercy. And it is diuersly false. For first, Hope is the daughter of Faith, and not of workes. Secondly, euen amongst workes, it is evidently false that workes of mercy confirme the hope greatliest: seeing it is certaine, that as the workes of the first table well performed in the service of God, are more excellent then those of the second performed to the neighbour, so they must needs bring greater assurance of the hope of life everlasting to them that are holily exercised in them, in as much as from them commeth a more plentifull testimony of a liuely faith, then from the other of the second Table.

Aug. de sp. et lit. c. 12. Item lib. 2. retract. c. 9. 10. 11. Rom. 4. 13. 14.

In his Epistle 29. he saith nothing of Purgatory, but of purging sinnes in this life by workes of mercy, he hath somewhat that might appeare to make for them: were it not that Augustines ordinary language to the contrary, doth sufficiently declare, that he meaneth onely thereby to teach, rather the necessity then the desert of good workes: As when he saith, that a man is not iustified by the precepts of good life, but by the law of faith; not by the letter, but by the spirit; not by the merits of workes, but by free grace. And euen in this place when he saith, that the promise is thus given unto them; he giveth to understand, that he speaketh not of such merit as secludeth grace, for if it be by promise it is by faith.

In the next place, lib. 21. de ciuit. Dei, c. 27. his discourse is to proue, that by Almes a man cannot receiue profit, if he continue in sinne; but of this purgatory there is nothing, rather there is to the contrary. For not daring to take upon him to determine which are the sinnes whereof a man may be eased by other mens intercessions, which notwithstanding the Iesuites dare undertake to set downe, he saith: But the deliuerance which is, whether it come by a mans owne prayers, or by the Saints that pray for him, bringeth that to passe, that one is not sent into everlasting fire, and not, that he should be pulled from thence after that he hath been some long time there.

Verse. 14. What shall it profite my brethren, if a man say he hath faith: but hath not works? Shall faith be able to saue him?

The proud & impudent dealing of the Heretickes against this Epistle, because it is so plaine against onely faith.

RHEM. 5. [14. What shall it profite, if a man say he hath faith?] This whole passage of the Apostle is so cleere against iustification or saluation by onely faith, damnably defended by the Protestants, and so euident for the necessitie, merite, and concurrence of good works, that their first author Luther and such as exactly follow him, boldly (after the manner of Heretickes) when they can make no shift nor false glose for the text, deny the booke Canonicall Scripture. But Caluin and his companions disagreeing with their Masters, confesse it to bee holy Scripture, but their shifts and fond gloses for answer of so plaine places, bee as impudent as the denying of the Epistle was in the other, who would neuer haue denied the booke, thereby to shew themselues Heretickes, if they had thought those vulgar euasions that the Zuinglians and Caluinists do vse (whereof they were not ignorant) could haue serued. In both sorts the Christian Reader may see, that all the Heretikes vaunting of expresse Scriptures and the word of God, is no more but to delude the world, whereas indeed, bee the Scriptures neuer so plaine against them, they must either bee wrested to sound as they say, or else they must bee no Scriptures at all. And to see Luther, Caluin, Beza, and their fellowes, sit as it were in iudgement of the Scriptures, to allow or disallow at their pleasures, it is the most notorious example of Hereticall pride and miserie that can bee. See their prefaces and censures vpon this Canonicall Epistle, the Apocalypse, the Macabees and other.

CARTVV. 5. [14 What shall it profite, if a man say hee hath faith?] If the mettall of any mans wit and understanding be so bate, as not to know that it hindreth not at all the sole iustification by faith, that the man that saith he hath faith and hath no workes, is not profited thereby, he is verily worthy to be condemned to dig in the mettall pits, or (as the practise now is against such blockheads) to be sent unto the Gallies for ever. If he had said, that if a man haue faith and no good workes, it will availe nothing; as hee should thereby haue proved the necessity and concurrence of good workes with faith: so, the merit of them he could not haue iustified: But upon the fruitlessenesse of a brag, and boast of faith without good works, to conclude against the sole iustification of faith, and that so triumphantly, and with banner displayed, as do the Iesuites, it is either extreme folly or impudency. For let them answer whether it is all one to haue a true faith, and to say he hath a true faith: Which if it be not cleere enough in it selfe, yet it is evidently explained by the similitude which this Apostle useth. For, saith he, what profiteth it if one say to the naked or hungry, be warmed and refreshed, and in the meane season give him nothing: As therefore it is no true charity which professeth good will to help, and helpeth not; so it is not true faith which is severed from good workes. And when he compareth the faith he here speaketh of, with the faith of devils, which look assuredly, notwithstanding their faith, to be damned: is there any so senseless as not to see that this is not spoken of the faith of Gods children? wherefore, the profite which is denied unto such a faith, is not denied to the faith of Gods children, which alwaies purgeth the heart, and worketh by charity: whereby appeareth how neither M. Calvin, Beza, nor Zuinglius, are put to any shift of defending the sole iustification by faith, nor M. Luther driven to any necessity of denying the sacred authority of this Epistle: whom as we will not iustifie for his not so full and through reverence given to this Epistle as was due, so also that he is therein shamefully slandered by this viperous generation of Iesuites, let the Reader look ‡ otherwhere in the learned Treatises of our Brethren. Reade I pray you (good Reader) M. Calvins and M. Bezaes Prefaces, together with Erasmus upon this Epistle and the Apocalyps, and thou shalt see that there is nothing spoken of them but that which beseemeth godly learned men to speake of the heavenly Oracles of the ever-living God: otherwise thou maist assure thy selfe that they would not send thee to them, but would haue brought them to thee. As for their censures on the books of the Machabees, and others like to them, which as chaffe (in comparison of the Lords wheate in the other two) they haue winnowed out of the Canonicall Scriptures, it hath been shewed (in the answer to the Preface, and otherwhere) that they haue done it with the breath of the Lords mouth, and even with the fanne of the ancient Councels and Fathers, which haue esteemed no better of them then these men haue done.

Vers. 15. 15. Vers. 19.

Augl. in Gal. 5.

In M. Whitakers against Campion, & the disputations in the Tower.

Verse. 21. ¶ Abraham our father was he not iustified by workes, offering Isaac his sonne upon the Altar?

RHEM. 6. [21. Abraham was he not iustified by works?] It is much to be noted that S. Augustine in his booke de fide & operibus c. 14. writeth that the heresie of onely faith iustifying or sauing, was an old heresie euen in the Apostles time gathered by the false interpretation of some, of S. Pauls profound disputation in the Epistle to the Romanes, wherein hee commended so highly the faith in Christ, that they thought good works were not auaileable: adding further, that the other three Apostles, Iames, Iohn, and Iude, did of purpose write so much of good works, to correct the said errour of onely faith, gathered by the misconstruction of S. Pauls words. Yea when S. Peter (Epist. 2. c. 3.) warneth the faithful that many things be hard in S. Pauls, and of light vnlearned men mistaken to their perdition: the said S. Augustine affirmeth, that hemeant of his disputation concerning faith, which so many Heretickes did mistake to condemne good works. And in the preface of his commentarie vpon the 31. Psalme, hee warneth all men, that this deduction vpon S. Paul speach, Abraham was iustified by faith, therefore good works bee not necessarie to salvation: is the right way to the guise of Hell and damnation.

S. Iames and the rest inculcate good workes against the errour of onely faith falsly gathered of S. Pauls words.

Loco citato. Lib. 83. q.q. 76.

S. Augustines whole disputation in this point very notable, and directly against onely faith. Heresies against good workes.

And lastly (which is in it selfe very plaine) that we may see this Apostle did purposely thus commend vnto vs the necessitie of good works, and the inanitie and insufficiency of onely faith, to correct the errour of such as misconstructed S. Pauls words for the same; * the said holy Doctor noteth that of purpose he tooke the very same example of Abraham, whom S. Paul said to bee iustified by faith, and declareth that hee was iustified by good works, specifying the good worke for which hee was iustified and blessed of God, to witte, his obedience and immolation of his onely sonne. But how S. Paul saith that Abraham was iustified by faith, see the Annotation vpon that place. Rom. 4. vers. 1.

Rom. 4. 10. 11.

CARTVV. 6. [21 Abraham, was hee not iustified by workes?] That this Iustification is to be referred to the iustification of Abraham before men, and declaration that he was iustified, it appeareth evidently in that this offering of Isaac was long after his Circumcision; he being therefore iustified before God before Circumcision, was much more iustified before the Lord or ere this offering of Isaac was offered to be done. And if Circumcision, being a principall work of the Law, could not therefore iustifie him, because it came after his faith was imputed unto him to righteousnesse: how much lesse can this sacrifice iustifie him before the Lord, that came long after Circumcision?

That Augustine, de fide & operibus cap. 14. li. 83. quest. 976. is directly against you, hath as been already (in the answer to the Argument of this Epistle) shewed: where his purpose is not to shew (as you falsly pretend) that we are not iustified by faith onely, but to shew that we are not iustified by faith alone, that is to say, by a faith which is naked and destitute of good workes: which is evident in that hee teacheth plainly (as hath been shewed) that good workes as a divers thing do follow iustification, and maketh good workes not causes of iustification, but effects of faith wherewith wee are iustified. Augustin. Prefat. Psal. 3. is idlely alleaged, that it is the right way to hell, upon iustification by faith onely to conclude that workes are not necessarie to salvation, it being freely accorded, that good works, as effects of a saved man or of salvation, are necessary, and that no man without holinesse can see God.

Heb. 12. 14.

Verse. 22. Seest thou that ¶ faith did worke with his workes: and by the workes the faith was consummate?

RHEM. 7. [22. Faith did worke with.] Some Hereicks hold, that good works are pernitious to saluation and iustification: other, that though they be not hurtfull but required, yet they bee no causes or workers of saluation, much lesse meritorious, but are as effects & fruits necessarily issuing out of faith.

Both which fictions, falſhoods, and ſlights from the plaine truth of Gods word, are refuted by theſe words, when the Apoſtle ſaith, That faith worketh together with your workes: making faith to be a coadiutor or cooperator with works, and ſo both ioyntly concurring as cauſes and workers of iuſtification, yea afterward he maketh works the more principall cauſe, when he reſembleth faith to the body, and works to the ſpirit or life of man.

Workes concurre with faith, as cauſe of iuſtification.

CAR TVV 7. [22 Faith did worke with.] That Abrahams faith wrought with his workes, we acknowledge for the voyce of the Holy Ghoſt; but that it wrought with workes to one and the ſame iuſtification, is the gloze of the Ieſuites, directly contrary to the diſcourſe and drift of Iames, who aſſigneth the uſe of good workes to ſhew forth faith, and therefore to iuſtifie before men, and not before God, which is the ſame Paul teacheth, that Abraham in doing good workes might by them be iuſtified, and glory before men, but not before God. Two may well bee ſaid to worke together perfecting one and the ſame thing, and yet either of them to haue the diverſe and proper effects in the performance thereof. As in the building of a houſe, hee that buildeth upon the foundation is coadiutor unto him that laid the foundation of the houſe, albeit he gaue no aſſiſtance nor help at all to the laying of the ground-worke thereof. Even ſo many good workes labour together with faith in the work of our ſalvation, and yet haue no manner of ſtroake in our iuſtification before God, but do beare ſway in our iuſtification before men, which is a part of our ſanctification.

Rom.4.2.

And that this offering of Iſaac thirty yeares after the Lord had given teſtimonie of Abrahams iuſtification by faith, is not referred to a cauſe of righteouſneſſe, but unto the declaration thereof, the very wordes of the ſtory do evidently declare: wherein the Angell ſhewing the uſe of this work of oblation of his ſonne, ſaith, now I know that thou feareſt God. But to ſtay the cackle of theſe pratling Ieſuites, let the Reader obſerue, that there is ſo great light of the truth in this place of Iames for us againſt them, that Thomas Aquinas whom they haue beſainted unto the ninth degree, was conſtrained to vaile his bonnet unto the truth, which we teach out of this place, in this wiſe: Becauſe faith wrought with workes, that is to ſay, faith whereby hee was iuſt before God, led him unto workes: and of the workes which follow faith, his faith was perfected, that is to ſay, augmented, approved and declared. Touching the other reaſon, that faith is compared unto the body, and workes unto the ſoule, it ſhall appeare after how vainely and unprofitably it is alledged.

Verſe.23. And the Scripture was fulfilled, ſaying, Abraham beleeved God and it was reputed him to iuſtice, and hee was called the friend of God.

Workes made us iuſt indeed before God.

RHEM.8.[23. The friend of God.] By this alſo an other falſe and friuolous euaſion of the Heretickes is ouertaken, when they feyne, that the Apoſtle here when hee ſaith, workes do iuſtifie, meaneth that they ſhew vs iuſt before men, and auaile not to our iuſtice before God. For the Apoſtle euidently declareth that Abraham by his works was made or truely called the friende of God and therefore was not (as the Heretickes ſay) by his workes approoued iuſt before man onely.

CAR TVV.8. [23 The friend of God.] That Abraham was the friend of God, it came of that the Lord loved him firſt, and not that Abraham loved him; and therefore this title of Abraham being friend unto God, proceeding meerely from the fountaine of Gods loue towards him, is impudently and forcibly carried to the merite of his workes, not onely directly contrary to the tenor of other Scriptures, but manifeſtly againſt this place where they ground this note, conſidering that it is annexed unto the righteouſneſſe imputed by faith. For Iames having ſhewed before that a man is outwardly and to the view of men and Angels iuſtified by workes, addeth that as touching the iuſtification which is before God, it muſt needs haue place which the Scripture ſaith, that through faith, righteouſneſſe was imputed unto Abraham, through which imputation, hee was called, that is to ſay, was the friend of God.

Hitherto alſo belongeth, that where the friendſhip is aſcribed unto workes as unto a cauſe, the cauſe is ſet to be in the workes of God toward us, and not in our workes to him: For therefore (ſaith Chriſt) I call you friends, for that whatſoeuer I haue heard of my Father, I haue made known unto you. It is very true that our Saviour ſaith, that they are his friends if they do his commandements; but that the keeping of his commandements are the cauſe of his friendſhip, hee ſaith not. The contrary whereof is evidently taught of Iohn, who declareth that this is the uſe of keeping the commandements, not to make us one with God (which is the ſame as to be friends with him) but to make it known that we are one with him, and abide in him.

Verſe.24. Do you ſee that by works a man is iuſtified: and not by faith onely.

The Proteſtants ſay, By faith onely. S. Iames eleane contrary, Not by faith onely. See the Annot. upon the Epiſtle to the Rom.c.2. v.13. The manifold meaning of certain fathers when they ſay onely faith.

RHEM 9.[24. Not by faith onely.] This propoſition of ſpeach is directly oppoſite or contradictorie to that which the Heretickes hold. For the Apoſtle ſaith, Man is iuſtified by good works and not by faith onely, but the Heretickes ſay, Man is not iuſtified by good works, but by faith onely. Neither can they pretend that there is the like contradiction or contrarietie betwixt S. Iames ſpeach and S. Pauls, for though S. Paul ſay, man is iuſtified by faith, yet he neuer ſaith, by faith onely, nor euer meaneth by that faith, which is alone, but alwayes by that faith which worketh by charity, * as he expoundeth himſelfe. Though concerning works alſo, there is a difference betwixt the firſt iuſtification, whereof S. Paul ſpecially ſpeaketh: and the ſecond iuſtification, whereof S. Iames doeth more ſpecially treate. Of which thing *elſewhere there is enough ſaid.

The fathers indeed vſe ſomtimes this excluſiue, ſola, onely: but in far other ſenſe then the Proteſtants. For ſome of them thereby exclude onely the works of Moyſes law, againſt the Iewes: ſome, the works of nature and morall vertues without the grace or knowledge of Chriſt, againſt the Gentiles: ſome, the neceſſitie of externall good works where the parties lacke time and meanes to doe them, as in the caſe of the penitent theefe: ſome, the falſe opinions, ſectes, and religions contrary to the Catholicke faith, againſt the Heretickes and miſcreants, ſome exclude reaſon, ſenſe, and arguing in matters of faith and myſterie, againſt ſuch as will beleeue nothing, but that they ſee or vnderſtand: ſome, the merite of works done in ſinne before the firſt iuſtification: ſome, the arrogant Phariſaicall vaunting of mans own proper works and iuſtice, againſt ſuch as referre not their actions and good deeds to Gods grace. To theſe purpoſes the holy Doctors ſay ſometimes, that onely faith ſaueth and ſerueth: but neuer (as the Proteſtants would haue it) to exclude from iuſtification and ſaluation, the cooperation of mans free will, diſpoſitions and preparations of our hearts by prayers, penance, and ſacrament, the vertues of hope and charitie, the purpoſe of well working and of the obſeruation of Gods commandements: much leſſe, the works and merites of the children of God, proceeding of grace and charitie, after they bee iuſtified and are now in his fauour: which are not onely diſpoſitions and preparations to iuſtice, but the meritorious cauſe of greater iuſtice, and of ſaluation.

CARTVV. 9. [24 Not by faith onely.] That the Scripture teacheth that we are iuſtified by faith onely, both in ſo many words, when it ſaith onely beleeue, and by neceſſary collection, when it ſaith, by faith without workes, hath been already ſhewed upon Rom 3.28. Neither is this any contradiction thereunto, that wee are not iuſtified by faith onely: (ſeeing as hath been ſeen) theſe ſayings of Paul and Iames, are not of one and the ſame righteouſneſſe or iuſtification: whereas to make an oppoſition or contradiction between them, is required that they be underſtood of one and the ſame thing. And how truely we haue expounded and gathered of the Scripture that wee are iuſtified by faith onely, the ancient Fathers (by the Ieſuites own confeſſion) giue us plentifull teſtimony, who uſe the ſame words that wee do of being iuſtified by faith onely. Mar. 5. 36.

Now where the Ieſuits (for ſhift) affirme that the Fathers ſpeaking as we, meane otherwiſe then we, in that by the word onely, they ſhut forth this and that, & every thing rather then that which they do indeed ſhut forth: Firſt, by this anſwer it falleth out, that it is no abſurd thing that ſome Fathers ſhould affirme we are not iuſtified by faith alone, as they ſurmiſe of them, & yet affirme alſo we are iuſtified by faith alone; which they are here conſtrained to confeſſe of them: Whereas the Ieſuits would proue it abſurd that Paul ſhould teach iuſtification by faith alone, becauſe Iames teacheth that we are not iuſtified by faith alone: condemning that for contrariety in the holy Apoſtles, which they hold to be a good conſent in the Fathers. Secondly, they ſhew their dog-teeth in ſnapping & ſnarling at us becauſe we dare adde the word onely, not found (as they ſay) in the Scriptures: whereas, if this be a fault in us, it is the ſame in the Fathers; ſo much alſo the greater in them, as their hand was firſt in it, & ours by imitation and prouocation of others. Thirdly, we haue ſhewed that Pauls meaning is, by onely, to ſhut from the cauſe of our ſalvation the good works that are done after faith, & according to the direction of the holy Spirit: and therefore if the Fathers meant not to ſeclude the workes of the Law which are done after faith, their meaning is farre different from Pauls. Fourthly, it hath been ſhewed, that as the Fathers ſhut forth other things by them recited, ſo from the cauſe of our ſalvation they ſeclude the beſt workes that are done of thoſe which haue beleeved, Laſt of all, to ſay, that by the words, faith onely iuſtifieth, are ſecluded ceremoniall workes, or workes before faith, &c. and not the good works which godly men do: is all one as if they ſhould ſay, we are iuſtified before the Lord by faith onely, yet not ſo iuſtified that we are iuſtified before God by faith without the company of any thing elſe, then which what can be more brutiſh. As if the word of faith onely, ſhutting forth all but faith, doth not as well ſhut forth workes after faith, as workes before faith, except they will ſay that workes after faith are faith it ſelfe and no workes.

Verſe. 25. And in like manner alſo Rahab the Harlot, was not ſhee iuſtified by workes, receiving the meſſengers and putting them forth another way?

RHEM. 10. [25. Rahab.] This Apoſtle alleageth the good works of Rahab by which ſhe was iuſtified, and S. Paul (11. Hebrew.) ſaith ſhe was iuſtified by faith. Which are not contrary one to another, for both is true, that ſhe was ſaued by faith, as one ſaith: and that ſhe was ſaued by her works, as the other ſaith. But it were vntruely ſaid, that ſhe was ſaued either by onely faith, as the Heretikes ſay: or by onely good works, as no Catholicke man euer ſaid. But becauſe ſome Iewes and Gentile Philoſophers did affirme: they, that they ſhould bee ſaued by the workes of Moyſes law: theſe, by their morall works: therefore S. Paul to the Romanes diſputed ſpecially againſt both, prouing that no works done without or before the faith of Chriſt, can ſerue to iuſtification or ſaluation. S. Paul nameth faith, and S. Iames workes, confeſſes of iuſtification: but neither the on faith onely: nor the [other workes onely.

CARTVV 10. [25. Rahab.] To anſwer ſomewhat to their irkſome repetitions without tiring the Reader with that which is before alledged, let the reader firſt obſerue how unworthy their outcries are againſt our men, affirming that in ſome place of this Epiſtle Iames ſpeaketh not of the iuſtifying faith, nor of the faith which is proper to the children of God. For ſeeing they muſt be compelled to ſay, that Iames ſpeaketh of other workes in his Epiſtle, then Paul doth in his, the one ſpeaking (as they ſay) of workes before faith; the other of workes after faith, why may it not be as lawfull for us to fly to another ſignification of faith, as for them to haue their refuge to another ſignification of workes. Whereas (indeed) unleſſe the ſame workes be underſtood in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, which are here meant, there is no good correſpondence between theſe two doctrines, which the Ieſuits affirme to be given out of the Apoſtles, we are not ſaued by workes alone, we are not ſaued by faith alone, but by faith and workes together. And if it be true that Iames and Paul did in a divers manner of ſpeech teach one and the ſame doctrine, then it followeth, that our interpretation which expoundeth the workes mentioned of Paul and Iames, to be of one and the ſame kinde, is neerer to the truth then yours, which ſuppoſeth the workes Paul ſpeaketh of to be before faith, and thoſe Iames mentioneth to be after faith. For to ſay (as we doe) that Paul teacheth our iuſtification before God by faith without good workes done after faith, and that Iames teacheth iuſtification before men not to be by faith alone without good workes of the ſame kinde, hath more agreement and leſſe diſſent with themſelues then to make them ſay as you do, that Paul taught iuſtification by faith without workes before faith, and Iames not by faith onely without workes after faith. And the better to aſſure the Reader that Iames meant that we are not iuſtified by faith alone before men without good workes, as we expound it, let him obſerue that where the principall good workes are Repentance or the inward change of the minde, and ſincere loue of the heart towards God and towards our neighbour: yet Iames in both the examples that he uſeth, taketh thoſe workes onely which might bee ſeene of all men, as is Abrahams offering of Iſaac, and Rahabs receiuing of the ſpies. And wherefore theſe rather then thoſe other more principall workes of the Law? but that thereby he would declare, that in this iuſtification he ſpeaketh of, he reſpected the eye of men rather then of God.

Verſe. 26. For even as the body without the Spirit is dead: ſo alſo faith without workes is dead.

Faith without workes is a true faith, but not available: as the body without the ſpirit is a true body though it be dead. What faith the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of: and that hee knew no ſpeciall faith.

RHEM. 10 [26. Faith without works is dead] S. Iames (as the Proteſtants fain) ſaith that faith without good works is no faith, and that therefore it iuſtifieth not, becauſe it is no faith, for he ſaith that it is dead without works, as the body is dead without the ſoule, and therefore being dead hath no actiuitie or efficacie to iuſtifie or ſaue. But it is a great difference, to ſay that the body is dead, and to ſay that it is no body, euen ſo it is the like difference, to ſay that faith without workes is dead, and to ſay that faith without works is no faith. And if a dead body be notwithſtanding a true body, then according to S. Iames compariſon here, a dead faith is notwithſtanding a true faith, but yet not auaileable to iuſtification, becauſe it is dead, that is, becauſe it is onely faith without good works.

And therefore it is a great impudencie in Heretickes, and a hard ſhift, to ſay that the faith of which the Apoſtle diſputeth all this while is no true or properly called faith at all. It is the ſame faith that S. Paul defined and commended in all the 11. chapter to the Hebrewes, and the ſame which is called the Catholicke faith, and the ſame which being formed and made aliue by charitie, iuſtifieth. Many true it is, that it is not that ſpeciall faith which the Heretickes feine onely to iuſtifie, to wit, when a man doth firmely beleeue as an article of his faith, that himſelfe ſhall be ſaued, this ſpeciall faith it is not whereof the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh, for neither he, nor S. Paul, nor any other ſacred Writer in all the holy Scriptures euer ſpake or knew of any ſuch forged faith.

CARTVV. 10. [26. Faith without workes is dead.] This place of all other ſeemeth to ſmile vpon the popiſh iuſtification by workes, in that it ſeemeth to giue that place to works in our iuſtification, which the ſoule hath towards the conſtitution of a man. Whereupon, whether workes be the eſſentiall forme of faith, as the ſoule (of ſome) is ſet for the eſſentiall forme of a man: or whether it be a member of the whole of iuſtification, as other ſome eſteeme the ſoule the principall part or member required to the frame of a man, they gaine that which they deſire. Howbeit herein they are like the fooliſh hungry Wooers which ſnap euery ſhadow of look or word that may carry any ſound of good liking unto them, paſſing by all the frownes and threats whereby they of modeſt behauiour, and ſetled underſtanding, would take themſelues anſwered. Firſt therefore they muſt underſtand that the word here uſed, doth more properly ſignifie the breath which a man draweth and ſendeth forth againe, than the ſoule which is the principall part of a man. And this being the more proper ſignification of the word, ought (unleſſe other circumſtances overthrow it) to be taken: the rather for that he uſeth a word for the body which is generall and common to all living things which haue ſence, without reſtraint of that which is proper to men. And ſo it falleth out that good workes haue the ſame place in iuſtification which we giue it, namely, to be as neceſſary an effect of man iuſtified by faith, as to draw breath is a neceſſary effect of a man living. And if the word ſhould be unproperly taken for the ſoule and principall part of a man, yet for all that the ſimilitude may not bee racked further then the words of Iames carry it, which is onely to declare, that as the body without the ſoule is but a carkaſſe, ſo is faith without workes dead. Noting rather a cauſe as they terme it, ſine qua non, then a true and a making cauſe. As albeit a man can haue no ſence without his heart, yet the cauſe of the ſence commeth from the head, and not from the heart. As for their ſophiſtication, that as a dead body is a true body without the ſoule; ſo faith without works is a true faith, and therfore that we are deceiued which eſteem dead faith no faith: let it be noted that they falſifie our iudgement in affirming that we ſay it is no faith which onely deny it to be a true faith, or that faith which is proper to the children of God. And therefore as it cannot be logically ſaid, and agreeably vnto the name of things, that a dead horſe is a true horſe, no more can it be ſaid that a dead faith is a true faith. And if Ariſtotle (whoſe profeſſion was narrowly to enquire into theſe quiddities) may be received, he telleth you that to argue, he is a man becauſe he is a dead man, is a fallation of diviſion, where one eſteemeth it alwayes true in the ſimple, that was ſo in the compound. Beſide that, the ſimilitude and compariſon of Iames ſought not to be ſtretched and drawne further then that wherein he maketh the compariſon, which is onely, that as the body is unprofitable to any worke or action belonging unto a body, unleſſe it haue life and breath: ſo is faith unleſſe it ſend forth (as it were) the breath of goood workes. The reſt againſt the ſpeciall application of Chriſt by faith, is vaine babling, before manifoldly and often confuted.

πνεῦμα breath, whereof alſo came the ſpeeches animã agere, animam expiare, animam efflare, &c. And ſo our S. Chriſt is ſaid to haue giuen up the Ghoſt. Math 27.50.

Verſe 6. AND ‡ giueth greater grace. For the which cauſe it ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, and giueth grace to the humble.

RHEM. 1. [6. Giueth greater grace.] The boldnes of Heretiks adding here the word Scripture to the text thus, and the Scripture giueth greater grace.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Giueth greater grace.] If any added here the word Scripture, he added it not ſo boldly as you in the verſe next before ſervilely and ſottiſhly haue turned, To enuy doth the ſpirit couet, for, the ſpirit coueteth to envy. The other fault ſavoureth more of a ſlip for want of due conſideration of circumſtance, then of any puffe of pride, as you pretend.

Verſe 8. ‡ Approch to God and he will approch to you. Cleanſe your hands yee ſinners, and ‖ purifie your hearts ye double of minde.

RHEM. 2. [8. ‖ Approch to God.] Free will and mans own endeuour neceſſary in comming to God.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 3. [8. Purifie your hearts.] Man (we ſee here) maketh himſelfe cleane and purgeth his own heart. Which derogateth nothing to the grace of God being the principall cauſe of the ſame. Yet Proteſtants think we derogate from Chriſts Paſſion, when we attribute, ſuch effects to own work or other ſecundarie helpes and cauſes. Mans working with Gods grace, is no derogation thereunto

CARTVV. 3. [*8. Againe, when the action is ſometimes aſcribed unto the inſtrument wherewith it is wrought, the naturall powers of the body and ſoule being the inſtruments of the Spirit of God to work by: it is eaſie to ſee that wee may be ſayd to purifie our hearts without any cooperation of any naturall free will in us, further then the ſpirit of regeneration hath wrought it. Verſe 4. Behold ‖ the hire of the workemen that haue reaped your fields, which is defrauded of you, crieth: and their cry hath entred into the eares of the Lord of Sabboth.

RHEM. 3. [4. The hire.] To withold from the pore or labourer the hire or wages that is due or promiſed to him for his ſeruice or work done, is a great iniquitie and one of thoſe fiue ſinnes which in holy write be ſaid to call for vengeance at Gods hand, as we ſee here. They be called in the Catechiſme, Sinnes crying to heauen. The other foure be Murder, Gen. 18. v. 20. vſurie. Exod. 22. v. 27. The ſins againſt nature, Gen. 18. v. 20. The oppreſſion and vexation of widows, pupilles, ſtrangers and ſuch like. Ib. & Exod. 3. v. 9. The ſinnes crying to heauen.

CARTVV 3. [4 The hire.] Your Catechists which teach but fiue sinnes crying to heaven, that is to say, principally provoking the wrath of God, haue more need to be Catechised themselues: seeing it is cleere that the sinnes against the first table (whereof none of those crying sinnes are any) make a greater noise in the eares of the Lord of hosts, then these crying sinnes they speake of; yea in the very second Table there are divers sinnes, as cursing and striking of Parents (especially the Prince, the common Parent of all the Country) and the Governours of the Church; likewise robbery of the common Treasury, especially of the Church, cry louder then some of those sinnes which their Catechismes terme crying sinnes. And if they haue taken their survey of crying sinnes by this, that of these onely which they recite, there is expresse mention that their cries goe up to God; although it be a childish and idiotelike pole wherewith they haue measured this high Divinity of theirs; yet even by their own measure, their ignorance is easily descried, there being also other sinnes, whereof this manner of speech is used, which are not contained under any of your Catechisticall crying sinnes.

RHEM. 4. [12. Sweare not.] He forbiddeth not all othes, as the Anabaptists falsely say, for in iustice and iudgement we may be by our lawfull Magistrate put to sweare, and may lawfully take an oth, as also for the aduantaging of any necessary trueth when time and place require, but the custome of swearing, and all vaine, light, and vnnecessary othes in our daily speech do displease God highly, and are here forbidden by the Apostle, as also by our Saviour. CARTVV. 4. [12 Sweare not.] S.

Verse. 14. Is any man sick among you? let him bring in the Priests of the Church, and let them pray over him, anoiling him with oile in the name of our Lord.

Heretical translation against Priesthood.

Neither their Elders (so called) nor their Ministers, can bee those whom the Apostle heere calleth, Presbyteros.

RHEM. 5. [14 Let him bring in the Priests.] The Protestants for their speciall hatred of the holy order of Priesthood, as elsewhere often, so here they corrupt the text euidently, translating Presbyteros, elders. As though the Apostle had meant men of age, & not such as were by the holy office, Priests. S. Chrysost. who knew the sense & signification of the Greek word according to the Ecclesiasticall vse and the whole Churches iudgement, better then any Protestant aliue taketh it plainely for Sacerdotes, that is, Priests li. 3. de Sacerdotio prope initium. And if they confesse that it is a word of office with them also, though they call them elders, and not Priests: then wee demand whether the Apostle meane here men of that function which they in their new Churches call Elders. If they say no, as they must needs (for Elders with them are not deputed specially to publike praying or administration of the sacraments, such as the Apostle here requireth to be sent for) then they must needs graunt, that their Elders answer not to the function of those which in the new Testament are called Presbiteri in Greek and Latin, and therefore both their translation to be false and fraudulent, and also their naming of their new degrees or orders to be fond and Incongruous.

They haue no reason to call their Ministers by that name.

Their Deacons should rather be called Ministers.

They should keep the name Priest, as well as Deacon.

If they say their ministers be correspondent to such as were called Presbiteri in holy writ and in the Primitiue Church, and that they are the men whom the Apostle willeth to be called for to anoile the sicke and to pray for him, why do they not then translate Presbyteros Ministers? Which they might do with as good reason, as call such as they haue taken in steed of our Catholike Priests, Ministers? Which word being in large acception common to all that haue to doe about the celebration of Diuine things, was neuer appropriated by the vse either of the Scripture or of the holy Church, to that higher function of publike administration of the Sacrament and Seruice, which is Priesthood: but to the order next vnder it, which is Deaconship And therefore if any should bee called Ministers, their Deacons properly should be so termed. And the Protestants haue no more reason to keepe the ancient Greeke word of Deacon, appropriated to that office by the vse of antiquitie, then to keepe the word Priest, being made no lesse peculiar to the state of such onely as minister the holy Sacraments, and offer the sacrifice of the Altar. But these fellowes follow neither Gods word nor Ecclesiasticall vse, nor any reason but mere phantasie, noueltie and hatred of Gods Church. And how little they follow any good rule or reason in these things may appeare by this, that here they auoid to translate Priests, and yet in their Communion book, in their order of visiting the sick they commonly name the Minister, Priest.

CARTVV. 5. [14 Let him bring in the Priests.] Wee confesse wee hate indeed and that with perfect hatred, all Priesthood under the new Testament that properly is called Priesthood, saving that of our Saviour Christs: and especially wee hate the Popish Priesthood, as that which pretending, and presuming, the sacrificing of the excellentest thing, is so much more abhominable as it giveth that which is the basest, even their own invention, which commeth from the very base and bottom of hell. And as our hatred is especially bent against the Office, so are we not in loue with the Name in that use. And if we fault, our fault lyeth, that in the great desire of comming neerer unto you, that you might come neerer unto the truth, we haue left more roome for it then it deserveth: which when you your selues are not ignorant of, confessing that our Communion book in the visitation of the sicke, commonly nameth the Minister Priest: it is your fore-head-lesse face thus to charge us, as if in the hatred of all Priesthood, rather then in the loue of the truth, we haue shunned the name of Priest; for if in our communion booke, where our choise was free, and no constraint of translation, wee haue used the name of Priest to note a Minister, how much more would we haue used it heere, if there had been either force of word or of deed to haue procured that translation? And that the word heere used, cannot signifie a Priest, it hath been before (upon Act. 14. 22.) disputed; against which you should say some-what, if you were able to shew (which you you would seeme unto your Reader) that Chrysostom li. 3. de Sacerdote, expounding the nature of this word, should say it to be all one with that which under the Law noted Priests: we know right well that Chrysostome, and other ancient Fathers (for the causes before declared) termed the Ministers of the Gospell Priests; but that, seeing into the nature and precise valuation and weight of the word, he esteemed it to be as much as Priest, is not Chrysostomes language, but a lying dialect of the Iesuites.

After this, not able to conclude any thing, they vent their by-questions; and first, the poore fooles thinke to disgrace the holy calling of those Elders which the Churches in divers Countries use for watch and government without Preaching of the Word, and administring of the Sacraments, concluding that no such Elders can be meant in this place, because they are not deputed specially to publick prayer and administrations of Sacraments as these are; As if they had already obtained that the annointing of the sick were a Sacrament (which is so constantly and effectually denied) or that the prayer in a private house, where the Church meeteth not, were a publik prayer. Wherefore there being nothing heere done but that which the father of the house may as well doe as the Minister, if his ability be the same that his, it is evident that this place is no barre unto that holy and necessary function of the Church. And when the Apostle placeth the gift of healing in those which had not the Ministery of the word, it is evident that men that were not called to the administration of the Word, and consequently not of the Sacraments, might, notwithstanding heale a sick man by annointing of him. Yea, it is so farre that this place overthroweth their function of Eldership, that this oile wherewith they annointed the sick, is yet fresh and greene upon their heads to giue witnesse unto the lawfulnesse of their calling; For when by Iames it appeareth that in every particular Church there was an Eldership or a company of Elders, and cannot appeare, nor hath no probability that there were a company or good number of Preaching Ministers (and consequently of such as administred the Sacraments) it remaineth that some of these Elders must needs bee such as having charge to watch in Governement, had no calling either to Preach the Word, or administer the Sacraments. Where they aske why we do not translate πρεσβυτερους Ministers rather then Elders, the word of Minister being common to all that haue to doe about the celebration of the divine things: We answer, we translate Elders because of the force of the Greeke word so signifying, and used of Writers both prophane and Ecclesiastiall, tearming their Governours Elders, and the society and assembly of them, a Senate or an Eldership. And marvell that you should moue this question, when your Oracle the vulgar translation, and you after it, sometime translate it Ancients, which is a word of iust value with Elders. And although we use not the word Ministers so generally as it is used in Scripture, yet we use it more generally then doth Optatus when he divideth the Church Governours into Bishops, Elders, Deacons, and Ministers: for we use it for all those which haue to deale in the Word and Sacraments, and use the more speciall names of Pastor and teacher to note the distinct and severall Ministers of the Word and Sacraments. And if neither Scripture nor Church, appropriate the word Minister to the higher function of publicke administration of Sacraments, it is the more shame for you, who upon the word (which by your translation signifieth ministring) thinke your selues greatly wronged that you may not with all mens good leaue translate it Massing, confidently affirming that by ministring there is properly meant Massing. And yet againe more shame it is, that unto your Deacons another word signifying (in truth and by your owne confession) ministers; you permit the administration of the holy Sacrament of Baptisme.

1. Cor. 12. 9. 30.

Lib. 2. contra Parme.

Vpon Act. 13

RHEM. 6. [14. Anoiling with oyle.] Here is the sacrament of extreme Vnction so plainely promulgated (for it was instituted, as all other Sacraments of the new Testament, by our Sauiour Christ himselfe, and, as Venerable Bede thinketh and other ancient writers, the anoiling of the sicke with oyle Marc. 6. perteineth thereunto) that some Heretikes for the euidence of this place also) as of the other for good works) deny the Epistle. Other (as the Caluinists) through the confidence of cunning shifts and glosses, confessing that S. Iames is the author, yet condemne the Church of God for vsing and taking it for a Sacrament. But what dishonour to God is it (we pray them) that a Sacrament should bee instituted in the matter of oyle, more then in the element of water; Why may not grace and remission of sinnes be annexed to the one as well as to the other, without derogation to God?

The sacrament of extreme vnction

But they say, Sacraments endure for euer in the Church, this is but for a season in the Primitiue Church. What Scripture telleth them that this generall and absolute prescription of the Apostle in this case, should endure but for a season? when was it taken away, abrogated, or altered? They see the Church of God hath alwaies vsed it vpon this warrant of the Apostle, who knew Christs meaning and institution of it better then these deceiued men, who make more of their own fond ghesses and coniectures grounded neither on Scripture nor vpon any circumstance of the text, nor any one authenticall author that euer wrote, then of the expresse word of God. It was (say they) a miraculous practise of healing the sicke, during onely in the Apostles time, and not long after. Wee aske them whether Christ appointed any certaine creature or externall element vnto the Apostles generally to worke miracles by. Himselfe vsed sometimes clay and spittle, sometimes hee sent them that were diseased, to wash themselues in waters, but that hee appointed any of those or the like things for a generall medecine or miraculous healing onely, that we read not, for in the beginning: for the better inducing of the people to faith and deuotion. Christ would haue miracles to be wrought by sundry of the Sacraments also. Which miraculous workes ceasing, yet the Sacraments remaine still vnto the worlds end,

The heretickes obiections against the said sacrament answered: withall it is to be proued to be a sacrament.

Againe we demand, whether euer they read or heard that men were generally commanded to seek for their health by miraculous meanes. Thirdly, whether all Priests, or (as they call them) Elders, had the gift of miracles in the primitiue Church? No, it cannot be, for though some had, yet all these indifferently of whom the Apostle speaketh, had not the gift: and many that were no Priests, had it both men and women, which yet could not bee called for, as Priests were in this case. And though the the Apoſtle and others could both cure men and reuiue them againe, yet there was no ſuch generall precept for ſick or dead men, as this, to call for the Apoſtles to heale or reſtore them to life againe. Laſtly, had any external element or miraculous practiſe, vnleſſe it were a Sacrament, the promiſe of remiſſion of all kind of actuall ſins ioyned vnto it? or could S. Iames inſtitute ſuch a ceremony himſelfe, that could ſaue both body and ſoule, by giuing health to the one, and grace and remiſſion to the other? At other times theſe contentious wranglers raile at Gods Church, for annexing onely the remiſſion of veniall ſins to the element of water, made holy by the Prieſts bleſſing thereof in the name of Chriſt: and loe here they are driuen to hold that S. Iames preſcribed a miraculous oile or creature which had much more power and efficacie. Into theſe ſtraits are ſuch miſcreants brought that will not beleeve the expreſſe word of God, interpreted by the practiſe of Gods vniuerſall Church.

Holy oyle bleſſed by the Biſhop.

Venerable Bede in 9. Luc. ſaith thus. It is cleere that this cuſtome was deliuered to the holy Church by the Apoſtles themſelues, that the ſick ſhould be annointed with oyle conſecrated by the Biſhops bleſſing. See for this and for the aſſertion and vſe of the Sacrament, S. Innocentius, ep. 1. ad Decentium Eugubinum c. 8. to. 1. Conc. & Lib. 2. de viſitatione infirmorum in S. Auguſtine c. 4. Concil. Cabilonenſe 2. c. 48. Con. Wormatienſe c. 72. to. 3. Conc. Aquiſgra. c. 8. Florentinum, & other later Councels S. Bernard in the life of Malachie in fine. This holy oyle becauſe the faithfull ſaw to haue ſuch vertue in the primitiue Church, diuers carrie it home and occupied it in their infirmities, not vſing it in the Sacramentall ſort which the Apoſtle preſcribeth as the Aduerſaries vnlearnedly obiect vnto vs; but as Chriſtians now do (and then alſo did) concerning the water of Baptiſme, which they vſed to take home with them after it was hallowed, and to giue it their diſeaſed to drinke.

The peoples deuotion toward ſuch hallowed creatures.

CAP. TVV. 6. [14. Annoynting with Oyle.] In the firſt Section of this Annotation they begin with a falſe and idle charge, that in the euidence of this place for extreame unction, ſome deny this Epiſtle. Secondly, they fight with their owne ſhadow, asking what diſhonour it is to God to inſtitute a Sacrament in matter of oyle, more then in matter of water, as if we placed any other difference herein, but that the Lord hath commanded the one, and left no commandement for the other. Although beſide the ſimplicity and commonneſſe of the element greater in water then in oyle, and therefore more fitting to the time of the Goſpell, it hath been ſhewed upon Gal. 4. 3. that all the gracious promiſes of the Goſpell being ſealed by two ſacraments of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper, this of oyle ſerueth better for the Popes kitchin then for the Church of God: and therefore it is a third vntruth which beginneth the ſecond Section, that the Church of God hath alwayes uſed this unction upon this Warrant of the Apoſtle, whereas the Church hath not alwayes as much as vſed it, much leſſe hath vſed it for a ſacrament: but of the contrary part the Valentine Heretickes haue vſed this aneeling as you doe, that is to ſay, having received no grace nor gift of healing no more then you) did notwithſtanding annoynt thoſe with oyle which were ready to dye. And as you haue of your owne braine added Balſome, ſo did theſe ioyne water. And laſt of all, as they did it with opinion of being delivered from their ſinnes, ſo do you: ſo that herein the Valentinian franſie ſhall never dye ſo long as Popiſh hereſie liueth. It was therefore your great impudency in lying, not onely to affirme that the Church of God hath alwayes vſed it; but alſo to ſay, that we ſee the ſame, it being ſo farre from vs to ſee it, which teach againſt it, that your ſelues which defend it, cannot ſee it vnleſſe it be in a drowſie dreame of your owne phantaſie. After this, where ſound and pithy diſputers are wont to commit that to queſtions or interrogations which carrieth ſuch euidence as the aduerſarie either dare not deny; or denying, dare not ſhew his face in any lawfull or tollerable court of Iudgement, theſe fellowes haue thought good by queſtions and interrogations to vent that, the abſurdity wherof would forthwith haue appeared if it had bin uttered in any lawful forme of argument.

Iren. ibid. in 18. Look the like unto it in Epiphanius of hereſies, in hæreſi Heracleonitarum.

Their firſt queſtion (therefore) in the ſecond ſection is, whether Chriſt appointed any certaine externall element to the Apoſtles generally to work miracles by: which, albeit it be here preciſely denied of them, and affirmed that he did not: yet otherwhere they confeſſe, that the oyle wherewith all the Apoſtles annointed the ſicke, might well be commanded them of Chriſt, although the ſame be not laid downe in the Scripture. Where alſo hath been ſhewed, that it was both commanded by Chriſt, and the commandement (although not expreſly, yet impliedly to a ſufficient underſtanding) ſet downe in writing. And as it is maruell, if in ſo long a time as came between the writing of that and this note, they forgat themſelues to a croſſing and ſhaking of their owne iudgement, when as in this very place, euen in the very next words, as it were with one and the ſame breath, they haue even contraried it and utterly ouerthrown it in theſe words: In the beginning, for the better inducing of people to faith, Chriſt would haue miracles to be wrought by ſundry of the Sacraments alſo. Which although it be a meere fable, yet doth it turne vpſide downe their former ſentence. For if God would haue miracles wrought by Sacraments, the Sacraments both having alwayes an externall element, and being ordinarily miniſtred by the Apoſtles, it followeth the Lords pleaſure was, that miracles ſhould be wrought of the Apoſtles ordinarily, or generally by externall elements.

Vpon Mark. 6. 13.

Secondly, in the third Section they demand whether we read that men are generally commanded to ſeeke helpe by miraculous meanes: Why not? for if men be commanded to ſeeke for health, and to vſe the beſt meanes they can for their recouery, it muſt follow, that the cure being more certaine and more ſpeedy by miraculous gift of healing, then by ordinary courſe of phyſicke, and naturall cauſes, ought eſpecially and principally to be ſought; vnleſſe the Ieſuits eſteeme that men are at their choyce whether they will take the royall and princely gifts of the Lord, when he by reaching out of his hand maketh offer of them, or not.

Thirdly, they aske whether all Elders had the gift of miracles in the Primatine Church: If we ſay they had, we eaſily ſee that it is but their blunt weapon of bare deniall wherewith they can ſtrike us. And if private perſons, as they ſay, and as wee will not gaine-ſay, had this, how much more thoſe that were in the charge of the Church? eſpecially ſince it was a godly wiſedom of the Church, to make choiſe of thoſe for charge in the Church, whom God had graced and beautified with extraordinary gifts of working miracles: which if they did in the office of a Deacon, inseriour to that of the Elder, how much more is it to be esteemed that the same regard was had in the Elders choyce? But to make your oyle stinke, it was enough if of divers and sundry Elders in every Church, one of them alone had then an extraordinary gift of healing, seeing it had been a folly to do that by many, which might be done by few, and to haue sent for the whole Eldership to heale the visited, which one onely, having that gift, was able to performe. The cause therefore why the whole Eldership is rather desired, is, that by the faithfull prayer of many, the visited might haue stronger comfort, and greater assurance of the forgiuenesse of his sinne. Act. 6. 3. 8. & 8. 6.

Their last question is, whether any externall element or myraculous practise had the promise of remission of all kinde of actuall sinnes, unlesse it were a Sacrament? yea verily, of all actuall sinnes, and (which is more) of originall also: which he Iesuites (were they not idiotes in the word of God) would never haue made question of, much lesse by questioning so arrogantly and confidently denied. For who is there, that hath but tasted of the beginning of Christian Religion, which knoweth not that the myraculous healing of all bodily diseases, was a pledge of the curing of the soules diseases? so farre, as where the Prophet saith, that Christ bare all our diseases, meaning our sinnes. The Euangelist declares that the same was performed and fulfilled when our Saviour Christ cured men of all manner of sicknesses. Neither is it any hinderance hereof that many were cured in body, which remained diseased in their soules; seeing the same also commeth to passe in the holy Sacraments when they are not received in faith, according to their institution. Esay 53. 4. Mat. 8. 16. 17.

After this, they would make shew of some contradiction with our selues, because we deny there is any vertue in their holy Water to forgiue veniall sinnes, and yet are heere driuen to giue greater power unto Oyle: and not content therewith (in the great desire they haue to triumph, although it be in a dung-cart, when they cannot, through their beggery, do it in a Chariot) they adde, into these streights are such miscreants brought, &c. Alas (poore fooles) what contradiction is this, to deny any power to holy water, which we hold an invention of your own head, and to ascribe power to that which the Lord in his wisedome commanded to be used, as we teach, and you confesse this annointing in times past to haue been? And that you may know that we are in no straights, call to your remembrance that it was not our doctrine to giue unto any extreme element (not so much as in the Sacraments themselues) the vertue of healing any disease of the body, much lesse of the soule, but that the whole power and vertue thereof is in the spirit of God, which onely useth the outward element as a meane wherewith his Spirit is pleased to worke. For you know well that it is our doctrine, that notwithstanding that the inward grace is given with the outward element, to all those which receiue the Sacrament worthily, and that they are no trulyer in their bodies partakers of the one, then they are in their soules of the other: yet that this grace is not tyed nor enclosed in the elements, & which is here evidently confirmed, where it is not ascribed unto the oyle, that the sick is recovered, but to the prayer of faith, or faithfull prayer, which is made for the grace and strength of God to be put upon the sick.

Now where you say that because we reiect (to speake fauourably) your invention, we will not beleeue the expresse word of God: We answer, that you haue no word of God either expressed in the Scriptures, or collected from them for that annoi ng which you use: For this commandement of annointing, having a promise of recovery of health annexed to it, as the grace that the Oyle was the instrument of, this promise falling away, the commandement also is determined. Secondly, the very end for which this annointing was appointed of the Lord is changed of you; for not onely there followeth, no such effect of health as heere is promised, but the case is so ordered by you, that this Oyle shall not be applyed but onely when the sick, in all reasonable discourse, is past recovery: so that a man may truly say, that death is in your Oyle-pot, he seldome or never recovering, that your tar-box hath overtaken. Thirdly, in refusing your annoi ling, we cannot be said to refuse the word of God, because yours is made of another drug and ingredience then the oyle Iames speaketh of; and is wont to bee applyed onely to the instruments of sen e: where (in all likyhood, according to the example of our Saviour Christ) this Oyle was (as neere as might be) applyed to the affected parts. Last of all, if it were yet to be done, yet being to be done in the private house, it could not be administred as a Sacrament, which being a seale of the publick Ministery of the Word, ought to be done in the publick assembly. So that, as the Apostle appointeth the private house for the bodily repaste, and not for the spirituall Supper; so may it be said, that the house serveth for the bodily annointing, tending either to ease of griefe in the sicke, or further solace of the whole, then to the medicine of the soule. 1. Cor. 2.

And where you adde that this expressed word of God is interpreted by the practise of Gods universall Church, albeit the interpretation of the Word is better fetched from the living then the dead, and from those whose calling is to expound it, then from such whose calling that they had thereunto is at end; yet it will fall out that the practise of the Church will giue but a faint and weake testimony to your Oyle. Bede Luk 9. contrarieth the Iesuites and diu rs other Papists, for he in saying that the Apostles delivered this to the Church, thereby declareth that they had first received it of Christ before, they using to giue nothing but that onely which they had receiued. Now both the Iesuites and others affirme, that that which the Apostles did, Mark 6. was not a Sacrament but a preparatiue to a Sacrament; when therefore the Apostles commanded the Church to doe that which they were commanded of Christ, Christ not commanding them to administer it as a Sacrament, it followeth, that they commanded it not to the Church as a Sacrament. And therefore Bede hath not a word of the nature or name of the Sacrament; Onely he saith, that the oyle was sanctified by the Bishops blessing, which is nothing else, but that being applyed of the Bishop unto the sicke, it was made effectuall by the Spirit of God, which the Bishop called for in his prayer or Blessing: for to blesse and to pray in the Scripture phrase is all one; So that if Bede followeth the phrase of the Scripture, rather then of the corruption of the time wherein hee lived, heere is nothing said but that which we can well affoord, without loosing any the least point of that in debate betwen us. 1. Cor. 11. 23.

Howbeit let it be obſerued, that contrary vnto themſelues, they haue in this Note ſet down, that our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe inſtituted this Sacrament, having before affirmed that it was no Sacrament which was adminiſtred in his time, but a Preparatiue to a Sacrament; For when they ſay that our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe inſtituted this Sacrament, by theſe words [him ſelfe] they manifeſtly put a difference betweene that which Chriſt ordained in his own proper perſon, and that which hee ordained by his Apoſtles.

The two next places are anſwered before vpon Gal. 4. 3. & it argueth great ſcarcity of antiquity when ſuch Councels as theſe, viz. Cabilonenſe, 2 Wormatienſe, &c. are brought to proue the antiquity of their annoiling, which being holden after 800 yeares from the Incarnation of Chriſt vnder the Antichriſt of Rome, can bring no preiudice at all vnto this cauſe; ſo that it appeareth that this Popiſh cauſe of Sacramentall vnction hath no manner of teſtimony from true Antiquity. That of Barnard in Malachies life touching the carrying home of this Oyle in the Primitiue Church, compared with that which hee reporteth of drinking of the reſidue of water which remained after Baptiſme againſt diſeaſes, argueth nothing but that the Oyle given to heale beganne betimes to be much abuſed: for as it was a fooliſh ſuperſtition to eſteeme that the water of Baptiſme hath any ſingular efficacy, but when it is by the Miniſter applyed to the body of him to whom it belongeth: ſo it was a meere dotage, to eſteeme that the oyle profited any further to health then vnder the hand of him to whom the gift of healing was given.

Verſe. 15. And the prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſick: and our Lord ſhall lift him vp: and if he be in ſinnes, they ſhall be remitted him.

The ſacramental words

RHEM. 7. [15. The prayer of faith.] He meaneth the forme of the Sacrament, that is, the words ſpoken at the ſame time when the partie is annoiled, which no doubt are moſt ancient & Apoſtolike. Not that the word or prayer alone ſhould haue that great effect here mentioned, but ioyned with the foreſaid vnction, as is plaine.

CARTVV. 7. [15. The prayer of faith.] That the forme of words vſed in Popery at their annoyling, hath any teſtimony ſo much as in a letter or a ſillable out of the word, or out of any vnſuſpected antiquitie, it is evident; for that the Ieſuites labouring ſo painfully in this behalfe, can bring none of any kindred with theirs. That their forme of words (In the name of the Father the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt I annoynt thee with the oyle, that thereby thou may receiue full remiſsion of thy ſins, is no prayer, but a ſurly and ſtately publiſhing of their owne phantaſie is likewiſe manifeſt. Laſtly, that the oyle had no vertue to heale contained in it, but onely was vſed to ſet forth the vertue of the Spirit in curing the ſick, and that the ſtrength of the cure reſteth wholy in the Spirit of God; it is evident, in that the Apoſtles, and Prophets before them, healed the ſicke, yea raiſed up the dead without the vſe of oyle. For which cauſe alſo the prayer of Elias is called to witneſſe, which of it ſelfe without any outward element, obtained raine, wherewith the whole land, and the inhabitants thereof were healed of many diſeaſes which the famine of thoſe times drew with it, where it cannot bee ſhewed that the Miniſters without prayer vnto God in the name of our Saviour Chriſt, did ever worke any miraculous cure.

RHEM. 8. [15 Shall ſaue.] The firſt effect of this Sacrament is, to ſaue the ſoule, by giuing grace and comfort to withſtand the terrours and tentations of the enemie, going about (ſpecially in that extremitie of death) to driue men to deſpration or diſtreſſe of mind and other damnable inconueniences, the which is ſignified in the matter of this Sacrament ſpecially.

CARTVV. 8 Shall ſaue.] Theſe words are referred vnto the reſtoring of the health, as the words immediatly following doe declare; and the very phraſe of S. Iames in this place wherein hee ſaith, that the prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the diſeaſed, and not as the Ieſuites pretend, this Sacrament ſhall ſaue his ſoule.

The three effects of this Sacrament.

RHEM. 9. [15 Shall lift him vp.] When it ſhall be good for the ſaluation of the partie, or agreeable to Gods honour, this Sacrament reſtoreth alſo a man to bodily health againe, as experience often teacheth vs. Which yet is not done by way of miracle, to make the partie ſuddenly whole, but by Gods ordinary prouidence and vſe of the ſecond cauſes which otherwiſe ſhould not haue had that effect, but for the ſaid Sacrament. This is the ſecond effect.

CARTVV. 9. [15. Shall lift him vp.] This is an abſolute promiſe, and given as you ſay, vpon condition, as may appeare not onely for that the words ſo ſound, and the practiſe thereof was declared in the Apoſtles ſent out to heale, by the oyle here ſpoken of: but alſo by this, that Iames (who vpon an abuſe crept into the Church, that men would ſpeake certainly of things uncertaine, taught men to ſay, if the Lord will, &c.) would undoubtedly (hauing ſo fit a cauſe offered him as the Ieſuits pretend) haue given here an example of the practiſe of that doctrine.

As for the often experience of recoveries after the Prieſt hath annoyled, how untrue it is, let the world iudge. And the common proverbe partly bewrayeth it, wherein to note the certaine death and murder of a man, it is ſaid, I will be thy Prieſt: thereby ſignifying that he ſhall as hardly eſcape death, as he doth whom the Prieſt with this deadly Oyle hath once annoynted.

RHEM 10. [15. They ſhall be remitted him.] What ſinnes ſoeuer remaine vnremitted, they ſhall in this Sacrament and by the grace thereof be remitted, if the perſons worthily receiue it, this is the third effect. S. Chryſoſtome of this effect ſaith thus. They (ſpeaking of Prieſts) do not onely remit ſinne in baptiſme, but afterward alſo, according to the ſaying of S. Iames. If any be ſicke, let him bring in the Prieſts &c. Lib. 3. de Sacerd. prope initium, Let the Proteſtants marke that he calleth Presbyteros, Sacerdotes; that is, Prieſts, and maketh them the onely miniſters of this Sacrament and not elders or other lay men. By all which you ſee this Sacrament of all other to bee maruelous plainely ſet forth by the Apoſtle. Onely ſick men and (as* the Greek word giueth) men very weake muſt receiue it: onely Prieſts muſt be the miniſters of it: the matter of it is holy oyle: the forme is prayer, in ſuch ſort as we ſee now vſed: the effects be as is aforeſaid, Yet this ſo plaine a matter and ſo profitable a Sacrament, the enemie by Heretikes would wholy aboliſh.

Prieſts (and not Elders) are the Miniſters of this Sacrament.

CARTW.

CARTVV. 10. [15. They shall be remitted.] It hath been shewed, that as the Priest in times past could pronounce no man cleane but him whom God had first cleansed; so the Minister of the Gospell can absolue none from his sinne, but him whom by undoubted tokens drawne out of the Scripture, he knoweth to haue been before forgiven of the Lord. And therefore your Canon out of Augustine saith, That it is ridiculous that we should call him cleane which is tied with the bonds of his sinne, for this cause onely, because the Bishop is said to haue such power, that those which he loosed of him, are loosed in heaven. Now as for that which Cyrysostom saith, lib. 3. de Sacerd. that the Priests haue power to forgiue sinne, not onely in baptisme, but when men are sicke, according as Iames saith, how idlely and sottishly is it here alledged? as if it were any marvell that they should then haue power to forgiue sin which haue power so to doe, as often as a man at any time in his life shall be truely penitent for his sinne? Chrysostom sheweth here the priviledges which the Priests haue of preaching, administring of the sacraments of Baptisme and of the Supper of the Lord, and of forgiving of sinnes: and addeth that the Priests are more profitable against sicknesses then the naturall parents, sometimes by restoring a man to life that is neere death; and other some time by mittigating the paine: and thirdly, in not suffering them to fall into diseases. But of sacramentall unction, or any manner of aneeling as of a thing that was a meere stranger in the Church then, he saith not a word. And if Chrysostome should meane any oynting in this place, it is manifest that the oyle must be laid as well upon those that are not sicke, as upon them that be sicke: for even as he affirmeth, that the Priests by their strong comforts (out of the word of God) oftentimes restore those that are neere to death, and mitigate their sorrowes which are tormented: even so (by faithfull warning to beware of sinne) he saith they keepe men also from falling into diseases. And when you will haue us note that he calleth them Sacerdotes, and Ministers of the sacraments to whom this appertaineth, and not Elders: note you it: and note it again, that it is no more against the Elders of the Reformed Churches, then against your sir Dominies; Chrysostome here speaking properly of the Bishop between whom and them, whom the Scripture and the purest Ecclesiasticall Writers most properly call Presbyteros, or Elders, there is so great a difference, that (as hath upon 1. Tim. 5. 17. and may further be shewed) to them by right of their proper function in no sort belongeth the administration of the Sacraments, but onely unto the Bishop: which if it be true, it appeareth that if any sacramentall unction were here used, it was used by the Bishop onely, where in your Synagogue it is so continually administred by your simple Sir Iohns, that (you know unlesse you bee strangers at home) it is disputed amongst you whether a Bishop may administer the sacrament (forsooth) of extreme unction or no.

RHEM. 11. [16. Confesse therefore.] It is not certaine that he speaketh here of sacramentall Confession: yet the circumstance of the letter well beareth it, and very probable it is that he meaneth of it: and Origen doth so expound it, hom. 2. in Lenit. and Venerable Bede writeth thus. In this sentence (saith he) there must be this discretion, that our daily and little sinnes we confesse one to another, vnto our equals, and beleeue to bee saued by their daily prayer: but the vncleannesse of the greater leprosie let vs according to the law open to the Priest, and at his pleasure in what manner and how long time he shall command, let vs be carefull to bee purified. But the Protestants fleeing from the very word confession in despite of the Sacrament translate thus, acknowledge your faults one to another. They doe not well like to haue in one sentence, Priests, praying ouer the sicke, anoyling them, forgiuing them their sinnes, confession, and the like Confession. In hunc locũ.

CARTVV. 11. [16. Confesse therefore,] If this be Sacramentall Confession, then the Priest is as well bound to confesse his sinnes to lay men (as they terme them) as they are bound to confesse their sinnes to the Priest: For Iames hauing taught the duty of the Church Gouernours before, teacheth here what is the dutie of euery good and righteous man. And first that the whole be not ashamed to confesse his sinnes to him that is sick, that by knowing how, notwithstanding some great sins of his, he did obtaine mercy of the Lord for health when he was sick, the sick also may bee strengthned in his faith of recouerie of health if it bee needfull. Secondly that the sick should not blush (for his further good) to confesse the sinne which he hath committed thereby to draw forth from another which is whole, the acknowledgment of the comfort, that (notwithstanding the like sin) he hath been partaker of. And besides that the word doth euidently signifie a mutuall confession of ech party vnto other; Augustine doth interpret this very place of Iames of that confession wherewith a man hauing offended his neighbour is commanded to giue satisfaction vnto him. Origen. 2. Hom. in Lenit. saith that the Confession here spoken of is annexed to true Repentance, but that either Repentance is any Sacrament, or that this Confession is sacramentall, he hath not a syllable, vnlesse you would haue him to think that to giue Almes, and to forgiue a mans brother the offence hee hath comitted against him be also Sacraments; considering that as of the seuen wayes he prescribeth to get remission of sinnes, he nameth Repentance for one, whereunto he annexeth this confession here spoken of; so he maketh the other two, of these seuen meanes. And therefore if you will make all these Sacraments because Origen maketh them meanes of obtaining remission, there must bee (by your doctrine and Origens together) twelue Sacraments at the least: seeing of all those seuen there recited, there are but two onely Baptism & Repentance which you recken for Sacraments. As for Bedes counsell of discretion for laying open of the greater faults to the Priest, it liketh vs well so that the Priest (as it was vnder the Law) be so instructed out of the word of God, that he be able vpon the sight or hearing of the sin to iudge rightly of it. Neither are we against this that according to the stubbournesse of the sinner both the Priest do inioyne, and he accept of a deeper and sharper sorrow according to the outrage of the sinne that is committed; prouided againe that the standard of this sorrow be not defined altogether by time (which is a deceitfull measure, some mens sorrow being more in one day, then othersome is in a whole yeare:) but measured rather by a liuely touch and quick feeling of that griefe which he conceiueth for offending so deare a father, may procure him a sufficient witnesse, that he hath truely beleeued in him, which iustifieth the wicked through faith, and therefore will much more freely pardon him all his offences, in whom there are dwelling such effectuall tokens of the spirit of sanctification. And there- Aug. tract. in Ioh. 56.

fore notwithſtanding Bede may ſeeme to ſauour in ſome ſort of the corruption of the time wherin he liued: yet there is nothing in this ſentence, which by friendly interpretation agreeth not with the doctrine of our profeſſion; aſſured we are that he is neerer vnto vs then vnto you. That we abhor not the word of Confeſſion (notwithſtanding it hath bn ſo horrible abuſed of you) may appeare, for that euen they whom you charge which exchanging Confeſſe with Acknowledge, haue oftener turned this word Confeſſing then Acknowledging: And therefore any man that hath halfe an eye may ſee that you are very quarelling Sycophants. If there were any fault herein, it was this, (which you and your vulgar often fall into) that one and the ſame word they haue tranſlated by diuers words: and yet that wanteth not defence; for in other places it being ſpoken of publick and open confeſſion, in the face and hearing of the whole Church, as hath been ſhewed on Math.3.6. & Act.19.18. and heere of a private uttering of an offence: there was good reaſon that for divers things ſignified in one and the ſame word, they ſhould anſwerably uſe diverſity of ſpeech to put the Reader in minde of ſome other confeſſion in this place, then was meant in the former.

Verſe. 17. Elias was a man like unto us paſsible: and with prayer he prayed that it might not raine upon the earth, and it rained not for three yeares and ſixe months.

Truths vnwritten, and knowen by tradition vnwritten.

RHEM. 12. [17. He prayed.] The Scriptures to which the Apoſtle alludeth, make no mention of Elias prayer, therefore he knew it by tradition or reuelation. Whereby we ſee that many things vnwritten be of equall truth with the things written.

1. King. 17. 1. Phil. 4. 6. Ioh 14.13. 14.

CARTVV. 12. [17. He prayed.] The Scripture ſaith, that Elias by an oath confirmed unto Achab that for ſome yeeres there ſhould be no raine but by his direction. Wherefore it is evident, that Elias deſired that (for Gods glory in the avenge of Idolatry that had over-ſpred that land) there ſhould be no rain for a time. And this being his godly deſire, there is a commandement of God that thoſe godly deſires ſhould be layd open unto the Lord by prayer. And ſeeing we are bound to pray for thoſe things that may concerne our good in this life, how much more are we bound to pray for thoſe things which concerne the glory of God? Iames therefore knowing by Scripture, that Elias was a righteous man, and knowing by the ſame Scripture that righteous men aske thoſe things at the hand of God which they know greatly to concerne his glory, muſt neceſſarily alſo know by the Scripture, that Elias prayed for that which he knew ſo highly and neerly to touch Gods glory. Alſo it being a miracle that Elias wrought in the ſhutting and opening of the heauens, he could not otherwiſe doe it then (as other the ſervants of God both Prophets and Apoſtles which wrought miracles) by invocation of the name of God: it being proper onely unto our Saviour Chriſt to worke wonders by Commandement. Wherefore that Iames knew that Elias prayed, he had it neither by Tradition nor Revelation, but by certaine and undoubted analogie and reſolution of the Scripture. Albeit, if God revealed any thing unto the holy Apoſtles who ſpake and wrote by inſpiration, it was a priviledge of their Perſons or Office rather, which now being ceaſed, is with the Office it ſelfe expired. Beſide that, it is evident out of the Scripture by the ſeparation of himſelfe to prayer, and by the geſture and behaviour he vſed, that he prayed at the opening of the heavens.

THE

RHEMIST.

OF S. Peter we read at large, both in the Gospels and in the Acts of the Apostles: and namely, that Christ designed him, and also made him his vicar (as S. Matthew for that cause in the catalogue of the Apostles, calleth him Primus, the first, and all antiquitie, Princeps Apostolorum, the Prince of the Apostles) and that hee accordingly executed that office after Christs departure, planting the Church first among the Iewes in Hierusalem and in all that country and coasts about, as Christ also himselfe before had preached to the Iewes alone. c.10.v.2.

But preaching at length to the Gentiles also, according to Christs commission (Math 28.v.19.) and being now come to Rome, the head cittie of the Gentiles, from thence hee writeth this Epistle to his Iewes, hauing care of them in his absence, no lesse then when hee was present: and not to the Iewes that were at home, (belike because they had S. Iames, or his successour S. Simon Cleophæ, resident with them) but *to them that were dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and Bithynia. 1. Pet.1.

And that he writeth it from Rome, himself signifieth, saying: The Church that is in Babylon saluteth you. *Where by Babylon he meaneth Rome, as all antiquitie doth interprete him: not, that he so calleth the Church of Rome, but the heathen state of the Romane empire, which then, and 300. yeeres after, vnto the conuersion of Constantius the Emperour did persecute the elect Church, in so much that the first 33. Bishops thereof vnto S. Silvester, were all Martyrs. * See the Annotation 1.Pet.5.13

For the matter whereof hee writeth, himselfe doth signifie it in these words: This Ioe the second Epistle I write, to you, my deerest, in which (Epistles) I stirre vp by admonition your sincere minde, that you may be mindfull of those words &c. So he saith thereof both together. And againe of the same purpose, in another place: I haue briefly written, beseeching and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein you stand, For there were at that time certaine Seducers as S. Augustine also hath told vs) who went about to teach Onely faith, as though good works were not necessary nor meritorious, there were also great persecutons, to compell them with terrour to deny Christ and all his religion. He therefore exhorteth them accordingly, neither for persecution, neither by seduction to forsake it: though in the first his exhortation is more principally against persecution: and in the second, more principally against seduction. The first epistle is noted to be very like to S. Pauls epistle to the Ephesians, in words also, and so thick of Scriptures, as though he spake nothing else. 2.Pet.3. 1.Pet.5. See the Annot. upon Iam.2.21.

The time when the first was written, is vncertain: the second was written, a little before his death as is gathered by his words in the same c.1.v.14.

CARTVV. That in the first Section of Peters Vicarage, is old rubbage, which is before (upon *Math.*10.2. & 16.18.) thrown out; where is shewed that he hath no presentation thereunto from our Saviour Christ.

In the second and third sections touching Rome, from whence this is supposed to be written, it shall after be answered, upon 1.*Pet.*5. where it is againe repeated.

In the fourth section, the Arguments of both these Epistles are rightly and with some dexterity drawn from the Epistles themselues. But against iustification by faith onely, there is not a word: but contrarily, all the causes of our salvation in the very fore-head of the first Epistle are placed without our selues, in the free grace of God through the obedience of Christ.

Verſe 8 AND a ſtone of offence and a rocke of ſcandall, to them that ſtumble at the word, neither do beleeue ‡ wherein alſo they are put.

RHEM. Whereto alſo they are ordained.

CARTVV Reynolds againſt maiſter Whitaeres condemneth this tranſlation in us as moſt blaſphemous, and as that which placeth God in ſtead of the devill: which notwithſtanding the Ieſuites heere haue plainely ſet downe for Catholick and holy, and this they haue done in the Margent, as of the ſame value with that which they haue ſet down in their Text: ſeeing there is no divers reading that (as at other times) cauſeth theſe Marginall Tranſlations; which we obſerue heere, not onely to ſhew their differences among themſelues, but the itch that divers haue in their heads to write ſomewhat to wrangle with our tranſlation, though it be never ſo much without reaſon.

Verſe. 9. But you are an elect generation, a ‡ kingly Prieſthood, a holy nation, a people of purchaſe: that you may declare his vertues which from darkeneſſe hath called you into his meruailous light.

RHEM. 1. [9. Kingly Prieſt.] The Proteſtants can no more gather of this, that all Chriſtians be Prieſts: then, that all be Kings: as is moſt plaine, Apocalyp. 1. 6. and 5. 10. Thou haſt made vs a kingdom (or Kings) and Prieſts.

CARTVV. 1. [9 Kingly Prieſts.] It is very true, that as all Chriſtians are Prieſts to offer ſpirituall ſacrifice; ſo are they all Kings to maiſter and over-rule their evill concupiſences, which make rebellion againſt the good motions of Gods Spirit in them: And therefore under the Goſpell there is properly but one true Church King, Chriſt our Saviour, which giveth Lawes unto his Subiects; ſo properly there is but one Prieſt that once offering himſelfe, made a full ſatisfaction for the ſinnes of the world, and now liveth to make interceſſion for all thoſe that come unto God by him.

Verſe. 13. ǀ Be ſubiect therefore ǀ to every ‡ humane creature for God: whether it be to ǀ King as excelling.

RHEM. 2. [13. Humane creature.] So is the Greeke, but the Proteſtants, in fauour of temporall lawes made againſt the Catholike religion, tranſlate it very falſly thus, to all manner ordinance of man: themſelues boldly reiecting Eccleſiaſticall decrees as mens ordinances.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 5. Be ye alſo your ſelues ſuperedified as it were living ſtones, ſpirituall houſes, a holy Prieſthood, to offer ǀ ſpirituall hoſtes, acceptable to God by Ieſus Chriſt.

RHEM. 3. [5. Spirituall hoſts.] Here we ſee that as he ſpeaketh of ſpirituall hoſts, which euery Chriſtian

Christian man offereth, so he speaketh not properly of Priesthood, when he maketh all Priests, but of a spirituall Priesthood, which spirituall priesthood was also in all the Iewes: but the Priesthood (properly so called) was onely in the sonnes of Aaron, and they offered the sacrifices (properly so called) which none besides might offer. Spirituall hosts and Priests.

CARTVV. 3. [5 Spirituall hostes.] All is true heere, and yet nothing that can put any breath into your Priesthood, so oftentimes put to the sword by the whole course of the Scriptures; especially in the Epistle unto the Hebrewes.

RHEM. 4. [13. Be subiect.] Not onely our Master Christ, but the Apostles and all Christians were euer charged by such as thought to bring them in hatred with princes, with disobedience to kings and Temporall Magistrates, therefore both *S. Paul and this Apostle do specially warne the faithfull, that they giue no occasion by their ill demeanure to secular Princes, that the Heathen should count them disobedient or seditious workers against the States of the world. Obedience to temporall Princes. Rom. 13.

CARTVV. 4. [13 Be subiect.] S.

RHEM. 5. [13. To euery humane creature.] So he calleth the temporall Magistrate elected by the people, or holding their Soueraintie by birth and carnall propagation, ordained for the worldly wealth, peace, and prosperity of the subiects: to put a difference betwixt that humane Superiority and the spirituall Rulers and regiment, guiding and gouerning the people to an higher end, and instituted by God himselfe immediately, for Christ did expresly constitute the forme of regiment vsed euer since in the Church. He made one the chiefe placing Peter in the Supremacie: he called the Apostles and Disciples, giuing them their seuerall authorities. Afterward * God guided the lot for choice of S. Matthias in Iudas place: and the holy Ghost expresly and namely seuered and chose Paul and Barnabas vnto their Apostolicall function: and generally the Apostle saith of all spirituall Rulers, The holy Ghost hath placed you to rule the Church of God. God instituted the spirituall gouernement in more excellent maner then the temporall. Acts. 1. Acts. 20.

And although all power of God, and Kings rule by him, yet that is no otherwise, but by his ordinary concurrence, and prouidence whereby he procureth the earthly commoditie or wealth of men, by maintaining of due superiority & subiection one towards another, and by giuing power to the people & Commonwealth to choose to themselues some kind or form of regiment, vnder which they be content to liue for their preseruatiō in peace & tranquillity. But spiritual superiority is far more excellent, as in more excellent sort depending, not of mans ordinance, election, or as this Apostle speaketh creation, but of the H. Ghost, who is alwayes resident in the Church (which is Christs body mysticall, and therefore in another manner of Commonwealth then the earthly) concurring in singular sort to the creation of all necessary officers in the said Church, euen to the worlds end, as S. Paul writeth to the Ephesians. Eph. 4.

Lest therefore the people, being then in so precise sort alwayes warned of the excellencie of their Spirituall gouernours *and of their obedience toward them, might neglect their duties to temporall Magistrates, specially being infidels, and many times tyrants and persecutors of the Faith, as Nero and other were then: therefore S. Peter here warneth them to bee subiect, for their bodies and goods and other temporall things, euen to the worldly Princes both Infidels and Christians, whom he calleth humane creatures. Heb. 13.

CARTVV. 5. [13. To euery humane creature.] It is true that Magistrates be called an humane creature, because although it be Gods ordinance there should be Magistrates, yet they come to their office by no constant and certaine rule of God, but are left at the libertie of the people and Cōmon-weals whether they will haue them by Election or Propagation, whether they will haue Monarchies or other kindes of governments. But that they haue authority not to procure the Outward peace and prosperity of the people onely, but also (and especially) that they take care that their people may liue godlily and honestly, hath been already shewed. It is also true that Christ did ordain the forme of government in the Church, but of Peters supremacy, whereof the Iesuites here haue their vagary, which serueth them for loading as often as their other store is short, he ordaineth nothing. But remembring that they are here pricked, while Peter willing the whole Church to be subiect to their Magistrates, thereby shutteth the Bishops, and in them the Bishop of Rome under the humble subiection of their and his lawfull Magistrates, it is no marvell though they haue sought by saying something of the excellency of the Church government aboue the civill Regiment, to make the silly reader beleeue that they had said somewhat for freeing their shaven crownes from the loyall subiection of their lawfull Magistrates: as if the excellency of the Church governement aboue the regiment of the Common-wealth could not stand, unlesse the sacred head of Princes were brought under the foot of a proud and arrogant prelat of Rome. Or as if Paul yeelded any thing from the height of his spirituall supremacie when he appealed to Cæsar as unto his Iudge, at his bar to haue triall of life and liberty which the Iewes had called in question. Or as if Aaron had lost any thing of the iust stature of Gods highest and most supereminent Priest, because Moses was both by Gods appoyntment and his owne acknowledgement his soveraigne Lord, and (for loyall and subiectly obedience after a sort) even his God also. Rom. 13. 1. Act. 25. 10. 11. Exod. 32. 22 & 4. 16.

RHEM. 6. [13. To the king as excelling.] Some simple Heretikes and others also not vnlearned at the beginning, for lacke of better places, would haue proued by this, that the king was head of the Church, and aboue all Spirituall rulers: and to make it sound better that way, they falsly translated it, To the king as the chiefe head, in the Bible of the yeare 1562. But it is euident that he calleth the king the precellent or more excellent, in respect, of his Vicegerents, which he calleth Dukes or Gouernours that be at his appointment; and not in respect of Popes, Bishops, or Priests, as they haue the rule of mens soules: who could not in that charge be vnder such kings or Emperours as the Apostle speaketh of no more then the kings or Emperours then, could be heads of the Church, being Heathen men and no members thereof, much lesse the cheefe members. See a notable place in S. Ignatius epist. ad Smyrnenses, where hee exhorteth them first to honour God, next the Bishop, and then the King. Herct. translation. The kings excellency of power is in respect of the Nobility and lay Magistrates vnder him.

This is an inuincible demonstration, that this text maketh not for any spirituall claime of earthly kings kings, becauſe it giueth no more to any Prince then may & ought to be done & granted to a Heathen Magiſtrate. Neither is there any thing in all the new Teſtament that proueth the Prince to be head or cheefe gouernour of the Church in ſpirituall or Eccleſiaſticall cauſes, more then it proueth any heathen Emperour of Rome to haue been, for they were bound in temporall things to obey the heathen being lawfull kings, to be ſubiect to them euen for conſcience, to keep their temporall lawes, to pay them tribute, to pray for them, and to do all other naturall duties: and more no Scriptures bind vs to do to Chriſtian kings.

CARTVV. 6. [13. To the King as excelling, &c.] The Bible which tranſlateth, vnto the king as vnto the head, carrieth a weake ſound toward a proofe that the King is head of the Church. But the word of excelling, or head, which are in effect all one, proue ſufficiently that the King is the ſupreame gouernour of the Common-wealth, and conſequently of the Biſhop which is a ſubiect and member thereof. And although the Biſhop can haue no authoritie ouer the Prince that is no member of the Church: yet the Prince ceaſeth not to haue power ouer the Biſhop, for that hee is a member of his Common-wealth. Neither is the right of the Prince leſſe (as many not ſo adviſedly thinke) becauſe the Prince is heathenish, or otherwiſe wicked; for the right of government of all Eccleſiaſticall and Civill perſons, and of dealing in cauſes both Civill and Eccleſiaſticall (ſo far as the Princes meaſure appoynted in the word will ſtretch) is the ſame in tyrants which it is in noſter-fathers of the Church. And therefore the tyrant ſhall anſwer vnto God for leaving that part of his duty vnperformed vnto his people, which could not be, if he had no right of government over Eccleſiaſticall perſons in their Church affaires. Onely this authority is not therefore ſought vnto, becauſe the edge thereof is turned againſt it. That any of ours haue hereof gathered the King to be head of the Church, we do ſo much the leſſe beleeue it, as you are ſo ſparing of their names, which are ſo ready to blaze them vpon the leaſt hope of impairing their credit. And it is (thankes be to God) well knowne that it is the doctrine of our Churches, that Chriſt alone is the head of the Church, and of every member thereof. And where you would haue the reader ſo diligently to note that which Ignatius hath ad Smirnæos, who (after God) will haue the Biſhop to haue the firſt place in honour before the King: let him note alſo withall, that there groweth thereby nothing vnto the Pope of Rome ouer the Princes which are not in his territories: Ignatius ſpeaking this of the Biſhop in every particular Congregation, making his Biſhop no more geyſon then the common table which he calleth an Altar. Secondly, let him note (if they will here be biting vpon the word) that he caſteth not the King, as they doe, vnder the Prieſt and other of the Clergie, but onely vnder the Biſhop. Thirdly, let him vnderſtand that Ignatius there ſpeaketh of the policie and gouernement of the Church where it behoueth the Emperour to be ſubiect vnto the Biſhop as vnto Chriſt, from whom he withdraweth himſelfe if he withdraw himſelfe from the obedience of the Biſhop in the things which the Biſhop adminiſtreth according to the commandement of Chriſt. Yet this hindereth not but the Prince may be aboue the Biſhop, and the Biſhop his humble vaſſaile; ſeeing as the Biſhop is immediately between Chriſt and the King, ſo the King is immediatly vnder God (who is the head of Chriſt himſelfe) as the Biſhop is deputed vnder Chriſt. And therefore another ſaith euen as notably and as truely as Ignatius. We honour the Emperour ſo as it is lawfull for vs and expedient for him, as a man ſecond from God, and onely inferiour vnto God.

Libertines.

RHEM. 7. [16. Not as having.] There were ſome Libertines in thoſe dayes, as there bee now, that vnder pretence of liberty of the Goſpell, ſought to be free from ſubiection and lawes of men as now vnder the like wicked pretence, Heretickes refuſe to obey their ſpirituall rulers and to obſerue their lawes:

CARTVV 7. [16. Not as having.] If vnder the colour of the Goſpell we ſhould free our ſelues from Spirituall Rulers, then might your mouth be iuſtly open vpon vs: but now that refuſing a ſtranger and a Woolfe, we put our ſelues vnder the yoke of a home and a lawfull Miniſtery, all ſee how expedient it were that you were gagged, which like a ſort of Goſlings gaggle and prate contrary to an euidence of truth that all the world is witneſſe of, and your ſelues muſt confeſſe if you would never ſo little while let your conſcience haue the guiding of your pens.

Verſe. 18. Seruants be ſubiect in all feare to your maſters, not onely to the good and modeſt, but alſo to the wayward.

Deadly ſinnes of Princes or Superiours exempt not the ſubiects from obedience, as Wickliffe held.

RHEM. 8 [18. But alſo to the wayward.] The Wickleſiſts & their followers in theſe daies ſometimes to moue the people vnto ſedition, hold & teach that maſters and magiſtrates looſe their authoritie ouer their ſeruants and ſubiects, if they be once in deadly ſinne, and that the people in that caſe need not in conſcience obey them. Which is a pernitious and falſe doctrine, as is plaine by this place where we be expreſly commanded to obey euen the ill conditioned, which muſt be alwayes vnderſtood if they command nothing againſt God, for then this rule is euer to be folowed. We muſt obey God rather then men. Act. 5. 29.

CARTVV. 8 [18 But alſo to the wayward.] As Harlots lay their baſtards and miſ-begotten children at honeſt mens doores: ſo you falſely father vpon Wicliffe the ſhaking off the yoke of ſuch as God hath placed in authoritie: euen the ſame thing that you partly teach, and more buſily practiſe: who not content to renounce your naturall allegeance, and to withdraw your owne heads from the yoke of your commanded ſubiection, do alſo vnder colour of that which you haue fancied to be hereſie, endeuour to take away euen the life of your naturall Prince, and dread Soueraigne.

ANNOTATIONS.

Vers. 19 IN the which spirit comming, hee preached to them also that were in prison.

RHEM. 1. [19 To them that were in prison.] S. Augustine in his 99. Epistle in principio, confesseth this place to be exceding hard to vnderstand, and to haue many difficulties which he could neuer explicate to his own satisfaction. Yet vnto Heretickes this and all other texts be easie, not doubting but that is the sense, which themselues imagine, whatsoeuer other men deeme thereof. S. Augustine onely findeth himselfe sure of this, that Christs descending into Hell in soule after his death, is plainely proued hereby. Which thing he declareth there, to be conformable to diuers other expresse words of holy Writ, and namely to this same Apostles sermon Act. 2. and at length hee concludeth thus. Quis ergo nisi infidelis negauerat fuisse apud inferos Christum that is, Therefore who but an infidell, will deny that Christ was in Hell? Calvin then (you see) with all his followers are infidels, who in steed of descending of Christ in soule after his death, haue inuented another desperate kind of Christ being in Hell, when he yet was aliue on the Crosse. S. Athanasius also in his epistle cited by S. Epiphanius haer. 77. in principio, and in his book de Incarnatione Verbi propius initio. S. Cyril de recta fide ad Theodosium, Oecumenius, and diuers other vpon this place, proue Christs descending to Hell. As they likewise declare vpon the words following, that he preached to the spirits or soules of men deteined in Hell or in Prison.

Christ in soule descended vnto hell, whiles his body lay in the graue.

The Caluinists denying the same, are (by S. Augustines iudgment) infidels.

But whether this word Prison or Hell be meant of the inferiour place of the damned, or of Limbus patrum called Abrahams bosome, or some other place of temporall chastisement: and, to whom he preached there, and who by his preaching or presence there were deliuered, and whom they were that are called, Incredulous in the dayes of Noe: all these things S. Augustine calleth great profundities confessing himselfe to bee vnable to reach vnto it: onely holding fast and assured this article of our faith, that he deliuered none deputed to damnation in the lowest hell, and yet not doubting but that hee released diuers out of places of paines there, which cannot bee out of any other place then Purgatory. See the said Epistle, where also hee insinuateth other expositions for explication of the manifold difficulties of this hard text, which were too long to rehearse, our speciall purpose being onely to note briefly the things that touch the controuersies of this time.

Certaine difficulties whereof S. Augustine doubteth.

Purgatory.

CARTVV. 1. [19 To them that were in prison.] What we hold of Christs going down into hell, may appeare by that we haue before spoken vpon Act. 2. But that the soule of Christ is no more proued out of this place to haue descended into hell, then the body, it shall easily appeare: For Peter exhorting to suffer afflictions for righteousnesse, bringeth in our Saviour Christ, who was mortified and crucified, as touching the flesh thereby meaning the whole Manhood consisting both of body and soule, as the Apostle Paul also so calleth the whole Humane nature of our Saviour Christ. For notwithstanding that the soule of Christ died not, yet it was (as hath been shewed) horribly afflicted and crucified. And in that sense of mortification we are said to mortifie the powers of our soule, whiles with paine and griefe wee refraine the lusts and concupiscenses thereof. Neither should there be any such sound comfort in this example of our Saviour Christ; if, as we suffer for righteousnesse and a good conscience, not in body alone but in soule also; wee had not our Saviour Christ to haue gone before us, by his suffering in the same parts which we do. Seeing therefore it is euident, that the drift of Peter was in the same and greater afflictions indured by our Saviour Christ, to sweeten the bitternesse of that cup of sorrowes which he offereth them to drinke; it followeth (as well by conference of other places, as by the scope and drift of this present place) that vnder the name of being mortified as touching the flesh, the whole Humanity of Christ both body and soule must needs be vnderstood. And if it be granted that by the flesh is meant the Humanity of our Saviour Christ, then it must needs follow that by his Spirit is vnderstood his Diuinity, whereby that his flesh was quickned: and consequently that it was the same Diuinity that went and Preached, &c. considering Peter declareth that the same Spirit whereby hee was quickned went, &c. which also is another inuincible argument that it was not the soule of Christ whereof Peter speaketh, considering that the soule of Christ could not quicken, or raise from the dead our Saviour Christ, but his Diuinity onely. And how strange soeuer the Iesuites make it; amongst other senses Augustine Epist. 99. hath this also. For (saith hee) ere euer hee came in the flesh to die for us, hee came often before in the Spirit to such as hee thought good, admonishing them by visions in the spirit as he thought good by which Spirit hee was quickned when in his passions he was mortified in his flesh. August. also in the same Epistle doth once againe vtterly ouerthrow the Iesuites, which teach that Limbo Patrum is a part of hell, by saying plainly, that wee are not to think that the place of the Fathers rest which died before the comming of our Saviour Christ, is any part or member of hell. Whereunto also appertaineth, that he affirmeth that the word hell is neuer in the Scriptures taken in the good part.

Rom. 1. 3.

Rom. 8. 13. Col. 3. 5.

August. ad Euodium Epist. 99.

Tertullian also doth plainely confute this wicked opinion of theirs in the heretick Marcion, who held (as they do) that the Fathers before the Gospell were in a part of hell: and this he doth, saying, If Abrahams bosom be not heaven, yet it is higher then hell.

Tertul. lib 4 aduer. Marcion

Let also the Iesuites tell us what is the cause that he is said to haue Preached vnto those of Noes time, rather then to those of Abrahams and Moses time? Verily, if he should as touching his soule haue Preached to men in hell, hee should rather haue been said to haue Preached vnto them, then to the other: for as touching his Manhood, hee was the Minister of Circumcision, and therefore for his personall Ministerie kept himselfe within the bounds of Iury, not going to any of the Heathen,

Rom. 15. 8. Mat. 15. 24

nor communicating with them further then they came to him: whereas touching his eternall ſpirit hee was euen from the beginning of the world the teacher of his Church, and therefore alſo of thoſe which were in the daies of Noe. But it would require a volume, to bring all the reaſons wherewith the vanity of this dreame might be laid forth: Notwithſtanding it is not denied but that it is (in part) fauoured of men, which for their auntienty are of good regard in the Church of God; without the which (either in regard of it ſelfe, or in reſpect of any weight that commeth vnto it by the Popiſh Patronſhip of it) it was vtterly vnworthy of confutation. Howbeit, that the Fathers were ſaid to be in Purgatorie (where the paines are affirmed not to differ from the torments of hell but in time onely) it never entred into the thoughts of any antiquity.

Verſe.20. Which had been | incredulous ſometime, when they expected the patience of God in the daies of Noe, when the Arke was a building: in the which, few, that is, eight ſoules were ſaued by water.

What were the incredulous perſons of whom the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh.

RHEM. 1. [20. Incredulous ſometime.] They that take the former words, of Chriſts deſcending into Hell, and deliuering certaine there deteined, do expound this, not of ſuch as died in their infidelitie or without all faith in God, for ſuch were not deliuered: but either of ſome that once were incredulous, and afterward repented before their death: or rather and ſpecially of ſuch as otherwiſe were faithfull, but yet truſted not Noes preaching by his worke and word, that God would deſtroy the world by water. Who yet being otherwiſe good men, when the matter came to paſſe, were ſorry for their errour, and died by the floud corporally, but yet in ſtate of ſaluation, and being chaſtiſed for their fault in the next life, were deliuered by Chriſts deſcending thether, and not they onely, but all others in the like condition. For the Apoſtles gueth theſe of Noes time but for an example.

CARTVV. 2. [20 Incredulous ſometime.] This is another euident reaſon to ouerthrow the fable of Chriſts deſcending into hell, in their ſenſe: for ſeeing Peter declareth that hee preached not to any but to Infidels, and miſcreants, vnto whom deliuerance out of hell cannot appertaine; it is euident that there was never a ſoule gained by this Preaching, nor ever a one therefore brought out of hell by this diſcent. Which ſo vnauoidable reaſon that the Ieſuites might in ſome ſhew eſcape; they ſay that thoſe which haue followed their own ſenſe, in the former words, expound incredulous, or faithleſſe men, ſuch as were otherwiſe faithfull, but that they truſted not Noes Preaching that the world ſhould be deſtroyed by water. Here we will take you at your word, whereby we gaine this, that few or none but Papiſts, expounding theſe words of incredulous as you do; it muſt follow, that few or none beſides your ſelues expound the former words as you do: which, as it may
2. Pet. 2. 5. well be concluded from your words, ſo will it indeed appeare to bee true if your expoſition in euery part be compared with theirs. And now for your expoſition, that they were faithfull otherwiſe, but yet truſted not Noe, &c. it is confuted by this, that Peter defineth that Noes preaching was
1. Pet. 3. 20 21. of righteouſneſſe, and not alone of the deſtruction of the world, which appeareth alſo by the ſeale of his Preaching which Peter euen in this place maketh mention of; for the water of the floud ſealing the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt vnto us: it is euident alſo, that his preaching was accordingly. Neither remember we that the Scripture calleth it a Miniſteriall or Church Preaching, where a worldly incommodity is onely fore-told, without publiſhing faith or repentance: for ſo it ſhould haue been called a bare Propheſie rather then a Preaching. And the * Greek word which Peter uſeth, noteth not onely an infidelity but alſo a diſobedience proceeding from infidelity, which hath no place in that ſenſe which you lay down.

Verſe.21. Whereunto Baptiſme being | of the like forme now ſaueth you alſo: not the laying away of the filth of the fleſh, but the | examination of a good conſcience toward God by the reſurrection of Ieſus Chriſt.

Noes Arke & the water a figure of Chriſts croſſe & Baptiſme

RHEM. 3 [21. Of the like forme.] The water bearing vp the Arke from ſinking, and the perſons in it from drowning, was a figure of Baptiſme, that likewiſe ſaueth the worthy receiuers from euerlaſting periſhing. As Noe (ſaith S. Auguſtine) with his, was deliuered by the water and the wood, ſo the familie of Chriſt by baptiſme ſigned with Chriſts Paſſion on the Croſſe. Li. 12. Cont. Fauſtum c. 14. Againe he ſaith, that as the water ſaued none out of the Ark, but was rather their deſtruction: ſo the Sacrament of Baptiſme receiued out of the Catholike Church at Heretickes or Schiſmatikes hands, though it be the ſame water and Sacrament that the Catholike Church hath, yet profiteth none to ſaluation, but rather worketh their perdition. Which yet is not meant in caſe of extreme neceſſity, when the party ſhould die without the ſaid Sacrament, except hee tooke it at an Heretickes or Schiſmatickes hand. Neither is it meant in the caſe of infants, to whom the Sacrament is cauſe of ſaluation, they being in no fault for receiuing it at the hands of the vnfaithfull, though their parents and friends that offer them vnto ſuch to bee baptized, bee in no ſmall fault. S. Hierome to Damaſus Pope of Rome, compareth that See to the Arke, and them that communicate with it, to them that were ſaued in the Arke: all other Schiſmatikes and Heretikes, to the reſt that were drowned.

Baptiſme receiued of heretikes or ſchiſmatickes, when damnable, when not.

CARTVV. 3. [21 Of like forme.] If an Hereticke ſtand ſtill in his Miniſtery vndepoſed of the Church whereupon he attendeth? we eſteeme it more orderly to be Baptized of him being an heretick, and yet the ordinary Miniſter, then of a Catholike which is a ſtranger; but if the Church after conviction throw him out; then there is no cauſe of feined Neceſſity that can driue a godly man to his Baptiſme; It is another caſe when Baptiſme is adminiſtred by one that is both an Heretike, and out of the ſociety of the Church too; whereof notwithſtanding we will not diſpute at this time. Ierom Epiſt. 57. maketh no more reckoning of the Church of Rome when he calleth it the Arke, then of any other Church, which (holding the truth of doctrine that it did then) is the Arke, as well as Rome was in his daies: and therefore your own words, that all other ſchiſmatickes and heretickes be compared to the reſt that are drowned, carry a note of the

weakeneſſe and watriſhneſſe of your argument; ſeeing that to haue ſaid ſomewhat to the purpoſe, you ſhould haue ſhewed that Ierom affirmeth that all others that are not of the Church of Rome, as ſchiſmatickes and heretickes, are drowned.

RHEM. 4. [21. The examination of a good conſcience.] The Apoſtle ſeemeth to allude here to the very forme of Catholike Baptiſme conteining certaine interrogatories and ſolemne promiſes made of the articles of the Chriſtian faith, and of good life, and of renouncing Satan and all his pompes and works, which (no doubt) howſoeuer the Caluiniſts eſteeme of them, are the very Apoſtolike ceremonies vſed in the miniſtration of this Sacrament. See S. Dionys in fine Ec. hierarchæ. S. Cyrill. li. 12. in lo. c. 64. S. Auguſtine ep. 23. S. Baſil de Sp. ancto c. 12. and 15. Ambroſe de ijs qui myſterijs initiantur c. 2. 3. 4.

The ceremonies of Baptiſm, namely, abrenuncio, &c.

CARTVV. 4. [21 The examination of a good conſcience.] It is true, that hee alludeth to the Interrogations miniſtred in Baptiſme; but unto whom? verily to perſons that were of age; of which ſort moſt commonly they were that then were baptiſed, and of which ſort alſo they were to whom he giveth this inſtruction. And therefore to tranſlate this forme of queſtioning unto infants which haue neither underſtanding to know what is demanded, nor ſpeech to make anſwer, appeareth not to be ſo adviſed and ſeaſonable. Denys in fine Eccleſ. Hierarch. if he were good mony, yet is hee heerein none of yours: For thus hee ſaith; The Biſhop requireth that the witneſſes promiſe a renouncing of euill, and confeſſion of the faith. But how? Not (ſaith hee) as ſome ieſt, that one is Baptized for another: for hee ſaith not thus, I renounce for the child, or profeſſe the myſteries of faith, but the childe thus renounceth and profeſſeth: That is to ſay, I promiſe unto God to induce this child, by my diligent exhortations, when hee commeth to underſtanding, that hee ſhall profeſſe holy things, and renounce the contrary: Then the which what can be more directly againſt you? Cirill. li. in 10h. ſpeaketh euidently of thoſe that are of age: And therefore hee ſaith, thoſe which come to Baptiſme (not thoſe which are borne, or brought to Baptiſm) are thrice aſked. Auguſtine maketh faith, the Sacrament of faith, which is nothing to this purpoſe; but he affirmeth alſo directly againſt them, that the Miniſter aſketh (of the parents) whether the child beleeued, they anſwering that it did. Baſil de ſpiritu ſancto cap. 12. & 15. onely affirmeth, that the deuill is renounced, and the faith profeſſed before Baptiſme: but that children do that by others, in ſuch ſort as they affirme, there is not a word: And if there were, yet that there is no manner of weight in it, becauſe of Baſtardy, hath already been ſhewed. Ambroſe de his qui iuſte initiantur, c. 2. 3. 4. ſpeaketh of thoſe of diſcretion onely, ſaying, Repeat that which thou art asked, and conſider what thou haſt anſwered. So it appeareth that the queſtions in Baptiſme propounded to yong children, crept into the Church, not having one foote, either of the Scripture, or of Antiquity to ſtand upon.

CHAP. IIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 6 FOR, for this cauſe alſo was † it euangelized to the dead: that they may be iudged indeed according to men, in the fleſh: but may liue according to God in the Spirit.

RHEM. 1. [6. It euangelized.] It hath the ſame difficultie and ſenſe that the other like words haue before, Chapter 3. See the annotations there v. 19. S. Auguſtine ep. 96. and Oecumenius vpon this place.

CARTVV. 1. [6. It Euangelized.] Even this place declareth that Chriſt preached not unto the ſoules in hell, ſeeing it is ſaid he preached unto the dead. For ſeeing a man is ſaid to bee dead onely in regard of his body: it were abſurd and without all example of Scripture or other good writer that (ſpeaking of the ſoule as it is ſeparated from the body) he ſhould tearme it dead; which notwithſtanding the Ieſuites would impudently face downe (in that hereby they muſt be conſtrained to underſtand Peters words, that was preached to the dead, that is to ſay, was preached unto the ſoules whoſe bodies were dead: conſidering they ſay this place hath the ſame ſence which the other words had, 1. Pet. 3. 19. whereas by the word dead he alludeth to thoſe that liued in Noes time, and were dead at that time Peter wrote this Epiſtle) yet hath not this verſe the ſame ſence with the former place. For the ſcope thereof is (for the comfort of Gods perſecuted children) to declare how God is auenged upon the contemners of his Goſpell, although he beare them, and beare with them very long, as in Noes dayes when he wayted for the repentance of the old world an hundred and twenty yeares. But here he giueth a reaſon of that his exhortation to the godly which he had made in the firſt and ſecond verſes of this chapter, that they dying to ſinne (although it be through great afflictions, as Chriſt through extreame ſufferings died for ſinne) ſhould liue the reſt of their life unto God. Which exhortation having two branches, the one of Sanctification, the other of the continuance of time: the latter (as the leſſe) being according to the cuſtome of the Scripture argued in the third, fourth and fifth verſes, he commeth here unto the former, which he confirmeth from the end of preaching, that men being by obedience unto the truth condemned or mortified as touching the fleſh, which is according to the corrupt man, might be quickned in the ſpirit or inner man, which is according vnto God. And this he yet ſtrengtheneth with another reaſon of compariſon of the leſſe, which compariſon he noteth in the word καὶ, verſ. 6. That ſeeing the truth when it was not ſo cleare and euident as now it is, was preached vpon no other condition unto the Fathers before and under the Law that are now dead; we which liue now ſhould not looke for any other eſtate then they had in this behalfe.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 8. But before all things hauing mutuall charity continual among your selues: becausse charity covereth the multitude of sins.

Not only faith. Workes of mercy.

RHEM. 2. [8. Charitie covereth.] Faith onely cannot iustifie, seeing that charitie also doth cause remission of sinnes. And saying charitie, hee meaneth loue and charitable works towards our neighbours, vnto which works of mercy the Scriptures do specially attribute the force to extinguish all sinnes. See S. Augustine c. 69. Enchirid. and tract. 1. in Epist. 1. Ion. cap. 2. and Venerable Bede vpon this place. And in the like sense the holy Scriptures commonly commend vnto vs almes and deeds of mercy for redemption of our sinnes. Prouerb. cap. 10. Ecclesiastic. 12 ver. 2. Daniel in cap. 4. vers. 24.

Pro. 10. 12.

CARTVV. 2. [8. Charitie covereth.] The Apostle Peter exhorting vnto loue, and shewing that it ought to be stretched out to the benefit of others, proveth the same by a verse of Pron. 10. that Charity covereth the multitude of sinnes, as if with the length and bredth thereof it were able to ouerspread many sinnes. Which, that it is referred vnto man which hath this true loue whereby he covereth and concealeth another mans faults so farre as Christian wisedome will suffer him, and not vnto God, as if he in regard of the charitie of a man, did forgiue his sinnes, as the Iesuits pretend, it is evident by the opposition which Salomon (from whom this place is taken) maketh vnto this covering of sinne. For he saith, that hatred stirreth vp, discovereth, and as it were setteth abroad contentions, because the hater holdeth out as it were at the armes end, the falles on him whom he hateth, partly by publishing them to others, partly by casting them in the teeth of the sinner whereunto not the Lords forgiuenesse, but a mans concealing is contrary: whereas if this had been the sense that you speake of, then Salomon should not haue said, that hatred breedeth enmity and contention with men, but that it maketh a man hatefull and an enemy vnto God. Besides that Salomon saith, that loue covereth all sins, meaning such as may be concealed lawfully: so that if your sence may haue place, a man should haue the forgiuenes of all his sinnes which may be forgiven by the merit of his loue: which is directly not onely against the truth, but against your own doctrine, which ascribing the greatest part of our iustification vnto charity, giue some part thereof vnto faith, and that even in this note wherein yo say. Faith onely cannot iustifie, seeing charity also doth cause remission of sinnes. Last of all, if that sence which you choose were followed, yet when this reward of loue is not for it (as for a cause) but as for a thing annexed vnto the forgiuenesse of sinnes (as hath been shewed) it is evident that by this and such like speeches, there can be gathered nothing that is able to raise up your iustification by workes, which the Scripture with so high and strong a hand hath throwne downe into the bottom of hell. That of Daniel 4. 24. hath been answered vpon Luke 11. 41. Augustine 69. Enchirid. hath no such meaning, as appeareth in that after he had affirmed that a man may with almes do away his sinnes, he addeth, that then he may truely and humbly desire forgiuenesse of his sinnes of God: thereby declaring, that by doing away of sinne, he meaneth the breaking of from sinne, by being mercifull now, which was mercilesse before. For otherwise if he had already received remission of sinnes by doing of almes, hee should haue taught vs rather, that wee should haue desired of God confirmation of the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, then simply the forgiuenesse of sinnes. But his meaning was to declare, that men doe in vaine pray for the forgiuenesse of sinne, vntill they haue resolued to giue ouer the former cruelty and oppression wherein they lived. As for that Tract. 1. in epist. 1. Ioh. cap. 1. it is lesse to this purpose. For when he saith that Charity quencheth sinne, his meaning is, that charity and a sinfull life cannot stand together, but doe expell one another as Pride doth Charity. Bedes words carry a sound of merit, but having no weight of reason at all, hath by reason of his yonger yeares small counterpoise of authority to supply his want of reason.

Verse. 17. For the time is, that iudgement begin of the house of God. And if first of vs, what shall be the end of them that beleeue not the Gospell of God?

The better men most afflicted in this life.

RHEM. 3. [17. That iudgement begin] In this time of the new Testament, the faithful & all those that meane to liue godly (specially of the Clergie) must first and principally bee subiect to Gods chastisement and temporall afflictions, which are here called iudgement. Which the Apostle recordeth for the comfort and confirmation of the Catholike Christians, who were at the time of the writing hereof, exceedingly persecuted by the heathen Princes and people.

Ier. 25. 29. Ezek. 9. 6.

CARTVV. 3. [17. That iudgement begin.] This is the manner of Gods proceeding, not onely in the time of the new Testament, but also under the old, that the Lord in visiting and afflicting, beginneth at his own house.

Verse 18. And if the iust man shall scarse be saued: where shall the impious and sinner appeare.

The iust man himselfe is hardly saued

RHEM. 4. [18. If the iust.] Not that a man dying iust and in the fauour of God, can afterward be in doubt of his saluation, or may be reiected of God: but that the iust being both in this life subiect to all faults, tentations, troubles, and dangers of falling from God, and loosing their state of iustice, and also oftentimes to make a strait count, and to bee temporally chastised in the next life, cannot be saued without great watch, feare, and trembling, and much labouring and chastisement. And this is farre contrary to the Protestants doctrine, that putteth no iustice but in faith alone, maketh none iust indeed and in trueth, teacheth men to be so secure and assured of their saluation, that he that hath liued wickedly all his life, if he onely haue their faith at his death, that is, if he beleeue stedfastly that he is one of the elect, he shal be as sure of his saluation immediatly after his departure, as the best liuer in the world.

Against the same security of only faith

Pro. 11. 31.

CARTVV. 4. [18. If the iust.] It is new sophistry to carry that to the life to come, which is evidently meant of this present life, which the place of the Proverbs alledged by Peter doth evidently declare; where Salomon affirmeth that vnto the iust there is (by affliction) a reward of sinne, even in

in this life, how much more unto the wicked and unto the sinner? For as touching the assurance of the life to come, it is so from this, that they are scarce saved or doubt of salvation, that the Apostle affirmeth that they do more then overcome, and that we runnot as at an uncertain mark, & striue not as beating the aire. And when in the next verse the same men of whom it is said, that they are scarce saved, are bidden to commend their soules unto God, as unto one that is faithfull and will most assuredly keep the pledge and gage which they haue laid up in his hand, every man seeth how foolishly this is alledged for the shaking off the assurance of Gods children. It is therefore their idle fansie touching the falling away of the children of God, oftentimes confuted, and even in this place somewhat, if a man should follow their own sense; for when hee saith, that the iust man is scarcely saved, he thereby giveth to understand that hee is saved, although it be hardly. And by this false opinion of the children of God falling away altogether, they confirme the heresie of Anabaptisme: for, if the children of God should utterly be cut off from Christ, it is certaine that Baptisme being that onely Sacrament that sealeth up our putting on of Christ, and our ingrafting into him, it must of necessity follow, that he that falling away returneth againe, must be so oftentimes Baptized as (after separation from Christ) he is returned unto him againe. It is also their old, not so much Sophistry, as sottery, heereof to conclude, that we are not iustified by faith alone, because the children of God cannot enter salvation but by afflictions; as if every thing that is ioyned with salvation and accompanieth it, were by and by a cause thereof: then which, there can be nothing more unworthy a man of least sight in the Art of reasoning. But that, of all other is most absurd, that hereof they would conclude temporall chastisement in the next life, I say absurd, not onely because Peter speaketh of the afflictions wherewith the Lord tryeth his children in this world, but because hee speaketh here of those which are in that degree of Righteousnesse, as they suffer persecution for the truths sake, to whom their own doctrine giveth pasport to go straight to heaven without baiting in the scalding house of Purgatory. And among these kinde of iust men of whom this is here spoken Peter reckoneth himselfe, saying, if it first beginne with us. Vnlesse therefore Peter himselfe may be yoked to grind in the Popish Mil-house of Purgatory, it is evident that their proofe out of this place is but a dry draught for so thirsty a cause as it is.

CHAP. V.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1 THE I Seniors therefore that are among you, I beseech, my selfe a fellow senior with them, and a witnesse of the passions of Christ, who am also partaker of that glory which is to be reuealed in time to come.

RHEM. 1. [1. Seniors.] Though the Latine, Senior, bee not appropriated to holy order by vse of speach, neither in the Latine nor in our language: yet it is plaine that the Greeke word Presbyter, which the Apostle here vseth, is here also (as commonly in other places of the new Testament) a word of Ecclesiasticall office, and not of age, and is as much to say as Priest or Bishop. For the Apostle himselfe being of that order, speaketh (as by his words it is plain) to such as had charge of soules saying. Feede the flooke of God which is among you. Because we follow the vulgar Latine translation, wee say Seniors and Senior: whereas otherwise we might and should say according to the Greeke, The Priests therefore I beseech, my selfe a fellow-priest with them. So doth S. Hierome reade (Presbyteros compresbyter) and expound Ep. 85. So translateth Erasmus, and Beza himselfe.

Senior, in the vulgar translation often Priest or Bishop. See Act. 15.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Seniors.] Yee wicked seruants, we iudge you here out of your own mouthes: for if (as you say) you should haue sayd according to the Greeke, Priest rather then Senior: why (in so disordered and uncanonicall partialitie) had you rather erre with the vulgar Latine, then say the truth with the Greek.

Verse. 3 Neither I as over-ruling I the Clergie, but made examples of the flocke from the heart.

RHEM. 2. [3. Ouerruling.] Not superioritie, preeminence, soueraintie, or rule on the one side, nor obedience, subiection, and inferioritie on the other side, be forbidden in the Clergie: but tiranny, pride, & ambitious domination be forbidden, & humilitie, meekenesse, moderation are commended in Ecclesiasticall Officers, the Greeke word here of ruling or ouer ruling being the same that our Sauiour vseth in the Gospell, of the tyrannicall rule of secular heathen Princes, saying to his Apostles, that It shall not be so among them: according as here the prince of the Apostles teacheth his brethren the Ecclesiasticall rulers.

Not superiority, but tyranny and Lordlinesse is forbidden in the Clergy.

CARTVV. 2. [3. Ouer-ruling.] Looke the answer before upon Math. 20. 25. Notwithstanding that the circumstance of words ioyned with the word of Ruling (as to ouer-see compelledly and for filthy lucre) doth here (as otherwhere) lead to the signification of an excesse of rule or over-ruling, whereof there is no step in the former place, yet the former doctrine, that one Bishop should not command another, is here much confirmed: for when even towards the people, the gouernement ought to be moderate, and that the Church Officers should rather get their authoritie and credit by good example of life, then by Princely and Royall gouernement, it is to be esteemed, that he will allow no commandement of one Apostle over another, or of any other Church Officer over his fellowes that are in the same ranke and order that he himselfe is of.

κατακυριευοντες. Act. 19. 16.

RHEM. 3. [3. The Clergie.] Some of the English new translations turne it corruptly, Parishes: others, heritages: both, to auoid the most known, true, and common word in all Christian languages, to wit, Clergie, a word, by vse of all antiquity, and agreably to the holy Scriptures, made proper to the Spiritualty or Clergie: though in another more vulgar acception it may agree to all Christs chosen heritage, as well of lay people as Priests, which the Protestants had rather follow because they will haue no difference betwixt the laity and the Clergie. But the holy fathers farre otherwise euen from the beginning. Whereof see S. Cyprian ep. 4. 5. 6. &c. And S. Hierome ep. 2. to Nepotianus c. 5. where he interpreteth this word. Therefore (saith he) Clericus, that is, a Clergie man, which serueth the Church of Christ, let him first interprete his name, and the signification of the name being declared, let him endeuour to be that which he is called. If κλῆρος (Clerus) in Greeke, be called in Latine, Sors, therefore are they called Clerici, that is, Clergie men, because they are of the lot of our Lord, or because our Lord himselfe is the lot or portion of Clergie men &c.

The name of Clergie and Clarke.

Which calling no doubt was taken out of the holy Scriptures Num. 18. and Deut. 18. where God is called the inheritance, lot, and portion of the Priests and Leuites: and now when men bee made of the Clergy, they say Dominus pars hereditatis meæ, that is, Our Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, but specially out of the new Testament, Act. 1. 17. 25. and 8. 21. Where the lot or office of the Ecclesiasticall ministery is called by this κλῆρος, Clerus. See in Venerable Bede the causes why this holy state being seuered by name from the Laity, doth weare also a crown on their head for distinction. Lib. 5. hist. Angl. c. 22.

Priests crowns

CARTVV. 3. [3 Clergie.] That the Lords heritage, which they call Clergie, is not (as they haue fansied) restrained unto the Church Officers, but unto the whole Church, and in this place especially, unto the people that are governed, appeareth evidently, for that Peter hath made it of the same value and weight with the word Flock. And seeing they are the Church Officers which are said to rule over this Heritage, which they call Cleargie, how are they forsaken of all understanding, that do ground the signification of Clergy (restrained unto the Church Officers) out of this place: considering that thereby it should follow that Peter should command the Church Rulers to watch over themselus, and not over the flock, to governe themselues and not the people. We deny not, but that the name of Lot, is given to the Ministers under the Law, and under the Gospell unto the Church officers: But that the name of the Lords heritage, or Clergie, should bee appropriated and made the severall of Church-officers, which the Scripture doth lay open unto all Christians, both here and in other places, is a Church-robbery well beseeming your unfaithfulnesse in other the matters of God, of which you haue in like manner defrauded Gods people. And as it is a shamefull iniury thus to inclose, so to do it with such a hedge as hath the prickes alwaies towards your selues and in the stakes whereof your wicked and wrongfull incroching is evidently marked out, is Gods most iust iudgement upon you that you should thus fome out your own shame. For besides that this place is shamefully wrested that way, it is more then a palpable ignorance to put in the mouth of your Popish creatures, in the day of their annointing the verse of the Prophet which he first spake of himselfe (who was neither Priest nor Levite) and in himselfe of all the people of God: The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance: They might as well haue said, that theirs onely is the inheritance of the Kingdom, considering that thereof they are said κληρονομοι of the Kingdom, for that they are the Lords κληρος.

Ephes. 1. 11. Col. 1. 12.

Psal. 16. 5.

It is true, that the ancient Fathers do often restraine this word to the Church officers: but (besides that their manner of speech hath no authority, being besides the use of the holy Scripture) it appeareth that the speech at the first did arise from this, that the Church Officers were chosen by Lot; not that they were onely in the Lot of Gods people, or in the account of Gods inheritance, but that the Papists understand it in this latter sense appeareth by their other robberie of calling themselues spirituall (a title common to all the children of God) as if all besides them were carnall: Which also their shameless mouth feareth not to professe, whilst to proue that a Lay mans accusation may not be admitted against a Priest, they allege that carnall men hate the spirituall. You need not haue haue gone to Bede for proofe, that the Priests weare crownes for distinction, seeing Iohn noteth it as a marke of the Antichristian Priests to haue crownes upon their heads.

Apoc. 9. 7.

Verse. 4. And when the Prince of Pastors shall appeare, you shall receiue the incorruptible crown of glory.

RHEM. 4. [4. Crown of glorie.] As life euerlasting shall be the reward of all the iust; so the preachers and Pastors that do well, for their doing shall haue that reward in a more excellent degree, expressed here by these words, Crown of glorie, according to the saying of Daniel c. 12. They that sleepe in the dust of the earth, shall awake, one sort to life euerlasting, others to euerlasting rebuke, such as bee learned, shall shine as the brightnesse of the firmament: and such as instruct many to iustice, shall bee as starres, during all eternitie.

The heauenly crownes of Doctors and Preachers.

CARTVV. 4. [4 Crown of gloy.] We yeeld that good Pastors shall haue a crown in more excellent degree then other iust men, as if their crownes should be beset with Rubies, when others be with common Pearle; or with Diamonts when others with Rubies. But such a crown as you speak of for their well-doing, because it pulleth the Crown from the head of our Saviour Christ, we are sure Peter will never put it on.

Verse. 13. The Church saluteth you that is in Babylon, coelect, and Mark my sonne.

RHEM. 5. [13. That is in Babylon.] The Protestants shew themselues here (as in all places where any controuersie is, or that maketh against them) to bee most vnhoneſt and partiall handlers of Gods word. The ancient fathers namely S. Hierome in Catologo de scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis, verbo Marcus: Eusebius lib. 2. c. 14. hist. Oecumenius vpon this place and many moe agree, that Rome is meant by the word Babylon, heere also as in the 16. and 17. of the Apocalypse: saying plainely that Peter wrote this Epistle at Rome, which is called Babylon for the resemblance it had to Babylon that great citie in Chaldea (where the Iewes were captiues) for magnificence, Monarchie, narchie, resort and confusion of all peoples and tongues, and for that it was before Christ and long after, the seate of all Ethnike superstition and idolatrie, and the slaughter house of the Apostle and other Christian men, the heathen Emperours then keeping their chiefe residence there. See S. Leo Ser. 1. in Nati Petri & Pauli.

S. Peter writeth from Babylon, that is, Rome.

This being most plain, and consonant to that which followeth of S. Mark, whom all the Ecclesiasticall histories agree to haue been Peters scholler at Rome and that he there wrote his Gospell: yet our aduersaries fearing hereby the sequel of Peter or the popes supremacy at Rome, deny that euer he was there, or that this Epistle was written there, or that Babylon doth here signifie Rome: but they say that Peter wrote this Epistle at Babylon in Caldea, though they neuer read either in Scriptures or other holy or prophane history, that this Apostle was euer in that town, but see their shameleſſe partiality, here Babilon (say they) is not taken for Rome, because it would follow that Peter was at Rome &c. but in the Apocalypse, where all euill is spoken of Babylon, there they will haue it signifie nothing else but Rome, and the Romane Church also, not (as the fathers interpret it) the temporall state of the heathen Empire there. So do they follow in euery word no other thing but the aduantage of their own heresie. See the Annot. vpon the last to the Romanes, v. 16. and vpon the 17. of the Apocalypse v. 5.

The Protestants wrangle about the time of Peters being at Rome.

And as for their wrangling vpon the supputation of the time of his going thither, and the number of yeeres that he was there, and the diuersitie that seemeth to be in the Ecclesiasticall writers concerning the same, read B. Fisher and other that substantially answer all such cauils. And if such contentious reasoning might take place, we should hardly beleeue the principall things recorded either in Ecclesiasticall histories, or the Scriptures themselues. Concerning the time of Christs fleeing into AEgypt, of the comming of the Sages to adore him, yea of the yeares of his age, and the time of his death, all ancient Writers doe not agree, and concerning the day of his last supper and institution of the holy Sacrament, there is diuersitie of opinions. Shall we therefore inferre that he neuer died, and that the other things neuer were? Can the Heretikes accord all the histories that seeme euen in holy Scripture to haue contradiction? Can they tell vs certainely, when Dauid first came to Saul, and the like? doubt they whether euer the world was created, because the count of the yeares is diuers? Do they not beleeue that Paradise euer was, because no man knoweth where it is? and such other like things infinite to rehearse? Which when they were done, were plain and known things in the world: and now for vs to call them to an account after so many yeares, ages, and worlds, is but sophistication and plaine infidelitie. And the sect of the Protestants standing onely vpon destruction, and negatiues, and dealing with our religion euen as Iulian, Porphyrie, and Lucian did, it is an easie thing for them to bestow their time in picking quarrels.

Many things most true (euen in the Scriptures) are not agreed vpon concerning the time

CARTVV. 5. [13 In Babylon.] That Peter sate not at Rome, let the Reader look before in the answer to the Argument vpon the Acts, and also vpon Rom. 16. 16. and it is heere confirmed in that Peter writeth from Babylon, which to be Babylon in Caldea, and not in Italy, this is an euident reason, for that this Babylon was a place of principall abode of the Iewes, towards whom Peters charge especially lay: Whereas at this time the Iewes were not suffered to make their abode in Rome: whereunto may be added, that (writing to the dispersed Iewes, and making rehearsall of diuers Countries wherein they were) he leaueth out Caldea, which (considering the great numbers which remained there still after the returne into Iudea out of the captivity) hee would neuer haue done, vnlesse Caldea had been the place from whence he wrote this Epistle. Thirdly, in saying that the Church elect together with them saluteth them, it frameth better with the Iewes, whose visible choice was as ancient as theirs, then with the Gentiles whose visible and outward election came after. Against which their allegation, that the diversitie which seemeth to be in Ecclesiasticall Writers concerning the same, ought not to preiudice their opinion of Peters being at Rome; why do they deale so falsly as to say, that there seemeth to be some diversitie; when they know right well that there is such diversity, as neither they nor any for them, are able to make one. And therefore their saying, that in so reasoning we should hardly beleeue the principall things recorded in the Scriptures themselues, is indeed a horrible blasphemie, but yet in your mouthes (through deadly hatred against the Scriptures) so accustomable, as all reuerent and dutifull speech thereof may not vnworthily be thought forced and wrested from you, in regard of the facility and flowing course wherein your penne and tongue walk against it.

Gal. 2. 7. Acts. 18. 2.

They aske whether we can accord all the stories of Scripture which seeme to haue contradiction: yet such is their poverty in the discretion of appearance of contradiction, that of diuers questions here idlely moued, there is not one which implieth a shew of contradiction. They may well note some small doubt, whereof the iudgement of the one or the other side is not greatly materiall: but contradiction they imply none at all. And what we can doe in the according the appearance of contradiction in the Scripture, the Iesuites haue had an Essay; where, to disgrace the Scripture, they haue raked together in this kinde whatsoeuer their greatest Storers and Bankers of such coyne was able to furnish them with: howbeit they know right well (howsoeuer they dissemble it) that our principall arguments against Peters sitting at Rome, are drawne from a full consent of the whole body of the new Testament, and not from the iarring and diuers iudgements of Ecclesiasticall Stories.

In the answer to the preface.

Now whereas they cry out of shameleſſe partiality that here expound Babylon simply for the chiefe Cittie in Caldea, and yet for aduantage flye vnto a borrowed and figuratiue signification in the Apocalypse, there must needs be great want either of knowledge not to vnderstand, or of conscience not to confesse the cause of the different signification in these two books. For Peter writing here in a plain speech beseeming a teacher, speakes plainly, and calleth a spade a spade: where Iohn (writing Prophetically and mystically) vsed a Prophetical and mysticall speech, suting the matter he wrote of. From hence also it commeth, that Iude calling that Sodome simply which was the Towne wherein Lot dwelt, and Egypt the place out of which the Israelites were delivered: Iohn by Sodome and Egypt doth signifie Rome spiritually called so. Touching the authority of Irrome, Eusebius, and those which expound Babylon Rome in this place, it is but one Papias, that speaketh in them all: to whom whom what credit is due, let the Reader ſee before vpon Rom.16.16. The ſame anſwer ſerveth to the good conſonancie that this expoſition hath with that which followeth of Marke. Whether wee varry from the Fathers interpretation of Babyloniſh Rome mentioned in the Apocalypſe, ſhall bee ſeene when we come to that place.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PETER THE APOSTLE.

CHAP. I.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 18. AND this voyce we heard brought from heauen, when we were with him in the ‡ holy mount.

RHEM.1.[18. Holy mount.] You ſee that places are made holy by Chriſts preſence, and that all places be not alike holy. See Annot. Act.8.33.

CARTVV.1. [18. Holy mount.] Looke the anſwer before vpon Math.17.9.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 10. Wherefore, brethren, labour the more that by ! good workes you may make ſure your vocation and election. For, doing theſe things you ſhall not ſinne at any time.

Good workes muſt concur with Gods Predeſtination to the effect thereof. διὰ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων.

RHEM.2.[10. By good works.] Here we ſee, that Gods eternall predeſtination and election conſiſteth with good works: yea that the certaintie and effect thereof is procured by mans free will and good works, and that our well doing is a meane for vs to attaine to the effect of Gods predeſtination, that is, to life euerlaſting, and therefore it is a deſperate folly and a great ſigne of reprobate perſons, to ſay, If I be predeſtinate, do what I will, I ſhall be ſaued. Nay, the Apoſtle ſaith, If thou hope to be one of the predeſtinate (for know it thou canſt not) do well, that thou maiſt be the more aſſured to attaine to that thou hopeſt, or, make it ſure by good workes. The Proteſtants in ſuch cauſes not much liking theſe words, by good works, though the Latine haue it vniuerſally, and ſome Greeke copies alſo, as BEZA confeſſeth, leaue them out in their tranſlations, by their wonted pollicy.

CARTVV 2. [10. By good workes.] It is true that Election and Predeſtination do conſiſt with good workes, but not of good workes. Alſo, that by good workes the certainty of Election is procured, is not vntrue; If firſt it be vnderſtood of the certaintie in us, and of our knowledge, not in God, nor in the decree it ſelfe, which dependeth of the good pleaſure of God, as themſelues haue before confeſſed. Secondly, if this certainty in vs be not aſcribed either alone, or principally to them, which belongeth to the Spirit of Adoption teſtifying to our ſpirit that we are the children of God: but good workes be taken for more inferiour, and yet faithfull witneſſes of the certainty of our election and predeſtination. Free will and good workes in the naughtie race of Adam are like clay and Iron, which cannot cleaue together: neither can this Popiſh glue hold them one to the other, that the Holy Ghoſt exhortethmen to good workes, as that which is of Ariſtotles temper, and not of the Spirit of God, who exhorting that men ſhould worke their owne ſaluation with feare and trembling, addeth forthwith, that it is God which of his meere good will worketh both will and deed. That you ſay no man can know his election (beſides the falſhood of it when and whereſoever it is ſpoken) it is at this time, and in this place, moſt abſurd, where both by your owne tranſlation and Annotation alſo, you confeſſe a certainty of election by good workes. Which if it be a poynt of madneſſe to vnderſtand it of God: it is evident that this certainty of their election may be in the faithfull themſelues, That we leaue out good workes, which is in the Latine, and ſome Greeke coppyes by wonted pollicy, is a very quarrell, ſeeing we both grant that to be the lence, and haue herein followed the Greeke coppies, which (two excepted) with full conſent read as wee.

Phil. 2. 12. 13.

Verſe. 15. And I will doe my diligence, you to haue often ! after my deceaſe alſo, that you may keepe a memory of theſe things.

RHEM.3.[15. After my deceaſe alſo.] Theſe words though they may be eaſily altered by conſtruction into diuers ſenſes not vntrue, yet the correſpondence of the ſentence going before and following giue moſt plaine this meaning, that, as during his life he would not omit to put them in memory of the things he taught them, ſo after his death (which he knew ſhould be ſhortly) he would not faile faile to endeuour that they might bee mindfull of the ſame. Signifying that his care ouer them ſhould not ceaſe by death, and that by his interceſſion before God after his departure, he would do the ſame thing for them, that he did before in his life by teaching and preaching. This is the ſenſe that the * Greeke Schollers ſpeake of, and this is moſt proper to the text, and conſonant to the old vſe of this Apoſtle and other Apoſtolike Saincts and Fathers of the primitiue Church.

The heretikes (according to their cuſtom) exclude this ſenſe altogether by their falſe tranſlation.

S. Clement in his Epiſtle to S. Iames our Lords brother, witneſſeth that S. Peter encouraging him to take after his deceaſe the charge of the Apoſtolike Romane See, promiſed that after his departure he would not ceaſe to pray for him and his flocke, thereby to eaſe him of his Paſtorall burden. To. 1. Concil ep. 1. S. Clem. in initio. And S. Leo the Great one of his ſucceſſours in the ſaid See, often attributeth the good adminiſtration and gouernment thereof to S. Peters prayers and aſſiſtance: namely in theſe goodly words. Ser. 3. in anniuerſ. die aſſump. ad Pontif. We are much bound (ſaith he) to giue thankes to our Lord and Redeemer Ieſus Chriſt, that hath giuen ſo great power to him whom hee made the Prince of the whole Church: that if in our time alſo any thing be done well and be rightly ordered by vs, it is to be imputed to his works & his gouernment, to whom it was ſaid, And thou being conuerted, confirme thy brethren: and to whom our Lord after his reſurrection ſaid thriſe, Feed my ſheep. Which now alſo without doubt the godly Paſtor doth execute, confirming vs with his exhortation, and not ceaſing to pray for vs, that wee be ouercome with no tentations. &c.

Oecum. in hunc locum Gagn.

S. Peters Paſtorall care & and proſecution of the Church after his death.

Luk. 22. Ioh. 21.

Yea it was a common thing in the Primitiue Church among the ancient Chriſtians and alwayes ſince among the faithfull, to make couenant in their life time, that whether of them went to heauen before the other, he ſhould pray for his friend and fellow yet aliue. See the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory of the holy Virgin and Martyr Potamiana, promiſing at the houre of her Martyrdome, that after death ſhe would procure mercie of God to Baſilides one of the ſouldiers that led her to execution, and ſo ſhe did. Euſeb. li. 6. c. 4. Alſo S. Cyprian ep. 57. in fine. Let vs, (ſaith he) pray mutually one for an other, and whether of vs two ſhall by Gods clemencie be firſt called for, let his lone continue, and his prayer not ceaſe for his brethren and ſiſters in the world. So ſaid this holy Martyr at that time when Chriſtians were ſo farre from Caluiniſme (which abhorreth the prayers of Saincts and praying to them) that to be ſure, they bargained before hand to haue the Martyrs and other Saincts to pray for them. The ſame S. Cyprian alſo in his booke De diſciplina & habitu virginum in fine, after a godly exhortation made to the holy Virgins or Nonnes in his time, ſpeaking thus vnto them: Tantum tunc mementote noſtri, cum incipiet in vobis virginitas honorari, that is, Onely then haue vs in remembrance, when your virginitie ſhall begin to be honoured that is, after their departure. Where he inſinuateth the vſe of the Catholike Church in keeping the feſtiuall dayes and other dueties toward the holy virgins in heauen. S. Hierome alſo in the ſame manner ſpeaketh to Heliodorus, ſaying, that when he is once in heauen, then hee will pray for him that exhorted and incited him to the bleſſed ſtate of the Monaſticall life. Ep. 1. c. 2.

Feaſts of holy Virgins.

And ſo doth hee ſpeak to the vertuous matron Paula after her death, deſiring her to pray for him in his old age, affirming that ſhee ſhall the more eaſily obtaine, the neerer ſhe is now ioyned to Chriſt in heauen. in Epitaph. Paulæ in fine. It were too long to report, how S. Auguſtine deſireth to be holpen by S. Cyprians prayers then and long before a Sainct in heauen) to the vnderſtanding of the truth concerning the peace and regiment of the Church. li. 5. de Bapt. cont. Donatiſtas c. 17. And in another place the ſame holy Doctor alleageth the ſaid S. Cyprian ſaying, that great numbers of our parents, brethren, children, friends, and other, expect vs in great ſolicitude and carefulneſſe of our ſaluation, being ſure of their own. Lib. 1. de prædeſt. Sanctorum c. 14. S. Gregorie Nazianzene in his orations of the praiſe of S. Cyprian in fine. and of S. Baſil alſo in fine. declareth how they pray for the people, which two Saints he there inuocateth, as all the ancient Fathers did, both generally all Saints, and (as occaſion ſerued) particularly the ſpeciall Patrones. Among the reſt ſee how holy Ephrem (in orat. de laud. S. Deipara.) prayed to our B. Lady with the ſame termes of Aduocate, Hope, Reconciliatrix, that the faithfull yet vſe, and the Proteſtants cannot abide S. Baſil hom de 40. Martyribus in fine. S. Athanaſius Ser. in Euang. de S. Deipara in fine S. Hilarie in Pſal. 124. S. Chryſoſtome hom. 66. ad po. Antiochenum in fine. Theodorete de curat. Græcorum affectuum lib. 8. in fine. Finally all the Fathers are full of theſe things: who better knew the meaning of the Scripture and the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, then theſe new interpreters doe.

Inuocation of Saints.

CAR TVV. 3. [15 After my deceaſe alſo.] The doctrine of prayer of and for the dead, muſt needs be caryon doctrine that hath ſuch caryon proofe brought for it: For the Ieſuites notwithſtanding they confeſſe that this verſe yeelds an other meaning, yet ſay that the moſt correſpondent ſenſe with that before and after, and moſt conſonant to the old vſe of this Apoſtle, and other Apoſtolick Saints and Fathers of the primitiue Church, is this, that Peter would not faile after his death to endeuour that they might be mindefull of the doctrine that hee had taught them in his life.

Cauſam.

But note firſt of all, that (toyling themſelues and their Readers with proofe out of the writings of Fathers for the correſpondence of this ſenſe with the ſentences before and after, or of the conſent of other Apoſtolike Saints, wherein lyeth the weight of their proofe) vnleſſe they meane Clements Epiſtle (whereof their own men are now aſhamed) they haue not one ſyllable. And why is their ſilence ſo much here which babble ſo much there, but that neither this Apoſtle nor any other in their writings affoord them ſo much as a colour to wrangle with? yea giueth the deadly ſtoak to this Ieſuiticall frenſie. And firſt for correſpondence with that before, Peter declaring the cauſe of his great and diligent care of writing to them of theſe things, aſſigneth it to be, for that his death was at hand: which reaſon for his diligence is none at all, if he were able as well to bring them to remembrance of thoſe things after his death, as hee did when hee liued with them in the fleſh: whereas Peters meaning is plaine, that hee will ſo dilligently and throughly inſtruct them while he liueth, and leaue ſuch a deep impreſſion of this doctrine in them, that his ceaſing in death (as it were in the place of ſilence) ſhall not be able to weare out the print and dint of doctrine that hee had by often repetition in his life time ſetled in them, but that then alſo they might call to mind that which they haue learned of him. And this is that our Saviour Chriſt ſaith of the Miniſtery of all the Apoſtles, that hee had choſen them, that they might go and bring forth fruit, and their fruit might remaine for ever.

Ioh 15.16. Which as it is underſtood moſt eſpecially of the Apoſtles and Prophets; ſo in ſome meaſure it agreeth unto all godly and faithfull Miniſters of the Word, whoſe labours in the Goſpell die not with them, but ſometimes, and in ſome men, then eſpecially beginneth to ſprout and take life, when the Teachers are laid in graue. Again when he ſaith, that he will endevour now and then, that they may after his departure make mention of that doctrine he had taught them: by the word now and then, hee ſufficiently ſignifieth that hee underſtood this of his endevour in this life; ſeeing either the action of the Interceſſion of Saints (if it be any in the life to come) is continuall (as of them that cannot faint or be weary) or at the leaſt, it is not at the Saints, but at the Lords appointment, when and how often they ſhall do it.

Touching the correſpondence of the Ieſuites Expoſition with the ſentence following, it is the ſame which one ſand hath with another. For what coherence is there, that I will after my death not faile to bring to your mindes the doctrine I taught you when I was aliue, becauſe I haue taught you nothing but that which is ſure, and which my ſelfe am an eye-witneſſe and eare-witneſſe of. And if there be any coherence, yet is it not ſo great as with this, that therefore he will be diligent often to admoniſh them while he liveth, that after his death they may keepe a good remembrance of it, foraſmuch as the things he hath taught are of that credit as are worthy both of his often repetition, and of their perpetuall remembrance, which agreeth with that of the Apoſtle to Timothy, wherein he exhorteth him

2.Tim. 3. 14. to abide in the doctrine which he had receiued, becauſe he knew of whom he had learned it. And notwithſtanding that the Greeke Scholiaſt ſay, that ſome interpreted this place as do the Ieſuites: yet it is an evident token as well of their impudencie as of their extreme beggery, to alledge his authority, who both branded that expoſition as unſound, and affirmeth this which we haue alledged to be the ſimple and true expoſition of the place.

Now touching the teſtimonies of the Fathers, they are almoſt all to proue that the Saints departed pray for us: which albeit it be untrue, yet it concludeth not our queſtion; becauſe it followeth not, that becauſe they open their mouthes to ſpeake unto God for us, therefore we ſhould open our mouthes to ſpeake unto them; nor thus, that becauſe the Lord can heare them being preſent, therefore they can heare us being ſo farre abſent. And notwithſtanding there be found ſome ſentences among the Fathers carrying ſome ſtrong ſent of their iudgement for Inuocation of the departed Saints, yet is there nothing found in the moſt ancient (as in Iuſtin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, or others for the ſpace of two hundred yeares after Chriſt) either for their prayers for us, and much leſſe for ours unto them, but the cleane contrary. For Tertullian affirmeth, that the Church in his time prayed to God alone. And Irenæus (according to the Apoſtle) noteth it for an hereſie of his time, that men called upon Angels. And in another place he ſaith, that the Church through the world receiuing diuers graces of God, doth it wholy in the name of Chriſt: not doing any thing by inuocation of Angels, but directing her prayers purely and manifeſtly unto the Lord that doth all, and in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; whereas unto the heretickes, calling upon falſe and Imaginary Saints or Angels, Irenæus (if he had been of the Ieſuites iudgement) would haue anſwered, that the Church calleth upon the true Saints and holy Angels; and not (as he did) that it calleth upon God in Ieſus Chriſt. It is true, that afterwards they began to haue an opinion of the prayers of the departed Saints for us, as appeareth by Cyprian and others: for as for Leos teſtimonie (it being blaſphemous in giving unto Peter the honour of working all things well, which is proper unto Gods moſt holy Spirit, and conſequently making the holy Ghoſt the ſpirit of Peter, as he is the Spirit of the Father and of the Sonne) it is unworthy once to be anſwered. Euſebius alſo, lib. 6. cap. 4. albeit he wrote the ſtory of Boſilides converted by a maidens prayers after her death; yet he delivereth it as a thing he had heard but not knowne: and in the ſhutting of it up ſhaketh the credit of it in ſaying Thoſe things might be ſo. So doth Nazianzen, for affirming of his father, that he profited more by his prayers after death, then by his doctrine in his life time: he addeth in way of correction, as I am perſwaded: and, if it be not a voyd ſpeech. Howbeit, when this opinion got footing in the Church, the other (of our prayers unto them) ſtood yet without the Church doore. Whereunto it maketh nothing that Auguſtine writeth, lib. 5. de bap. contra Donat. for there is ſet out onely that he had a deſire to be prayed for by Cyprian, but of any prayer that he directed or made unto Cyprian, there is not a word. His other place, lib. de Predeſt. Sanct. c. 14. is utterly idle, as that which nothing toucheth the queſtion: for he ſaith onely, that our friends departed carefully wait for our ſalvation. Nazianzen and Baſil (in their Odes made in the praiſe of excellent perſonages) doe indeed call upon them which were dead, but the ſame was Rhetorically done, and by a figure, wherby for more paſſioned moving the auditory) hearing and knowledge is given to ſuch as haue it not: which appeareth evidently by that he ſaith to his auditorie of Baſil (then departed) I would haue you looke upon him, and be affected in minde as if he ſaw or were ſeene of you. Likewiſe in another place he ſaith: Heare thou alſo, O Conſtantines ſonle if yet there be any ſence. And againe, I am compelled to ſpeake unto him as if he were preſent and heard me. The Sermon of Athanaſius de veſpera is knowne to be baſe borne, and it is apparant that Athanaſius (making it a proofe of the Divinitie of Chriſt, that he is prayed unto) doth thereby condemne all praying to Saints that are departed. It is likewiſe confeſſed, that Chryſoſtomes Sermons ad populum Antioch. are much embaſed, and cannot be denied but that Chryſoſtome did wholy miſlike the invocation of Saints when he ſaith, That we are much ſafer by our owne prayers then by any others, ſo that we be watchfull in minde. The like alſo is to be ſaid of Theodoret de curat. Græcorum, lib. 8. conſidering that Nicephorus rekoning up his workes, maketh no mention of this booke, but ſpecially his iudgement appearing in his Commentaries upon Paules Epiſtles, where he doth (as hath been ſhewed) evidently condemne the prayers to Angels, and conſequently much more unto Saints. Beſides that, reſembling the Chriſtian Religion in divers poynts unto the Pagans ſuperſtitions, and drawing proofes for the true from the conformitie of the falſe unto it, the rather to induce the idolatrous nations to a liking of the Goſpell: it is evident upon what mooriſh and fenny ground that aſſertion ſtandeth: whereas his contrary iudgement of not praying to Angels is ſetled upon the rock of the Apoſtolicke authoritie.

Hylarius Pſal. 124. not contenting himſelfe with the ſimplicitie of the word, doth in the word Mountaine, climbe up higher then the ſence of the Prophet will beare him. And by Mountaine noting the aid and guard of the bleſſed ſpirits, after that he had firſt aſcribed ſome part of it to the Apoſtles, Prophets, and Patriarkes, he correcteth himſelfe and ſaith, that it rather agreeth unto the Angels, which with their guard hedge the Church round about: whereas he carrieth the invocation unto Chriſt upon the ſame reaſon that Athanaſius did, for that being God, he is preſent every where, and heareth us: but maketh no mention of the invocation of Saints, nor of the Angels themſelues to whom notwithſtanding he had referred the Churches guard, taken (by a correction of himſelfe) from the Saints which are departed. There remaineth Ephrem onely that giveth any plaine or cleere teſtimony for prayer unto Saints, who hauing ſundred himſelfe as well from the iudgement as from the company of godly learned men, and being as wilde and unſociable in his opinion as he was in his converſation, may well be ſuffered to walke his deſert alone by himſelfe.

Verſe. 20 Vnderſtanding this firſt that no propheſie of Scripture is made by † private interpretation.

RHEM. 4. [20. Priuate.] The Scriptures cannot be rightly expounded of euery priuate ſpirit or phantaſie of the vulgar reader: but by the ſame ſpirit wherewith they were written, which is reſident in the Church. Private phantaſticall interpretations.

CARTVV. 4. [20 Private.] It is true that the Scriptures cannot bee expounded of every private ſpirit, nor (which is more) of any private ſpirit; no nor yet of all private ſpirits together; but onely of thoſe which are inſpired of God, namely, the Prophets and Apoſtles, which are here oppoſed unto private interpretation. And therefore it is evident that the expoſition of the Scripture ought not to be fetched from Eccleſiaſticall either Fathers or Councels, which ſpeak not by inſpiration, but from the Scriptures themſelues, whereof look before, in the anſwer to certaine ragges, caſt in after their Preface.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 2 AND many ‡ ſhall follow their rioteouſneſſes, by whom the way of truth ſhall be blaſphemed.

RHEM. 1. [2. Many ſhall follow.] Heretikes (of whom he prophecieth here) do gaine ſcholers, by preaching liberty, and by their own licentious life, which is ſpecially ioyned to the hereſie of theſe dayes.

Verſe. 3. And in avarice ſhall they with feigned words make Marchandiſe of you, unto whom the iudgement now long ſince ceaſeth not, and their perdition ſlumbereth not.

RHEM. 2. [‡. With feined words.] All the ſweet words of heretickes, ſpeaking much of the word of the Lord, the Goſpell, IESVS, CHRIST &c. are but termes of art to bie and ſell poore mens ſoules.

Verſe. 19. ‡Promiſing them liberty, whereas themſelues are the ſlaues of corruption, for wherewith a man is overcome: of that he is the ſlaue alſo.

RHEM. 3. [19. Promiſing them libertie.] Who euer promiſed more libertie to their followers then Luther, Caluin, and the like, taking away penance, faſting, continencie or chaſtitie, keeping of vowes, neceſſitie of good works (becauſe faith doeth all) obedience to Eccleſiaſticall paſtors and Councels, and ſuch like.

CARTVV. 3. [9 Promiſing them liberty.] It had been hard for Paul to haue more liuely pourtrayed out the Popiſh Clergie, if he had lived in their time, then hee hath done ſitting in this watch tower of Propheſie: For as neither Luther nor Calvin condemn Penance, Faſting, Continencie, Chaſtitie, Vowes, Obedience to Paſtors and Councels, but onely their unlawfull ones, or the abuſe of thoſe that are lawfull: ſo it is evident that in Popery there are Diſpenſations, Qualifications, Pardons and Indulgenſes for all manner of villanies not onely already done, but even for ſuch as are to be done, provided that he do ſomewhat for the underſetting and further advancing of that peſtilent chaire. And can there be ſhewed any ſect in the world more deſpiſing Authority, to the treading of the higheſt top and dignity thereof under their filthy feete then it? Can any ſect be (I will not ſay matched) but ſo much as compared with them in filthy covetouſneſſe, which make ſale of all whatſoever, of Word, of Sacraments, of Prayers, not ſparing that which they beare the world in hand, to be God himſelfe? And as for ſtrange fleſh and uncleaneſſe, beſides that ſingle fornication raigneth among them with banner diſplayed, there are not wanting of the chiefeſt of them that ſhame not at the iuſtification of the monſtrous ſinne of buggerie: So that heerein Sodome in age the elder, in filthineſſe and out-rage of luſt is become the yonger ſiſter. And leſt there ſhould be any feature in the viſages of thoſe that Peter here ſpeaketh of, which ſhould not appeare fully in theſe men, mark that it is all done in hipocriſie under the cloak of humility, wilfull Poverty, continency and ſuch like. Look before on Math. 8. 14.

CHAP. III.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 16 AS also in all Epistles, speaking in them of these things, in the which are certaine things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable deprave, as also the rest of the Scriptures to their own perdition.

The heretical proud spirit of private interpretation of Scriptures.

RHEM. 1. [16. Certaine things hard.] This is a plaine text to conuince the Protestants, who as all heretikes lightly do and did from the beginning) say the Scriptures be easie to vnderstand, and therefore may be not onely read falsely, but also expounded boldly of all the people, as well vnlearned as learned: and consequently euery one by himselfe and his priuate spirit without respect of the expositions of the learned fathers, or expectation of the Churches, their Pastors and Prelates iudgement, may determine and make choise of such sense as himselfe liketh or thinketh agreeable. For this is partly their saying, partly the necessary sequele of their foolish opinion, which admitteth nothing but the bare Scriptures. And Luther said that the Scriptures were more plaine then all the fathers commentaries: and so all to bee superfluous but the Bible. Præfat. assert. art. damnat.

The Scriptures be hard, namely S. Paules Epistles, specially where he speaketh of iustification by faith.

Against all which Diuelish and seditious arrogancie, tending to make the people esteeme themselues learned or sufficient without their Pastors and spirituall rulers helpe, to guide themselues in all matters of doctrine and doubts in religion, the holy Apostle here telleth and forewarneth the faithful that the Scriptures be full of difficultie, and specially S. Pauls epistles of all other parts of holy writ, and that ignorant men and vnstable or phantasticall fellowes puffed to and fro with euery blast of doctrine and heresie, abuse, peruert, and misconster them to their own damnation. And S. Augustine saith, that the speciall difficultie in S. Pauls epistle, which ignorant and euill men doe so pervert and which S. Peter meaneth, is his hard speach and much commendation of that faith which he saith doth iustifie, which the ignorant euen from the Apostles time, and much more now, haue and do so misconster as though he had meant that onely faith without good works could iustifie or saue a man. Against which wicked collection and abuse of S. Pauls words, the said father saith, all these Canonical or Catholike epistles were written.

The Protestants idle distinction between difficultie in the Epistles, and difficulty in the things.

But the Heretickes here to shift of the matter, and to creepe out after their fashion, answer, that S. Peter saith not S. Pauls epistles be hard, but that many things in them are hard. Which may be to the Catholikes an example of their sophistical euasion from the euidence of Gods word. As though it were not all one to say, Such an author or writer is hard: and There be many things in that writer hard to be vnderstood. For, whether it be that the argument or matter be high and past vulgar capacitie, as that of predestination, reprobation, vocation of the Gentiles, and iustifying faith: or whether his manner of stile and writing be obscure, all proue that his epistles be hard, and other Scriptures also: because S. Peter here affirmeth that by reason of the difficulties in them, whether in the style or in depth of the matter, the ignorant & vnstable (such as Heretikes be) do peruert his writings, as also other Scriptures, to their own damnation. Whereby it is plaine that it is a very dangerous thing for such as be ignorant, or for wild witted fellowes, to read the Scriptures. For such conditioned men be they that become Heretikes, and through ignorance, pride, and priuate phantasie, meeting with hard places of S. Pauls epistles or other Scriptures, breed Heresies.

The Greeke copies haue both, some ἐν αἷς, in which things: some ἐν αἷς, in which Epistles.

Not onely the matter, but the stile of the Scriptures is hard.

Psal. 118. Act. 8. Luc. 24. 45

And that not only the things treated of in the holy Scriptures but also that the very maner of writing and enditing thereof, is high and hard, and purposely by Gods prouidence appointed to be written in such sort, see S. Augustine li. 2. de Doct. Christ. c. 6. and ep. 119. S. Ambrose ep. 44. in principio. S. Hierome to Paulinus ep. 103. c. 5. 6. 7. who also (ep. 65. c. 1.) saith that in his old age when he should rather haue taught then be taught, he went as far as Alexandria only to heare Didymus, and to haue his helpe for the vnderstanding of the Scriptures, and confesseth with great thanks to the said Didymus, that he learned of him that which before he knew not. Dauid saith, Giue mee vnderstanding and I will search thy law. The Eunuch in the Acts said, How can I vnderstand without an interpreter? The Apostles, till Christ opened their sense to vnderstand the Scriptures could not vnderstand them. The holy Doctors by continuall study, watching, fasting, and praying, had much a do to vnderstand them: that great clerke S. Augustine confessing in the foresaid epistle 119. c. 21. that there were many moe things that he vnderstood not, then that he vnderstood, The Heretikes say the fathers did commonly erre, and how could such great wise learned men bee deceiued in reading and expounding the Scriptures if they were not hard? and if they were hard to them, how are they easie to these new Masters the Heretikes? finally, why doe they write so many new gloses, scholies, commentaries, as a cart cannot carry? Why do Luther, Zuinglius, Caluin, and their companions agree no better vpon the interpretation of the Scriptures, if they be not hard? whereat stumbled all the old heretikes and the new, Arius, Macedonius, Vigilantius, Nestorius, Eutyches, Berengarius, Wickleffe, Protestants Puritans, Anabaptists, and the rest, but at the hardnes of the Scriptures? They be hard then to vnderstand, and Heretikes peruert them to their own damnation.

CARTVV. 1. [16 Certaine things hard.] These words of the Iesuites are as the crackling of thornes under a pot, which make a ratling noise able to make children startle, but bring small warmth to the cause they pretend to heate. And whereas they will haue their schollers, out of our answer to this place, to take an example of our evasion from the evidence of Gods word: we refuse them not even heere, where they think they haue the hill, and desire to haue no more credit either in this, or any other cause between us, then it shall appeare, that as (as if he were) a most dull and heavie

Asse

Asse, they do heere most intollerably ride their simple Reader: first therefore we will lay down our answer unto this place, that the Reader may understand how unfaithfull the Iesuites be in concealing it from him. Secondly, their reply unto that part of our answer which they esteemed they might without danger offer unto their Readers taste; that he may see how unwise and how forsaken of all learning they be in their uncleanly carriage of their foule shifts. And touching the first, unto the Papists obiecting out of this place, the hardnesse of the Scriptures, thereby to barre the people from reading them; wee answer, that Peter restraineth the hardnesse of Pauls writings to that point himselfe presently wrote of, touching the end of the world, and that therefore it is unreasonable that for one hard point in the Epistles the people should be debarred the reading of all the rest. Secondly, that even in that point hee affirmeth that some things onely are hard, and not all: for which cause it is unmeete that they should utterly be shut out from reading of that point, seeing that even in it there are some things (by his confession) easie. Thirdly, for that the understanding of the Scriptures dependeth not principally of the sharpnes of mens wits or of their learning, but of the spirit of God which is given to the simple that humbly seek for it by prayer: so that although the whole Scripture were hard to be understood, yet the same is no good cause to bereaue the people of God from reading of his Word: especially when the hardnesse of these places is not heere assigned to be the cause of heresie and errour, seeing it is said that those he speaketh of abuse the whole body of the Scripture, as well the easie places as the hard. Fourthly, for that Peter assigning the true cause of errour and abuse of the Scripture, to be the unstability and unlearnednesse of such as deale with them; cannot thereby be understood to speake that of the body of the Church and of the people: for first, the Apostle writing to the Churches, and to the basest in the Churches, writeth as to those that haue knowledge of the Law, as those which are able to discerne between truth and falshood. Secondly, seeing every one which heareth the Word and doth it, is like to a house grounded upon a rock which cannot be shaken with wind or weather; the Church and people of God being such, cannot for this charge and challenge of unstableness be driven from reading of the Scripture; Where you (under colour of this place holding your people from reading of them) do cast upon them all the reproaches of wilde wittednesse, ignorance, and unstableness; which argueth that either your people are not the true Church, or you not the true Teachers; forasmuch as Peter writing to all the faithfull scattered here and there in divers quarters, ascribeth unto them all a stableness from which he exhorteth them that they fall not away.

Rom.7.1. 1.Cor.10. 15. Math.7.24 25. Vers.17.

Now they haue heard our answer, let vs see what they say, wherein let the reader first obserue, how, (besides all their treacherous concealment,) they first deale guilefully with that they snatch at and then sottishly in avoydance of it. They say that we answer that Peter saith not that Pauls Epistles be hard but that many things in them are hard, who answereth so verily he were vnworthy to handle so good a cause, that would disadvantage it so much as vpon that, that Peter saith some things are hard in Pauls Epistles, would yeeld forth-with that many things are hard in them, at the least, it is a small point of sophisticall euasion to grant more to the aduersarie then he can winne. This therefore is unliker to be our answer but is likely to be framed by your selues, which thus thought to make the knot easie that you might fit your skill and cunning to the vndoing of it. But admit this bee our answer, what is your reply? As though it were not all one to say, such a writer is hard, and there be many things in that writer hard to be understood? As though it were? For notwithstanding that many things in Pauls Epistles were hard: yet if there be more easie then hard, it is meet that the Epistle be called easie, of the greater part: otherwise, the Iesuits with this sophistrie may prooue that the Morian is white because he hath many white teeth: whereas though his feet and hands were white, he might yet truly and worthily of the greater part of his body be called black. Aug. de fid. & op. c. 14. is fallished for notwithstanding he place some of the obscurity here spoken of in the doctrine of faith iustifying; yet is it euident by diuers speaches in the same places that he assigneth the peruerting of Paul's meaning not in that it is affirmed that faith only iustifieth, but in that men securely esteemed it sufficient to beleeue although they neglected to do good works. Yea, in the same place he doth euidently ouerthrow the popish doctrine of Iustification by works, by making the works an inseparable effect of faith, and not a fellow cause with faith of the Iustificatson we haue in Christ. As touching that faith iustifieth without the works of the Law, Paul doth not (saith he) vnderstand euery kind of faith wherewith men beleeueth in God, but defineth that wholesome and true Gospelling faith whose workes proceede from Charitie: where the Papists affirme both that good works may bee seuered from the faith of Gods children and make them a ioynt cause with it of their saluation. From the hardnesse of the Scripture in regard of the matter they come to their difficultie in respect of the manner of writing, whereunto they alleage Psal.119. Giue me understanding, & I will search thy Law, Act. 8. of the Eunuch, and Luk.24.45. Also the diuers expositions of old and new writers which conta ne no manner of proofe of difficultie in the Manner more then in the Matter. Againe, there is no thing in some of them that noteth more difficultie in one place of Scripture then in an other: whereas this place of Peter supposeth the hardnesse of the scripture not to be generall but in certaine places onely. And for the first place, it is directly against them: for, teaching that it is the gift of Gods holy spirit obtained by prayer to vnderstand the Scripture, the spirit through prayer being as well obtained of the simple as of the learned sort, yea rather of them then of the others: it followeth that the reading of them belongeth to the simple as well as vnto the learned.

Mat 7. 8. Act.2. 17. 18. Mat. 11.25. 25. Iam.2.5.

The like answer serueth for the place of Luc.24.13. for by that abuse of the place you may wring the reading of the Scriptures from all men euen ministers of the word commanded to attend the reading of them: seeing those of whom you say that they vnderstood not the Scriptures were Ministers of the word, & that in the highest & most excellent degree of Ministery in the world, which was the Apostleship: where you ought to vnderstand that the cause of want of vnderstanding then being this for that the spirit of God was not giuen because Christ was not glorified, can haue now no place, when Christ hauing entred into his glorie, hath in great largesse (as it were) opening the windows of heauen rained rained down the ſweet ſhowers of knowledge of himſelfe. Beſides that, in ſaying they vnderſtood not the Scriptures concerning the ſuffering and glory of Chriſt? it muſt needs be vnderſtood comparatiuely, that they did not cleerely, particularly, and ſufficiently know them: for ſeeing the Scripture teſtifieth that they beleeued in Chriſt, and euen in this place that they were ſlow to beleeue: there being no other ground of faith then the Scriptures, it could not be but that they had ſome vnderſtanding of Chriſt, for the place of the Acts ſee the anſwer vnto the Annotation vpon that place. Beſides that the caſe is far other with the members of the Church now, which know and acknowledge Chriſt of whom are, and to whom tendeth the whole courſe of the Scriptures, and of the Eunuch that yet had not atchieued any knowledge of Chriſt: ſo that it followeth not, that the faithfull attaine no ſound knowledge in reading the Scriptures becauſe the Eunuch could not; And do you not ſee how the Lord favoureth and heartneth on this Eunuch in reading, by ſending him an Inſtructor to ſupply his want: where (by your iudgement) he was rather to haue been given up to ſome hereſie, or at the leaſt checked for his mallepart and ſaucie adventure to reade the holy Scriptures. And how is it that the Ieſuites are ſo ſtone-blinde as not to ſee that the Eunuch himſelfe which knew well, and profeſſed that hee could not underſtand the Scripture without an Interpreter, did notwithſtanding occupie himſelfe in reading of them? To what end? if (as the Ieſuites ſay) hee ſhould thereby fall into hereſies, or ſhould not alſo even reape ſome fruite thereby. Wherefore the words of the Eunuch, that the Scriptures cannot be vnderſtood without an Interpreter, haue not more ſtrength to driue the people from reading, then his act and practiſe hath to the contrary, euen then and in the ſame houre when he gaue this right vnto the Preaching of the Word, as if without it the Scriptures could not be vnderſtood.

Their reaſon to proue the hardneſſe of the Scripture becauſe of the learned Fathers whom we affirme to haue been deceiued in the expoſition of them, and our own interpretations repugnant one with another, is nothing to the purpoſe for that hardneſſe of the Scriptures which we haue in queſtion. For when we affirme the Scriptures to be eaſie to be vnderſtood of the common people in reading them, wee meane that eaſineſſe whereby the people (having a lawfull Miniſterie among them) returne not empty and without fruite from reading of them, albeit they be not able cleerely and ſufficiently to vnderſtand them: we meane, that in reading they may haue ſome refreſhing of their ſoules although they can haue no full and iuſt repaſte; that they may heere and there gleane ſome profitable inſtruction, albeit they cannot gather (as in the Preaching of the Word) their armes full. And for an exact knowledge of all the myſteries laid up in the treaſury of the Scriptures, or a preciſe attainement of vnderſtanding in every article and circumſtance in the ſame, whereby a man ſhould be able either to let downe the bucket of his vnderſtanding to the bottom and depth; or reach vp the engine of his wit to the top and height of them: it is a thing which we aſcribe to none but vnto the men of God, which were inſpired by him. When therefore the Church by no interpretation, or (as Paul calleth it) propheſie; how inſtructed ſoever, is able to compaſſe a perfect vnderſtanding of all things in the Scriptures; it is a meere ſophiſtication from the impoſſibility of attaining to all, to conclude againſt the profitable learning of ſomewhat in the reading of them. For if this ſhould diſcourage the people from reading, it ought alſo to diſcourage the Miniſters from interpreting; conſidering that as all Readers may be deceiued in reading, ſo all Prophets may be deceiued in Propheſying or interpreting. It is vnworthy therefore of any anſwer that they aſcribe it as a ſaying proper vnto vs that the learned Fathers were deceiued in expounding, ſeeing they themſelues do and muſt confeſſe the ſame: otherwiſe, how commeth it to paſſe that both the Fathers haue ſo repugnant expoſitions of the Scripture, and that the Papiſts do ſo oft forſake the interpretations that are given by the moſt learned of them. Howbeit, it is euident what a ſhameleſſe and paſſing ſlander it is, which they haue in their firſt ſection, that we teach partly in ſaying, and partly in neceſſary ſequele, that the Scripture may bee expounded boldly of all the people both learned and vnlearned, without expectation of their Paſtors and Prelates iudgement. For proofe whereof that which is cited out of Luther (Præfat. aſſertio, art. damnat.) doth not onely come ſhort of a proofe, but is impudently fathered of him.

1. Cor. 13. 9 & 14. 3.

There remaine the teſtimonies of the Fathers, which haue never a word to proue the reading of the Scripture hurtfull or dangerous to the people for the hardneſſe of it; and haue divers things whereby this Popiſh ſacrilege of depriving the people of reading the Scriptures vnder colour of hardneſſe is ground to peeces. As that which Auguſtine ſaith in the ſame place where they haue alledged him (de doctr. Chriſt. lib. 2. cap. 6.) where he affirmeth, that the Holy Ghoſt hath tempered the Scriptures moſt excellently, and wholeſomely in providing by plaine ſpeaches againſt famine, and by darke againſt loathſomneſſe: for that there is, in a manner, nothing which is drawn from the obſcure places, which is not otherwhere to be found to be moſt plainly ſpoken. To the ſame effect ſpeaketh Ambroſe, that the Scripture is not onely a Sea, but a Flood and a Fountaine moſt cleare, in the ſame ſenſe wherein another ſaith, that it is a water wherein a lambe may wade, and an Elephant may ſwimme, as is before alledged (in the anſwer to their Preface) where this queſtion is handled more at large. And therefore it is a meere trifling of the time to ſpeake of Ieromes going to Dydimus for further advancement in knowledge of the truth, as if that were the queſtion which hath no reſemblance nor conformity with it.

THE

RHEMIST.

OF S. Iohn was said in the Argument before his Gospell. Now here follow his three Epistles: one to all Catholikes (though * some ancients do call it, Ad Parthos:) the other two being very short, vnto a certaine Lady, and to one Gaius. The effect of all is, to witnesse vnto them the certaintie of the Catholike faith, and to exhort them to continue still in it: also to loue the Catholike Church, and so, neither to become, heretikes, nor Schismatikes, but rather to auoid all such, as the forerunners of Anti-christ, & to remember, that Catholikes need not to go to schole to any such masters hauing at home in the Catholike Church, the doctrine of the holy Ghost himselfe who was giuen to the Church visibly in the beginning, to lead her into all truth, and to continue with her for euer. Therefore he saith, That which you haue heard from the beginning, let it abide in you. Likewise a little after. v.27. and epist.2. ver.6. This is the commandement, that as you haue heard from the beginning, you walke in the same, because many seducers are gone out into the world, and vers.8. and 9.

Higinus ep.1 to.1.Concil. Aug.lib.2. Evang. quæst.q.39.

1.Ioh.2.29

And not onely thus in general, but also in particular he expresseth these points which the heretikes did then call in question. Some were about Christ himselfe, for they denied that IESVS is Christ, that he is the very son of God, that he is incarnate. Ep.1.c.2.v.22. and Ep.2.v.7. And against such it was that he wrote his Gospell also, as hee there signifieth, Ioh.20.v.31. Other points are about our iustification, against onely faith, and for good works, as also S. Aug. noted, whose words were cited before. Hereupon he saith: If we say, we haue societie with God, and walke in darkenesse, we lie. Epist.1.c.1. Againe, Hee that saith he knoweth God, and keepeth not his commandements is a liar. Againe This is the charity of God, that we keepe his commandements, and his commandements are not heauie. Finally, Children let no man seduce you, he that doth iustice, is iust, euen as he is iust. Epist.1.c.3.v.7,8,9. Likewise c.2.v.29. and indeed in all the three Epistles throughout, he doth inculcate good works and keeping the commandements against the heresie of onely faith.

1.Ioh.2.& 5.

CARTVV. That this Epistle written for all Christians, was not written to them all, nor is not in that sence Catholike, looke before upon the note of the Scholiasts title upon the Epistles of Iames, Peter, and Iohn. That it is not written against the doctrine of sole Iustification by faith either in truth or in Augustines iudgement, hath been likewise shewed upon the Argument of Iames Epistles, and in the chapter immediatly gone before. For all the sentences cited to that purpose, proue onely that a man iustified by faith, doth the thing which is iust: but none of them, that the cause of our iustification is in workes. But on the contrary, Iohn declaring that our victory (even his owne as well as other mens) against the world, (that is to say, against all all aduersary power unto our salvation) standeth by faith and not by workes (he be being in his owne person so full of good workes, and so famous for the same) doth vnresistably proue that our saluation, for the cause thereof, standeth onely by faith.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 3 THat which we haue seen and haue heard, we declare unto you, that you also may haue societie with us, and our societie may be with the Father and with his Sonne Iesus Christ.

RHEM.

No ſalvation but in the ſociety of the Church.

RHEM. 1 [3. You haue ſocietie.] S. Iohn ſheweth manifeſtly, that whoſoeuer deſire to be partakers with God, muſt firſt be vnited to the Church ſociety, learne that faith, and receiue thoſe Sacraments, which the Diſciples receiued of the truth it ſelfe, conuerſant with them in fleſh. So ſaith venerable Bede vpon this place. Whereby we ſee there is no ſocietie with God in ſects or ſchiſmes, nor any where but in the vnitie, fellowſhip, and communion of that Church which can proue it ſelfe to diſcend from the Apoſtles.

CART VV. 1. [3. You may haue ſocietie.] This ought to be warily underſtood. True it it is, that we muſt aſſemble our ſelues to the ſocietie of the Church, that by the miniſtery thereof in the preaching of the Goſpell, we beleeving may be made partakers of God, and one with him. But that we be vnited vnto the Church as members (which is properly to be united) before we be firſt united unto God in the faith of the Goſpell, is all one, as if a man would ſay that the body and bulke of a tree ſhould firſt be united to the branch or ever it were one with the roote thereof.

Verſe. 7. But if we walk in the light, as he alſo is in the light: we haue ſocietie one toward another, and | the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt his Sonne ſhall cleanſe us | from all ſinne.

Many means & inſtruments of remitting ſinne, but by the force and merite of Chriſts bloud applyed by them.

RHEM. 2. [7. The bloud of Ieſus.] Whether ſinnes bee remitted by prayers, by faſting, by almes, by faith, by charitie, by ſacrifice, by Sacraments, and by the Prieſts (as the holy Scriptures do plainely attribute remiſſion to euery of theſe) yet none of all theſe do otherwiſe remit, but in the force, by the merite and vertue of Chriſts bloud: theſe being but the appointed meanes and inſtruments by which Chriſt will haue his holy bloud to work effectually in vs, which meanes whoſoeuer contemneth, depriueth himſelfe of the commoditie of Chriſts own bloud, and continueth ſtill in ſinne and vncleanneſſe, vaunt hee himſelfe never ſo much of Chriſts death. Which point let the Proteſtants marke well, and ceaſe to beguile their poore deceiued followers, perſwading them that the Catholikes derogate from Chriſts bloud, or ſeeke remiſſion otherwiſe then by it, for that they vſe humbly the meanes appointed by Chriſt to apply the benefit of his holy bloud vnto them.

CART VV. 2. [7. The bloud of Ieſus.] Out of the place where grow grapes with the wine, whereof our conſciences are comforted and refreſhed, theſe men haue ſtreined deadly poyſon: for in all the light of good workes that any man can walke in whatſoever they be, Iohn ſaith, that (all they notwithſtanding) our ſinnes muſt bee waſhed away by the bloud of Ieſus: whereas the Ieſuites would make us beleeue that his bloud, through our good workes, ſhould purchaſe remiſſion of ſinne. Where alſo it is to be noted, that he ſaith not, that they which walke holily haue the reſidue of their ſinnes purged by the bloud of Chriſt: but that they haue all their ſins purged by the blood of Chriſt, declaring that all the light of good workes that ever ſhined in any perſon (how holy ſoever) is not able to put to flight the ſhadow of one onely ſinne alone.

All remiſſion of ſins is by the Paſſion of Chriſt though by ſecondary meanes alſo.

RHEM. 3. [7. From all ſinne.] From originall and actuall, veniall and mortall, a culpa & pœna, that is, from the fault and the paine due for the ſame V. Bede ſaith, that Chriſts paſſion doth not onely remit in Baptiſme the ſinnes before committed, but all other afterward alſo done by frailty: yet ſo, if we vſe for the remiſſion of them ſuch means as be requiſite and as Chriſt hath appointed, whereof he reckoneth ſome. Bede vpon this place. See S. Auguſtine alſo vpon this place to. 9. and S. Hierom li. 2. con. Pelag. c. 3.

Verſe. 8. If wee ſhall ſay | that we haue no ſin, we ſeduce our ſelues, and the truth is not in us.

Some ſinnes veniall. A man may be truely iuſt, notwithſtanding veniall ſinnes.

RHEM. 4. [8. That we haue no ſinne.] We gather by theſe words and the former, that there be two ſorts of ſinnes: one mortall, excluding us from light and the ſocietie of God: an other veniall, which is found euen in thoſe that walke in the light, and are in the ſocietie of God. Alſo wee note againſt the Pelagians, that we be truly called the ſonnes of God, and ſo iuſt indeed, though we bee not without all ſinnes, euery one of vs, as well iuſt as vniuſt, being taught and bound to confeſſe our offences, and to aske pardon daily of God, by this petition of the Pater noſter. Forgiue vs our debts. Therefore S. Auguſtine li. de natura & grat. c. 36. reckoneth vp all the holy Patriarches, Prophets, and renowmed iuſt perſons to haue been ſinners, euen when they were in grace and iuſtice: excepting alwayes our B. Lady, De qua propter honorem Domini, nullam prorſus, cum de peccatis agitur, habere vo'o quæſtionem, of whom, ſaith he, for the honour of our Lord, when we talke of ſinnes, I will haue no queſtions. And Pelagius asking what ſins Abel and ſuch iuſt men did commit, *S. Auguſtine anſwereth that they might laugh ſometimes immoderately, or ieſt too much, or couet ſomewhat intemperately, or pluck fruite ouer greedely, or in eating take ſomewhat more then afterward was well digeſted, or haue their intention in time of prayer ſomewhat diſtracted, and ſuch like, thus in ſenſe S. Auguſtine. Whereby we may learne which be veniall ſinnes, that conſiſt with true iuſtice, and cannot be alwayes auoided, euen of holy men in this life. In the booke De fide ad Petrum c. 41. are excepted from this common rule of ſinners, the children which be newly baptized and haue not yet vſe of reaſon to ſinne either mortally or venially.

*S. Auguſtine excepteth our B. Lady frõ ſinners. Examples of veniall ſins. * cap. 38. * de dono perſeuerant. c. 2*

CART VV. 3. 4 [7. & 8. From all ſin.] Touching that of Auguſtine of the holy vigins freedome from ſinne. Likewiſe of the diſtinction of mortall and veniall ſinne, it is anſwered before, vpon Mark. 4. 33. Math. 5. 33.

Aug. cont. Iulian pelag. lib. 3. 4. & Enchrid. 66. Mar. 9. 21. Aug. lib. de Civit. Dei 21. 14. & 22, c. 22.

Touching that out of the booke de fide ad Pet. cap. 41. of the exception of children new baptiſed, it is utterly repugnant to Auguſtines iudgement. For ſeeing his reaſons to proue infants to haue ſinne, bee theſe, For that they haue afflictions of the body, by ſickneſſe: of the the minde, by being born fooles and idiots; of the body and minde, by being ſometime poſſeſſed of Divels: it muſt needs follow, that that the ſame things falling either ſeverally, or altegether into children new baptiſed, that they alſo haue ſinne, without the which theſe roddes and ſcourges of ſinne could haue no lighting place in them. Wherefore this ſaying of Auguſtine muſt haue ſome convenient expoſition whereby hee may not fall out with himſelfe, or his reaſons be at variance with his iudgement. Where, (becauſe our construction is alwayes misconstrued) let them heare Augustine expounding himselfe: They are changed into better state, which are effectually baptised; not that they be without infirmity and the naturall corruption. And againe, Baptisme taketh away the gilt and the paine, but taketh not away the infirmity. Neither doth Augustine speake otherwise in this saying of freeing of children baptised from sinne, then some other of antiquity iudged, which therefore deferred their baptisme untill the last houre of death: not that they esteemed old men without originall sin after baptism; but for that they corruptly restrained (as do the Papists) the fruit and effect of baptisme unto the sinnes alone before baptisme: which as (as hath been shewed) sealeth the remission of our sinnes committed in the last houre of death as freshly and effectually as those commited before baptism. Whereby also it appeareth that Augustine (by your iudgement) making the holy virgins case as touching freedome from sin, the same with infants baptised, doth free her onely from the gilt and paine of sinne, and not from the naturall corruption whereunder are shut all the sonnes and daughters of Adam. Aug. in Psal. 118. Lib. 3. cont. duas epist. Pelag. cap. 3.

CHAP. II.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 19. THey went out from us: but ‖ they ‡ were not of us. For if they had been of us, they would surely haue remained with us: but that they may be manifest, that they are not all of us.

RHEM. 1. [19. Were not of vs.] They were of vs for the time, that is, of and in the Church: otherwise they could haue gone out, but they were not of the constant sort, or of the elect and predestinate: for then they had tarried within, or returned before their death.

CARTVV. This is answered in the Annotation upon this verse.

Verse 24. You, that which you haue ‡ heard from the beginning, let it abide in you. If that abide in you which you haue heard from the beginning, you also shall abide in the Sonne and the Father.

RHEM. 2. [24. Heard from the.] Keep that firmely and constantly which you haue heard euen from the beginning, by the mouth of the Apostles: and not that onely which you haue receiued by writing.

Verse 29. If you know that he is iust, know ye that every one also ‡ which doth iustice is borne of him.

RHEM 3. [29. Which doth iustice.] We see it is Apostolicall doctrine, that men may do or work iustice, and that so doing they be iust by their works proceeding of Gods grace, and not by faith or imputation onely.

CARTVV. 3. [29. Which doth iustice.] Iohn in this place, as almost throughout this Epistle, reasoneth from the effect to the cause, making the doing or practising of righteousnesse an effect of this, that we are borne of God: where the Iesuites would make it the cause thereof: this strength of sanctifying themselues, (being of Iohn in the verse before, appropriated to those that are borne of God: and euen in this present verse to those alone that haue hope of the glory which shall be reuealed unto the Sonnes of God) must needs be carried unto the same Authour which maketh them children, and planteth this hope in them, that is, the spirit of regeneration. So that unlesse the Iesuites (already halfe Pelagians) will (by affirming that by Nature and free will we are borne the children of God, and haue hope of the life to come) wholy fight under their banner; they cannot carry this sanctification of our selues, or any part thereof, unto our freewill: especially when Iohn a little after expresly setteth downe, that this sanctification is the worke of the Spirit, saying, That every one that is borne of God sinneth not, because his seed (which is the spirit of God) abideth in him. And it is no marvell that he saith that men worke that which the Spirit of God worketh in them, seeing it being given of God, is theirs, and maketh not onely a part of them, but the principall part of them: so that the Apostle feareth not to say, that the sinne which the children of God doe, is not so much their doing, as the doing of sinne that dwelleth within them. Augustine upon this place is to be understood (as often hath been shewed) of the freewill opposed unto constraint, and not unto the freewill opposed unto the glory of God, and light of regeneration, as appeareth evidently by these words in the same place, Who doth make us chaste but God? but God doth not make thee chaste against thy will. Chap. 3. 9. Rom. 7. 17. 20.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1. My little children, these things I write to you, ‖ that you sinne not. But and if any man shall sin, we haue ‖ an Advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the iust.

RHEM. 4. [1. That you sinne not.] S. Iohn (saith Venerable Bede vpon this place) is not contrary to himselfe, in that he seeketh heere to make them without sin, whom he said in the last chapter could not be without all sins, but in the former place he warned vs onely of our frailty, that we should not arrogate to our selues perfect innocencie: here hee prouoketh vs to watchfulnesse and diligence in resisting and auoiding sinnes, specially the greater, which by Gods grace may more easily bee repelled.

CARTVV. 4. 1. [That you sinne not.] S.

RHEM. 5 [1. An aduocate.] The calling and office of an Aduocate, is in many things proper to Christ, & in euery condition more singular & excellently agreeing to him then to any Angell, Saint, or creature How Christ is our only Aduocate.

creature liuing, though theſe alſo be rightly and truely ſo called and that not onely without all derogation, but much to the honour of Chriſts aduocation. To him ſoly and onely it agreeth to procure, vs mercy before Gods face, by the general ranſom, price, and paiment of his bloud for our deliuerie, as is ſaid in the ſentence following, And he is the propitiation for our ſinnes, and not for ours onely, but for the worlds. In which ſort he is our onely aduocate, becauſe he is our onely redeemer, and hereupon hee alone immediately, by and through himſelfe, and without the aid or aſſiſtance of any other, man or Angell in his owne name, right and merits, and confidently dealeth in our cauſes before God our iudge, and ſo procureth our pardon, which is the higheſt degree of advocation that can be.

How Angels, Saints, and men aliue are our aduocates.

All which notwithſtanding, yet the Angels, and Saints, and our fellowes aliue, may and do pray for vs, and in that they deale with God by interceſſion to procure mercy for vs, may iuſtly be called our aduocates: not ſo as Chriſt is, who demaundeth all things immediately by his own merits, but as ſecondary interceſſours, who neuer aske or obtaine any thing for vs, but per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum by and through Chriſt our common Lord, Aduocate and Redeemer of mankind. And behold how S. Auguſtine (tract. 1. in ep. Ion. vpon theſe very words) preuented the heretikes cauillations. Sed dicit aliquis &c. But ſome man will ſay, Doe not the Saints then pray for vs? doe not the Biſhops then or Prelates and Paſtors pray for the people? Yea, ſaith he: Marke the Scriptures, and you ſhall find that the Apoſtles prayed for the people, and againe deſired the people to pray for them, and ſo the head prayeth for all, and the members one for another.

Saints in heauen pray for vs.

And likewiſe (leſt the Heretikes ſhould ſay, there is a diffrence betwixt the liuing and the dead in this caſe) the ſame holy father writeth vpon the 85. Pſalm in fine. Our Lord Ieſus Chriſt doth yet make interceſſion for vs, all the Martyrs that be with him, pray for vs: neither will their interceſſion ceaſe, till we ceaſe our groninges.

Iren. lib. 3. c. 33. & lib. 5. poſt med.

In this ſenſe whoſoeuer prayeth for vs, either aliue or dead, is our aduocate, as S. Auguſtine (ep. 59. to Paulinus circa med.) calleth the Biſhops the peoples aduocates, when they giue them their benediction or bleſſing. So doth the holy Church call our B. Lady our aduocates, by the words of S. Irenæus that you may ſee ſuch ſpeeches be no new inuentions of the latter ages, but Apoſtolicall. The obedient virgin Mary (ſaith he) is made the Aduocate of the diſobedient virgin Eue. And to confound the Proteſtants plainely, in that they thinke or pretend that the aduocation or patronage of Saints ſhould be iniurious to Chriſt, remember that *our Sauiour acknowledgeth Angels to bee deputed for the protection (which is nothing elſe but aduocation) of infants before the face of God, beſides the plaine examples in the old Teſtament, Gen. 48 verſ. 16. Tob. 5. verſ. 27. & cap. 12. verſ. 21. Dan. 10. And this not onely the Catholike Church, but the very Engliſh Proteſtants themſelues in their ſeruice booke and in the Collect of Michaelmas day, profeſſe and pray for the ſame protection or aduocation of Angels, and defend the ſame againſt their yonger brethren the Puritanes.

The B. virgin is our aduocate.

Angels are our protectors

CARTVV 5. [1 An Aduocaee.] This diſtinction of firſt and ſecondary Aduocates and Interceſſors, and that which they bring heere for it, is in a manner the ſame, both for matter and words as we had from them before in another place, peradventure eſteeming (as the ſuperſtitious Syrians) that they ſhall haue better luck in fighting againſt the truth in this place then they had in that. But even heere alſo (as there) they are beaten down hand-ſmoth. For firſt, it is well known that the pronounce [Hee] is forcible, and hath an excluſiue power; as if he ſhould ſay, hee and none elſe. And when it is ſaid, I am the Lord thy God, it is all one as if hee ſaid, I alone. Secondly, in reſtraining the title of Iuſt One unto him, he declareth that the office of Advocation requireth a ſingular kinde of Iuſtice, as of one which is not onely Iuſtice himſelfe, but iuſtifieth others. Againe, arguing the advocation of Chriſt by that hee is the propitiation for our ſinnes, whereby, as by a preſent or precious ſtone he turneth the gracious eye and amiable countenance of God upon us, he declareth evidently that whoſoever bringeth not this propitiation with him, is no fit Advocate between God and his people. Laſt of all, Iohn making our Saviour Chriſt the Advocate of the vileſt ſinner, as hee maketh him his own, in ſaying, We haue an Aduocate: it followeth that our Sauiour Chriſt being the onely Advocate between God and him, is ſo of all other. And therefore by the ſame reaſon that Iohn, both the Apoſtle and friend of our Saviour Chriſt, might boldly without any ſpokeſman come immediately to him for any thing he had need of: ſo others, how baſe and vile ſoever, may do the ſame.

1. King. 20. 23.

And ſeeing the Advocation of our Saviour Chriſt is grounded upon his redemption, what reaſon can you ſhew why hee ſhould not be our onely Advocate, as hee is (by your own confeſſion) our onely Redeemer? And if there be a principall and a ſecondary Advocate, why ſhould we not haue likewiſe a principall and ſecondary Redeemer? As for the places of Auguſtine, which ſpeak of the prayers of thoſe that are aliue, they haue beene ſhewed to haue beene friuolous to proue the prayers (much more the advocation) of the departed Saints. And notwithſtanding that Auguſtine ſometimes uſe the word of interceſſion and advocation indifferently for prayer, yet the ſame is by abuſe of ſpeech, and therefore Epiſt. 59. he doth not call the Biſhops (as they unfaithfully ſay) Advocates, but as it were Advocates. And upon this place of Iohn, hee ſaith, marke Iohn himſelfe obſerving humility; verily he was a iuſt and an excellent man, yet hee ſaid not you haue an Advocate, &c. but wee haue: Neither ſaid hee, you haue mee, but ſet Chriſt and not himſelfe; chuſing rather to put himſelfe in the number of ſinners that hee might haue Chriſt for his Advocate, then that hee would put himſelfe for an Advocate in ſtead of Chriſt, and ſo to be found amongſt the proud that ſhall be damned: And even there where he ſaith, that the Biſhop prayeth for the people, and the people for the Biſhop, he uſeth another word to note their prayers, and his Advocation, thereby ſhutting them from all manner of Advocation. As for Irenæus, it hath been ſhewed (upon 2. Pet. 2.) how he is directly againſt Invocation and Advocation of Saints. As for the words they alledge of the holy Virgins advocation for Eue, it is evident by his whole diſcourſe that hee ſpeaketh ſo in reſpect of Chriſt onely, whom ſhe brought forth to be her and our Advocate, in which reſpect he ſaith, Shee was the cauſe of our ſalvation: But for anſwer to this kinde of ſpeech, let the Reader look before upon Act. 1. 14.

Iuuicem pro ſe omnia membra orent caput pro omnibus interpellit

Their

Their reason of Advocation of Angels confirmed by Protection, saying that Protection is nothing else but Advocation is not worthy to be refuted, seeing Advocation is but one kinde of many and sundry Protections. And seeing the Father and the Holy Ghost which are our Protectors, by the Iesuits Divinity should bee Advocates as well as our Saviour Christ: whereupon it is evident that they belye us, when (upon our prayer to God for protection of Angels) they charge us that we pray for their Advocation also. Likewise, the Scripture and Ierome which proue that the Angels (instrumentally) are Protectors, are ridiculously alledged to proue them also Advocates. Albeit the places of Gen. 48. 16. and Dan. 10. be not meant of created Angels, but of our Saviour Christ, which is the Angell of the Covenant, as it appeareth by the Titles given unto the one, of the mighty God; and by the speciall and singular description of the other, never used in the description of the created Angels, yea appropriated unto our Saviour Christ, whom Iohn describing, painteth him out in divers of the same colours which this Prophet doth. As for Tobies Angell, it skilleth not what is said of him, being so base, that he will never passe in the Royall Exchange of Church Authority: Howbeit ch. 5. ver. 27. hauing nothing to the matter in controversie; that chap. 12. ver. 12. as it is fabulous, so if it haue any truth, it ought to be carried unto our Saviour Christ, to whom, that of offering the prayers of the elect unto God, is proper, as hath been generally, and shall be more especially afterward declared: And if it were both true, and understood then also of some created Angell: yet neither proveth it that Angels pray for us, but onely call for performance of our prayers, by standing in the Lords presence, as it were looking in his face when hee will award the execution and accomplishment of their Petitions: and our prayers unto them it utterly overthroweth, while it shewing that the Angels then solicite our sutes when we our selues pray unto God; thereby declareth that when we pray to any but to God, the Angels stand farre from us, and destitute us of that service which otherwise they are wont to performe for us.

Mal. 3. 1. Gen. 32. 28. 29. 30. Dan. 10. 5. 6. Apoc. 13. 14 15.

Ierome saying that every soule hath from it birth an Angell appointed for the custody thereof, saying more then the Scripture warranteth, saith nothing at all to any thing in controversie between us, touching either our prayers to them, or theirs for us. Our prayers unto God for Protection of Angels, helpeth you nothing, neither for your prayers to them, nor theirs for you. And therefore it is your custome of untrue speaking, to surmise contrariety amongst us in this point: for neither yonger nor elder, neither Puritans (as you call them) nor other, haue to our knowledge, differed one word in this point: onely you thought good thus to be pleasant, and to refresh your Reader with this foolish and unsavorie scorne wherein there is not a corne of salt.

Verse. 4. He that saith hee knoweth him, and keepeth not his commandements; is a lyer the truth is not him.

RHEM. 7. [4 He that saith he knoweth.] To know God here, signifieth (as it doth often in the scriptures) to loue, that is, as in the last chapter, to be in societie with him, and to haue familiar and experimental knowledge of his graces. If any vaunt themselues thus to know God, and yet keepe not his commandements, he is a liar, as all Caluinistes and Lutherans, that professe themselues to be in the fauour of God by onely faith: affirming, that they neither keepe, nor possibly can keepe his commandements.

Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 7. [4 Hee that saith he knoweth.] Whether the Calvenists and Lutherans (as you terme them) keep the commandements, or no: (next after the Lords, to whom onely we stand or fall) wee appeale to the iudgement of the world (the Popish sort onely excepted) which standing at the barre to accuse, ought not to stand as witnesse, much lesse to sit as Iudge: Neither ought it to shadow the light of our godly conversation, that we teach that No man can obserue the commandements, meaning perfectly; Vnlesse by the same reason they will quench the light of Iohns innocencie, who both confessed himselfe a sinner, and taught all others so to do, seeing if it were a possibility, the possibility would at some time, or in some person haue broken forth into act.

Verse. 18. Little children, it is the last houre, and as you haue heard, that Antichrist commeth: now there are become many Antichrists: whereby we know that this is the last houre.

RHEM. 8. [18 Many antichrist.] The holy Apostle S. Iohn (saith S. Cyprian) did not put a difference betwixt one heresie or schisme and an other, nor meant any sort that specially separated themselues, but generally called all without exception, antichristes, that were aduersaries to the Church, or were gone out from the same. And a little after. It is euident that all be here called antichristes, that haue seuered themselues from the charitie and vnitie of the Catholike Church. So writeth he ep. 76. nu. 1. ad Magnum. Wherby we may learne, that all Heretikes, or rather Arch-heretikes be properly the precursors of that one and speciall Antichrist: which is to come at the last end of the world, and which is called here imediatetly before ὁ ἀντίχριστος that peculiar and singular Antechrist.

All heretikes are antichrists the fore-runners of the great Anti-Christ.

CARTVV. 8. [18 Many Antichrists.] That the speciall Antichrist is already come, looke afore upon 2. Thess. 2. although even here also the Popish fable of that Antichrist, rising out of the Tribe of Dan, is confuted, when it is said in the next verse that he and his fore-runners shall rise out of the bowels of the Church, and not from the Iewes which are strangers from it.

The mark of all heretickes is, their going out of the Catholike ſociety.

RHEM. 9. [19. They went out from vs.] An euident note and marke, whereby to conuince all Heretikes and falſe teachers; to wit, that being once of the common Catholike Chriſtian fellowſhip, they forſooke it, and went out from the ſame. Simon Magus, Nicolaus the Deacon, Hymenæus, Alexander, Philetus, Arius, Macedonius, Pelagius, Neſtorius, Eutyches, Luther, Caluin, and the like, were of the common ſocietie of all vs that be Chriſtian Catholikes, they went out from vs whom they ſaw to liue in vnitie of faith and religion together, and made themſelues new conuenticles. Therefore they were (as the Apoſtle here ſheweth) antichriſts, and wee and all that abide in the ancient fellowſhip of Chriſtian religion, that went not out of their fellowſhip, in which wee neuer were, nor out of any other ſociety of known Chriſtians, cannot be Schiſmatikes or Heretikes, but muſt needs be true Chriſtian Catholike men. Let our aduerſaries tell vs, out of what Church wee euer departed, when, and where, and vnder what perſons it was that we reuolted, as we can tel them the yeare, the places, the Ringleaders of their reuolt.

The Catholikes cannot be proued to haue gone out

CARTVV. 9. [19 They went out from us.] Your argument of us going from you, not of you from us, to proue you muſt needs be the Chriſtian Catholike men, ſerueth as well for a knot of theeues appeached of their thefts by one which being ſometime of their company, after, in repentance of his lewd life ſingleth himſelfe from them. Wherefore, to haue made this place to haue truely ſerued you, you ſhould firſt haue proued that you are the true Church: For it is your groſſe errour to eſteeme that you may as well take it for a thing granted that you are the Church of God, as Iohn that hee and his fellowes were. And it is yet more ſottiſh for you to uſe this proofe to us that neither know, nor confeſſe you to bee the Church of God, but the Synagogue of Satan; Becauſe Iohn uſed that proofe to the Church of God, which both knew and confeſſed that hee and his fellowes were the true and undoubted Church of God. Againe, what ſay you here againſt us, that the Idolatrous Gentiles might not much more worthily upbraid unto the beleeving ones, which vnder the Goſpell, and in the beginning thereof turned from their Idols to ſerue the liuing God; Might they not ſay, we haue holden the Religion which we cleaue unto this 1400 yeares, and you and your Anceſtors with us; wee therefore remaining ſtill in the Religion we haue received, are the true, and the Catholike Church, and you that are gone from us, forſakers of the ſame. There lies alſo, by this Popiſh Argument, the ſame charge to be made of the Iewiſh Synagogue againſt the Apoſtles and other faithfull Iewes, which having been ranged under the obedience of the Iewiſh gouernement, and infected with divers the errours that they were poſſeſſed of, afterward departed from them and ſeuered their diſciples alſo.

Laſt of all, it is ſo farre that our going out from you proueth us Heretickes and you Catholicks, that of the contrary ſide, unleſſe we had gone out from you, neither could we haue been Apoſtolicall, (as by grace we are) nor you Apoſtaticall, as in iuſtice you remaine. For the true Church of God, is by Iohns own teſtimony of thoſe that come forth of Babylon, that is to ſay Rome, as hath and ſhall more plainely appeare.

How heretickes are of the Church before they fall.

RHEM. 10. [19. They were not of vs.] He meaneth not, that Heretikes were not, or could not be in or of the Church, before they went out or fell into their hereſie or ſchiſme: but partly that many of them which afterward fall out, though they were before with the reſt, and partakers of all the Sacraments with other their fellowes, yet indeed were of naughtie life and conſcience when they were within, and ſo being rather as ill humors and ſuperfluous excrements, then true and liuely parts of the body after a ſort may be ſaid not to haue been of the body at all. So S. Auguſtine expoundeth this word in his commentary vpon this place, tract. 3. but elſe where, more agreeably as it ſeemeth, that the Apoſtle meaneth, that ſuch as will not tarrie in the Church but finally forſake it to the end, in the preſcience of God, and in reſpect of the ſmall benefit they ſhall haue by their temporall ſmall abode there, be not of or in the Church, though according to this preſent ſtate, they are truly members thereof. Li. de concept. & gr. c. 9. & de dono perſeu. c. 8.

Concil. Conſtan. ſeſſ. 15.

CARTVV. 10. [19. They were not of us.] This is an evident teſtimony againſt the Papiſts doctrine, and Councell of Conſtance, which condemned this as hereſie, That the true Church is taken for the company of the elect alone. For the Apoſtle doth plainly ſay, that theſe hypocrites were never of the Church, although in the Church: for that they departed out of it which ſhould alwayes haue remained in it, if they had been of it. And ſo here the Fathers taught, affirming that the Church is the company of the elect whereunto are gathered all the faithfull and iuſt which God hath predeſtinated before the beginning of the world. Auguſtine alſo, whom they alledge, haue they ſhamefully falſified. For Tract. 3. of this, place, he proueth the cleane contrary of that they affirme, ſaying, There are indeed, which for the grace of God received for a time, are called of us the ſonnes of God, and yet are not of God. And then applying theſe words, If they had been of us, they had abidden with us: he ſaith, what ſay they elſe, but that they were not ſonnes, euen then, when they were in the profeſſion and name of ſonnes. In the other places de Correp. & gr. cap. 9. & de bono perſeu. cap. 8. he indeed ſaith, that they are not called of purpoſe, nor choſen before the beginning of the world: but he ſaith not, that according to the preſent eſtate they are true members of the Church as you falſly ſurmiſe; for ſo ſhould he be contrary to himſelfe, both in the former place, and otherwhere, where he affirmeth that thoſe things which Solomon ſpeaketh of, the garden incloſed, the fountaine ſealed, the lilly, ſiſter, and ſpouſe of Ieſus Chriſt, are underſtood thoſe alone which are holy and iuſt, which are Ieweſ

RHEM. 11 [19. That they may be manifest] God permitteth heresie to be, that such as be permanent, constant, and chosen members and children of the Catholike Church, onely known to God before, may now also be made manifest to the world, by their constant remaining in the CHVRCH when the winde and blast of every heresie or tentation driveth out the other light and vnstable persons. By heresies constant Catholickes are known.

Verse. 20. But you haue the unction from the Holy one, and I know all things.

RHEM. 12. [20. Know all things.] They that abide in the vnitie of Christs Church, haue the unction, , that is the holy Ghost, who teacheth all truth, not that euery member or man thereof hath all knowledge in himselfe personally, but that euery one which is of that happie societie to which Christ promised and gaue the holy Ghost, is partaker of all other mens gifts and graces in the same holy Spirit, to his saluation. Neither neede any to seeke trueth at Heretickes hands or others that bee gone out, when it is within themselues and onely within themselues in Gods Church. If thou loue vnitie (saith S. Augustine) for thee also hath hee, whosoeuer hath any thing in it, take away enuie, it is thine, which I haue, it is mine which thou hast &c. Tract. 32. in Euang Ioan. Euery good Catholicke is sufficiently taught by the Church to saluation.

CARTVV. 12. [20. Know all things.] It is in a good construction true that is here said of the communion of the graces of one member of the Church with another: in that the gifts bestowed upon one, are bestowed for the good of the rest. But that the rest alwayes are partakers of those graces which debarre themselues through negligence or envie: or that they are so much as members of the Church, which remaining in ignorance themselues, rest upon the generall, confused, and folded faith of the Church (which the Iesuites peradventure would insinuate) it proveth not, but the cleane contrary, when of them is said, they know all things, meaning all touching the Apostates hee spake of, or all necessary points of their saluation: and that by instruction of their owne persons by the Holy Ghost teaching in the Ministery of the Church, and not by a drowsie faith, knowing nothing it selfe, but taking all upon trust of others.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 4. Every one that committeth sinne, committh also iniquitie: and I sinne is iniquitie.

RHEM. 3. [4. Sinne is iniquitie.] Iniquitie is not taken here for wickednes, as it is commonly vsed both in Latine, and in our language, as it is plaine by the Greeke word ἀνομία, signifying nothing else but a swaruing or declining from the straight line or the law of God or nature. So that the Apostle meaneth, that euery sinne is an obliquitie or defect from the rule of the law: but not contrary, that euery such swaruing from the Law, should be propetly a sin, as the Heretikes do vntuly gather, to prove that coucupiscence remaining after Baptisme is a very sinne, thongh wee neuer giue our consent vnto it. And though in the 5. chapter following vers. 17. the Apostle turne the speach, affirming euery iniquity to be a sin, yet there the Greek word is not the same as before, ἀνομία, but ἀδικία, by which it is plain, that there hee meaneth by iniquitie mans actuall and proper transgression which must need bee a sinne. See S. Augustine cont. Iulian. lib. 5. c. 3. S. Ambrose l.b. de Apologia Dauid c. 15. Cõcupiscence remaining after baptisme, is no sinne without consent.

CARTVV. 3. [4. Sinne is iniquity.] There is no way so strait, which these Sorcerers will not assay to pervert. The Apostle hereby aggrauateth the nature of sin, for that it is against the law, or a breach thereof: and these wretches to maintain the guiltines of sin, and the impunity thereof (thereby proving themselues the undoubted ministers of the man of sinne) make the breach of the law lesse heynous then sinne. The Apostle also to declare the most perfect and most exact innocency of our Saviour Christ, saith of him in the very next verse, that he had no sinne: whereas the Iesuits will set the Apostle to schoole, and teach him that hee should haue said that there was no iniquity in him, which is a lesse thing then sin. Yea, if these filthy spirits may be heard, it will follow (which is blasphemous once to thinke) that our Saviour Christ was without sinne, but not without iniquity, and declining from the strait line of the Law of God. For Iohn indevouring to set forth the innocency of our Saviour Christ, and saying no more of him than that there was no sinne in him, hath not by this teſtimony of Chriſt freed him from ſwaruing from the Law, if we will beleeue theſe men. Their ſhift alſo from Iohns words 1. Iohn. 5. 17. where he ſaith that iniquity is ſinne, as here he ſaith ſinne is iniquity, is moſt ſhamefull and unlearned: For when the Law of God is the rule of righteouſneſſe and equity, not to know that whatſoever is done againſt the law is done againſt righteouſneſſe and equitie, and therefore to be holden in the account of unrighteouſneſſe and iniquity, is to bee deſtitute of all ſound knowledge. But this whole matter the Reader may ſee cleered more at large before upon Gal. 5. 10 upon the words of the Adoſtle which pronounceth him accurſed which abideth not in every poynt and tittle of the Law. Auguſtine lib. cont. Iulian. 5. cap. 3. is flat againſt them, ſaying, that the concupiſcence of the fleſh, againſt which the good ſpirit coveteth, is both ſinne, becauſe there is diſobedience againſt the rule of the minde, and the puniſhment of ſinne by deſert of him that diſobeyeth, and the cauſe of ſinne through his want that conſenteth, and infection of him that is borne. Whereunto agreeth Auguſtines definition of ſinne, which amongſt other ſinnes maketh concupiſcence ſinne alſo. And Ambroſe de Apolog. David. c 13. in ſaying that iniquity is the root and the branch: the mother and the daughter haue the ſame nature, as in that which is good and ſweet, ſo in that which is naught and ſowre. Beſides that calling concupiſcence iniquity, which is a ſharper word then fault, he may worthily appeare to make the former (as doth the Apoſtle) worſe then the latter.

Iniquitas eſt radix delicti. Rom. 7. 13.

Verſe. 6. Every one that abideth in him, ſinneth not: and every one that ſinneth, hath not ſeene him, nor known him.

RHEM. 4. [6. Sinneth not.] Iouinian and Pelagius falſely (as Heretikes vſe to do) argued vpon theſe words, and thoſe that follow verſ. 9. the one, that the Baptized could ſin no more: the other, that no man being or remaining iuſt could ſinne. But among many good ſenſes giuen of this place, this ſeemeth moſt agreable, that the Apoſtle ſhould ſay, that mortall ſinne doth not conſiſt together with the grace of God, and therefore cannot bee committed by a man continuing the ſonne of God, and ſo is the like ſpeach, in the 9. verſe following to bee taken. See S. Hierome lib. 2. cont. Iouin. c. 1.

Heretical expoſition of Scriptures.

No man in grace ſinneth mortally.

CARTVV. 4. [6 Sinneth not.] You make the third brother unto the two Heretickes Iouinian and Pelagius; in falſhood of expoſition, not inferiour unto them, in folly much aboue them; their wicked expoſition having more ſhew of truth in the bare conſideration of the words, then yours hath: for where their expoſitions haue a plentifull confutation by compariſon of other Scriptures with this: yours, That mortall ſinne (as you call it) cannot be committed of any, continuing the ſonnes of God, is confuted not onely in this Epiſtle, where hath beene ſhewed that they which are of the Church never depart from it, but euen in this preſent verſe. For in ſaying preciſely that hee which ſinneth hath not ſeene, nor hath not known God: hee declareth evidently that he which ſinneth after the manner heere ſpoken of was never the ſonne of God, or borne of him: ſo farre is it that by mortall ſinne a man falleth from being the childe of God, and diſcontinueth that good eſtate which hee ſometime was in. Whereas to haue left ſome colour to your wicked opinion of the fleeting and flitting eſtate of the children of God, hee ſhould haue ſaid, that hee that ſinneth a mortall ſinne, knoweth not, nor ſeeth not God: but to ſay that he hath neither ſeen nor hath known God, which is fallen out of the favour of God, and which (as you pretend) was truely the childe of God, is ſo farre from the ſpeech of the Holy Ghoſt, that it would hardly eſcape a man of moſt common and vulgar iudgement. The true propoſition is, that whoſoeuer ſinneth continually without ſtrife and wreſtling, although it be in idle words, or other the leaſt ſinnes of all, that the ſame is not borne of God, for that the ſeed of Gods Spirit within him would not ſuffer him ſo ſecurely and conſcienceleſly to paſſe by the leaſt of Gods commandements which hee knoweth to bee commended unto him; ſo that it is the ſame doctrine which the Apoſtle teacheth, that thoſe that are in Chriſt haue not ſinne raigning in them, although it dwell in them. And this is confirmed by the manner of ſpeech uſed of Iohn before and after; where inſteed of that hee ſaith heere, hee that ſinneth, there hee ſaith, hee that doth and practiſeth ſinne (as a man uſeth and practiſeth his Art or Occupation) the ſame is not of God, nor begotten of him: ſo ſinners are noted to be, not that they offend once or twice, but they that are as continuall in committing of ſinne, as the wayfaring man is in walking in his way, and who ſetteth not one or two ſteps alone in wickedneſſe, but treadeth the path thereof continually. And this ſignification of the phraſe of doing of ſinne, let Iohn himſelfe expound: Whoſoeuer (ſaith he) doth ſinne, the ſame is the ſeruant of ſinne: that is to ſay, one that is commanded of ſinne, and tyrannyſed of ſinne, as a drudge which dare not but do whatſoeuer his maiſter commandeth him. Wherefore it is evident, that by ſinning is meant, no one ſin how great and grievous ſoever it be (that excepted which is againſt the holy Ghoſt) but a continuance and abode in ſin, without any wreſtling or ſtrugling therewith. And albeit Ierome lib. 2. c. 1. cont. Iouin. ſeeme to affirme that Chriſt goeth from a man with whom he hath dwelt; yet it is no otherwiſe to be underſtood then theſe places of Scripture which are not unlike in ſpeech: that is to ſay, that God doth declare evidently that Chriſt was never with him, where before there was an appearance and ſhew of his reſidence with him. And therefore by one of the Euangeliſts it is ſaid, that he that hath not, that which hee hath ſhall bee taken away from him. And by another, that hee that hath not, that ſhall be taken from him which hee ſeemeth to haue. And in this point Auguſtine is cleere, who teacheth that they are not in the number of the elect which do not continue to the end. Ierome hath nothing of the difference of mortall and other ſinnes, which is that wherefore he is pretended to be alleaged.

RHEM. 5 [7. He that doth iuſtice.] He doth inculcate this often, that mans true iuſtice or righteouſnes conſiſteth in doing or working iuſtice, and that ſo he is iuſt, and biddeth them not to be ſeduced by Heretikes, in this point.

CARTVV. 5. [7 He that doth iustice.] It is a true iustice which consisteth in doing or working iustice: but it is neither the onely, nor the principall iustice, nor that which doth in the least part make us iust before God.

Verse. 8. Hee that committeth sinne, is of the devill: because the devill | sinneth from the beginning. For this, appeared the Sonne of God, that hee might dissolue the workes of the devill.

RHEM. 6. [8. Sinneth from the beginning.] The Deuill was created holy and in grace, and not in sinne, but he fell of his own freewill from God. Therefore these words, from the beginning, may be interpreted thus, from the beginning of sinne, and so the Apostle will say, the Deuill committed the first sinne. So S. Augustine l. 11. de ciu. Dei c. 15. expoundeth it. The most simple meaning seemeth to be, that he sinned from the beginning of the world, not taking the beginning precisely for the first instant or moment of the creation, but straight vpon the beginning, as it must needs also be taken in S. Iohns Gospell. c. 8. 44. How the diuell sinned from the beginning.

CARTVV. 6. [8 Sinneth from the beginning] S.

Verse. 22. And whatsoeuer we shall aske, | we shall receiue of him: because we keep his commandements, and do those things which are pleasing before him.

RHEM. 7. [22. We shall receiue, because.] Let the Protestants be ashamed to say, that we obtain all of God by onely faith, the Apostle here attributing it to the keeping of Gods commandements. Note here also that Gods commandements are not impossible to be kept, but were then, and are now obserued of good men. Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 7. [22 VVe shall receiue, because.] This Sophistry is discovered before: and that answer there, is strengthened here, for that the whole drift of this Epistle is not to teach the causes and meanes of our salvation and iustification: but to shew how we shall understand that we are iustified and saved: whereof come these so often speeches, In this we know, &c. for it being a proper thing to the iustified and saved, to walk in the commandements of God; thereby we know assuredly that we are iustified, and shall be saued, and glorified for that we do the things which please God. Not that we performe the Law or any article or branch thereof, thereby to make that the workes should be acceptable in their own worthinesse: but for that they please God through the intercession of our Saviour Christ, who taketh away the pollution and imperfection of them. And therefore the Scripture teacheth, that the sacrifice of our good workes is onely accepted when it is offered unto him in the strength and merit of the Priestly intercession of our Sauiour Christ. 1. Pet. 2. 5.

CHAP. IIII.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. MY deerest, | beleeue not every Spirit, but | proue the spirits if they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

RHEM. 1. [1. Beleeue not euery spirit.] That is, Receiue not euery doctrine of such as boast themselues to haue the spirit. For there be many false Prophets, that is to say, Heretikes, which shall go out of the Church, and chalenge the spirit, and vaunt of Gods word, Scripture, and Gospell, which in deed be seducers. Heretical boasting of the Spirit.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Beleeue not every spirit.] S.

RHEM. 2. [1. Proue the spirits.] It is not meant by this place, as the Protestants would haue it, that euery particular person should of himselfe examine, trie, or indge who is a true or false doctor, and which is a true or false doctrine. But the Apostle here would euery one to discern these diuersities of spirits, by taking knowledge of them to whom God hath giuen the gifts of discerning spirits and doctrines (which S. Paul expresly saith is giuen but to some, and not to euery one, 1. Cor. 12.) and by obeying the Church of God, to whom Christ hath giuen *the Spirit of truth. And this is onely the sure way to proue the spirits and doctrines of these dayes. And all they that would bring us from our pastors & the Churches iudgement, to our own priuate triall, seek nothing els but to driue vs to miserable vncertainty in all our beleefe, as Caluin doth, who vpon this place saith, that priuate men may examine the generall Councels doctrines. The Church onely, not euery private man, hath to proue and discerne spirits. Ioh. 14. 16 Caluin.

CARTVV. 2. [1. Proue the Spirits.] It is a hard manner of speech to expound these words, Try you the spirits, that is to say, carry them to be tried unto the Church, to the Councels, and to the Gouernours of the Church, and therefore needed the light and conference of some other place of Scripture speaking in the same manner. Yet the absurdity hereof doth more appeare, for that even as our Saviour Christ did before, so S. Iohn here in the next verses following, giveth them the touchstone in their hands, wherewith they themselues should try the truth or falshood of the doctrine that is brought. For is there any so senceless as to giue a man a touchstone into his hand to try the goodnesse and lawfulnes of the gold, and yet withall to charge him that he shall not use it himself, but alwayes when he is doubtfull of a peece of money, goe to the Gold-smith without daring once to enter into any iudgement of the lawfulnesse or unlawfulnesse of it by himselfe. And yet both the touchstone of the Scriptures which God hath given us for the triall of truth, is incomparably better then any touchstone of the Gold-smith: and the difference of true doctrine and false, infinitely greater then the difference between fine and pure gold, and base and bell-mettell. And when as Iohn ascribeth unto every one of the Church the annoynting of the Spirit which teacheth them whatsoever is necessary: it is evident 1. Ioh. 2. 20. 27.

1.Cor.2.15 that he will haue that every one ſhall be inſtructed to try the Spirits: eſpecially conſidering that the Apoſtle teacheth, that the ſpirituall man (that is to ſay a man indued with the ſpirit of Adoption) iudgeth all things ſo farre as they may neceſſarily concerne him. And unleſſe the faithfull ſhould bee able to try and diſceerne of the divers colours of mens doctrines, how ſhould they once deſire the helpe of their Paſtors and Governours? For the blinde eating (as they ſay) many a flye, a man cannot ſo much as ſurmiſe the doubtfulneſſe or ſuperſtitiouſneſſe of any doctrine, unleſſe he be able to make ſome triall of the doctrine himſelfe. Wherefore our doctrine, which teacheth that every one ſhould try the ſpirits by the light which himſelfe carrieth about him, is ſo farre from taking away the helpe and aſſiſtance they ſhould haue of their governours, that unleſſe it haue place, there is no place for the other: ſeeing no man can pray aid againſt his enemy comming towards him, unleſſe he bee firſt able to diſcover him to be an enemy. The Ieſuites reaſon that the diſcerning of Spirits is not given to all men. 1.Cor. 12. is ſhameleſſe and impudent Sophiſtry. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that diſcretion of Spirits which is myraculous, which although it be ſometime aided by outward things, as by behaviour and countenance, yet gathereth it and diſcerneth more then it hath by ordinary diſcourſe certaine ground of. And that the Reader may know how the Ieſuites trifle with him in this poynt, let him underſtand that the skill of the Scriptures and iudgement in them, both that which is ordinary conſiſting in knowledge, and wiſedome, and that which is extraordinary conſiſting in propheſie, is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the gift of diſcretion of Spirits. And it is evident, that as there were many that excelled in iudgement of ſound and unſound doctrine, which had not this gift of diſcretion of ſpirits; ſo this gift of diſcerning of ſpirits reached not ſo much unto the diſcerning of doctrines one from another (which might be done by labour and travell in the word of God,) but the uſe thereof was principally in diſcouering the traiterous and treacherous natures of thoſe, which pretending friendſhip to the Church, either were covert enemies, or at leaſt not faithfull friends to the ſame: which thing not able by any induſtry or diſcourſe of wit to be found out, this gift was needfully given of the Lord to his Church, eſpecially in the Primitiue Church, when they wanted the helpe of the Magiſtrate. This gift had Elizeus in diſcovering Gehezie, and Peter in laying open the ſecret practiſe of Ananiah and his wife. That of Iohn 14. continually called on by the Ieſuites, as diſranked and diſplaced of them, refuſeth (as hath been ſaid) to giue any aſſiſtance unto them.

2.Reg 5.26 Acts 5.34.

Verſe 2. In this is the Spirit of God knowne, | every ſpirit that confeſſeth Ieſus Chriſt to haue come in the fleſh, is of God.

To confeſſe or deny any article which the Catholike Church teacheth, is at all times a certaine mark of Catholike, or heretick.

RHEM 3. (2. Euery ſpirit that confeſſeth.] The Apoſtle ſpeaketh according to that time, & for that part of Chriſtian doctrine which then was ſpecially to be confeſſed, taught, and maintained againſt certaine wicked Heretikes, Cerinthus, Ebion, and the like, that taught wickedly againſt the perſon and both natures of Chriſt IESVS. The Apoſtle therefore giueth the faithfull people this token to know the true teachers of thoſe dayes from the falſe. Not that this marke would ſerue for all times, or in caſe of all other falſe doctrins, but that it was then a neceſſary note. As if a good Catholike writer, Paſtor, or parents would warne all theirs now in theſe dayes, to giue eare onely to ſuch teachers as acknowledge Chriſt our Sauiour to be really preſent, and ſacrificed in the B. Maſſe, and that all ſuch are true preachers, and of God, the reſt to be of the Deuill, or to be counted the ſpirit of Antichriſt. Which ſpirit of Antichriſt (he ſaith) was come euen then, and is no doubt much more now in all heretikes, all being precurſors of that great Antichriſt which ſhall come towards the latter end.

CARTVV. 3. [2. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth.] If there be no remedy, ſoame out your owne ſhame, and let it (hardly) bee your proper marke to acknowledge Chriſt really preſent in the Maſſe: that you alſo may (by the teſtimony of Chriſt) be the decetiers which muſt come before the end of the world. For he anſwering to that part of the Diſciples queſtion, where they asked what ſignes ſhould go before the end thereof, telleth them of falſe Prophets and falſe Chriſts which ſhall come: both which ſorts of deceivers, ſhall, amongſt other things, haue this as common unto them, that they ſhall ſay, here is Chriſt, and there is Chriſt. Concerning whom Catholike Writers, Paſtors and Parents will warne theirs; as our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe doth, ſaying, Beleeue them not, go not after them.

Verſe. 3 And every ſpirit, | that diſſolveth Ieſus, is not of God: and this is Antichriſt of whom you haue heard that hee commeth, and now hee is in the world.

Many old hereſies that diſſolved Chriſt.

RHEM.4 [3 That diſſoluteth.] To diſſolue, looſe, or ſeparate IESVS aſunder, was proper to all thoſe old Heretikes that taught either againſt his Diuinitie, or Humanitie, or the vnity of his perſon, being of two natures, as Cerinthus, Ebion, Neſtorius, Eutyches, Manes or Manichæus, Cerdon, Apelles, Apollinaris & the like. And this is one place by which we may ſee that the common Greek copies be not euer authenticall, and that our old approued tranſlation may not alwayes bee examined by the Greeke that now is, which the Proteſtants onely follow? but that it is to bee preſuppoſed, when our old Latin text differeth plainely from the Greeke, that in old time either all or the more approued Greek reading was otherwiſe, and that often the ſaid Greek was corrupted then or ſince by Heretikes or otherwiſe. For of the Greekes S. Irenæus lib. 3. c. 18. among the Latine fathers S. Aug. tract. 6. in fine. S. Leo ep. 10. c. 5. and Venerable Bede did read as we do, and this reading maketh more againſt the ſaid Heretikes, then that which the common Greek now hath, to wit, euery ſpirit that confeſſeth not Chriſt to haue come in the fleſh, is not of God, which is alſo in effect ſaid before v. 2. And that therefore it was corrupted and altered by Heretikes, ſee the words of Socrates alſo a Greek writer, very agreeable to this purpoſe. Neſtorius (ſaith he) being eloquent by nature, which is often in Heretikes, accounted himſelfe therefore learned, and diſdained to ſtudie the old interpreters, counting himſelfe better then them all: being ignorant that in S. Iohns Catholike epiſtle the old (Greeke) copies had, EVERIE ONE THAT DISSOLVETH IESV, IS NOT OF GOD. Verse. 6. Wee are of God, Hee that knoweth God heareth us: hee that is not of God heareth us not. In this we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of errour.

RHEM. 5. [6. In this wee know.] This is the most sure and generall mark to know the true Spirits and Prophets from the false: that those which bee of God, will heare and obey their Apostles and lawfull pastors succeeding the Apostles, and submit them selues to the Church of God; the other, that be not of God, will not heare either Apostle, Pastor, or Church, but be their own iudges. A sure mark of true or false Teachers.

CARTVV. 5. [6 In this we know.] S.

Verse. 17. In this is charity perfited with us, that we may haue confidence in the day of iudgement: because as he is, we also are in the world.

RHEM. 6. [17. That we may haue confidence.] Confidence called in Latine Fiducia, is neither all one with faith, nor a perswasion infallible that maketh a man no lesse secure and certaine in his saluation, then of the things that we are bound to beleeue, as the Protestants falsely teach; but it is onely a hope well corroborated, cõfirmed & strengthned vpon the promises & grace of God, & the parties merites. And the words both following and going before, proue also euidently against the Protestants, that our confidence & hope in the day of iudgement dependeth not only vpon our apprehension of Christs merites by faith, or vpon his grace and mercy, but also vpon our conformitie to Christ in this life, in charitie and good works. And that is the doctrine of S. Peter when he said, Labour, that by good works you make sure your vocation and election. and S. Pauls meaning, when he said, I haue fought a good fight there is laid vp for me, a crown of iustice, which our Lord will render to mee in that day a iust iudge. Against the Protestants speciall faith and presumptuous security of saluation. 2. Pet. 1. 10 2. Tim. 4. 7.

CARTVV 6. [17 That we may haue confidence.] This Popish spirit is (by all likelyhood) condemned to perpetuall drudgery and slavery for evermore: for they are such enemies unto all freedome and confidence of spirit, that even then when the children of God shall be raised up to receiue the iudgement of everlasting life & glory (for of that time Iohn speaks) they shall be in no assurance of everlasting life: but even then, when our Sav. Christ reacheth out one hand to set the crown of glory on their heads, they must (by the Iesuits doctrine) be afraied lest hee haue a whip in the other to driue them from his glorious presence, Whereas our Saviour Christ teaching that they should even then lift up their heads, when all things both in heaven, earth, and sea, shall be troubled, onely because their redemption is at hand: how much more will hee haue them full of ioy and comfort, when the very day and houre of their redemption is come? Nay, Iohn declaring that even in this life we know that we are the loved of God, doth thereby giue us to understand, that the faithfull even in this life amidst all the wounds both of afflictions without, and of sinnes within, are assured of the favour and loue of God, Not to tary upon the blinde ignorance of the Iesuites which define confidence by hope, that is to say, one Christian vertue by another: let him obserue what manner of merits the Popish merits be, which alwaies, even at the day of iudgement, cause their owners to stand trembling before the iudgement seat of God. The places of 2. Pet. 1. 10. & 2. Tim. 4. 7. are before answered, in their proper places. Luc. 21. 28 vers. 16.

Verse. 18. Feare is not in charity: but perfect charity casteth out feare, because feare hath paine fulnesse, and he that feareth is not perfect in charity.

RHEM. 7. [18. Feare is not charitie] The Heretikes very falsely vnderstand this place so, that Christian godly men ought to haue no doubt, mistrust, or feare of hell and damnation. Which is most euidently against the Scriptures, commending euerywhere vnto vs the awe and feare of God & his iudgements. Feare him (saith our Saviour Math. 10. that can cast body and soule into hell. And Psal. 118. Pearse my flesh with thy feare. Which feare of Gods iudgements caused S. Paul and all good men to chastice their bodies, lest they should be reprobate and damned. And the wise man for this cause affirmeth him to be happie, that is euer fearefull, And holy Iob saith, I feared all my works. And the Apostle, With feare and trembling worke your saluation. Which kind of feare is euen in the iustest men and most full of charitie, consisting well with the same vertue, and is called Filialis timor, because it is such as the good childe ought to haue toward his father. The feare of God in iust men consisteth with charity. 1. Cor. 9. Pro. 28. Iob. 6. 9. Phil. 2.

But there is a kind of feare which standeth not with charity, and is cleane against hope also, that which bringeth such perplexitie and anxietie of conscience, that it induceth to mistrust or despaire of Gods mercies. That seruile feare also which maketh a man often to leaue sinning & to do the externall works of iustice, not for any loue or delight he hath in God or his lawes, but onely for feare of damnation, though it bee not ill in it selfe, but very profitable, as that which helpeth toward the loue of God, yet it standeth not with charity neither but is daily more and more lessened, and at length quite driuen out by charitie. Of these kindes of feares then the Apostle speaketh, and (as some expound) of the feare of men also, of which our Sauiour saith, Feare not them that kill the body. What feare agreeth not with charity. Seruile feare is not ill. Mat. 10.

CARTVV. 6. [18 Feare is not in charity.] Iohn shewing in the former verse the strength of the loue of God towards us when it is truely and liuely felt in the heart, namely, that it giveth us boldnesse in the day of iudgement; secondly, that even in this world it maketh us as Christ is: Now in this verse hee proveth that it giveth us boldnesse, of the contrary effect of feare which it removeth: Whereupon it is evident, that the feare which is heere spoken of, is contrary to the boldneſſe and confidence of comming vnto the Lord, and vnto his iudgement ſeat; And being contrary to boldneſſe and confidence, it followeth ſecondarily, that it is the ſame with miſtruſt and doubting of the good will of our heavenly Father. Againe, that feare is heere forbidden which hath paine and torment of conſcience, but the doubting and miſtruſting whether God doth loue us, hath paine and torment of conſcience; therefore that is heere forbidden.

*Math.*10. commandeth not ſimply to feare God which can caſt both body and ſoule into hell: but rather to feare him then to feare men which can kill the body onely. Secondly, although the feare of God be there ſimply commanded, yet the ſame muſt be underſtood of a childe-like feare, which (in loue he beareth to his father) feareth to offend him, and not in regard of the feare of hell and condemnation: It being an abſurd thing that a good man ſhould feare the Lord with the ſame kinde of feare wherewith evill men are afraid of him. Albeit it is not ſimply denyed of us that the children of God be afraid of his iudgements, whereof *Pſal.*119.*ver.*120. ſpeaketh; yea of hell it ſelfe: provided allwaies that that feare be overcome and maſtered by an undoubted confidence of the favour of God, whereby the conſcience, notwithſtanding that feare, remaineth in peace and ſecurity thereof.

Verse. 16. He that knoweth his brother to sinne a sinne not to death, let him aske, and life shall bee giuen him, sinning not to death. There is a sinne to death: for that I say not that any man aske.

RHEM. 3. [16. A sinne to death.] A sinne to death is another thing then a mortall sinne, for it is that mortall sin onely, whereof a man is neuer penitent before his death, or in which he continueth till death and dieth in it. I affirme (saith S. Augustine, de correp. & grat. c. 12.) that a sinne to death is to leaue (saith he) working by charitie euen till death. So likewise in the words before, a sinne not to death, is not that which wee call a veniall sinne, but any that a man committeth and continueth not therein till death. What is a sin to death.

CARTVV. 4. [16 A sinne to death.] That this is sinne against the Holy Ghost which cannot be forgiven, which the Apostle here termeth a sinne unto death: it is evident by two invincible reasons. One is, that men are forbidden to pray for the forgiuenesse of it, whereas for every sinne pardonable they may craue pardon, as for themselues, so for others also. Against the strength of which reason how shameleſſe and impudent the shift of the Iesuites is, it shall appeare in the answer to the next Annotation, where their slurtish sleight is laid down. The second reason is, for that Iohn immediately after saith, that those that are borne of God cannot sinne, meaning (as the circumstance of the place doth easily declare) this sinne unto death: whereas there is no sinne which the children of God may not offend in, unlesse it be that against the Holy Ghost. For as for finall unrepentance, it is not a speciall and singular sin, but an abode in all the sins that ever a man hath committed. And therefore (in this respect) it cannot be heere meant by Iohn, so the same is further evident, that (forsomuch as repentance of all repentable sinne may be in one moment, and at the last breath, what time a man may haue neither speech nor memory, nor strength to shew it) no man is able to iudge of that sinner that is finally impenitent; for euen hee that hath wilfully giuen himselfe the deathswound, may after the stroake, and before, or in the very moment of death, repent of his wickednesse. And therefore it is too much impudency in their next Annotation, to charge us with presumption of taking upon us to know Gods secrets who be reprobate, when as they themselues take upon them rashly and falsly to iudge who is finally unrepentant, and consequently who is reprobats. This sinne therefore which Iohn speaketh of being a sinne which the Church may come to the knowledge of, cannot bee the sinne of finall unrepentance. Secondly, let the Reader note how absurd the Iesuites be in their diversity of exposition, which haue given two such senses of this place, as one of them is directly opposite against another; For they say the sinne unto death is that, whereof a man is neuer penitent before his death, or in which he continueth till death, and dieth in it: Which is as much as to say, as it is either a sinne repented of at the houre of death, or not repented of, no not at that time. And thereby withall, they make it doubtfull whether Iohn forbiddeth a man to pray for the forgiuenesse of that sinne which God forgiveth at the houre of death. Thirdly, let it bee obserued that this phrase of the Apostle is taken from the Hebrewes, whereby they note a sinne which undoubtedly bringeth death, and not a sinne which is especially committed in death. For whereas the Lord had punished by corporall death those that undertook the charge of the Priesthood without calling thereunto; hee warneth the children of Israel, and those particularly which were simply Levites, that they should not approach the Tabernacle of the Testimony, for that so they should be guilty of a sin to death: The difference onely is, that that which Moses speaketh of the bodily and temporall death, the Apostle heere carryeth to the death of the soule, and to that which is eternall. Numb. 16. 35. Numb. 18. 22.

Lastly, let him obserue how they run upon the pikes, and, as it were, through the fire, to fetch a little water from Augustine, to keep life (if it were possible) in their perverse exposition of this place touching the sinne against the Holy Ghost. For Augustine de correp. & grat. cap. 12. from whence they haue drawn this interpretation of the sinne unto death, doth largely overthrow one of their most wicked errours (which toucheth their free hold more then this) wherein they teach that the faithfull may fall away from the grace of God: so that it argueth a desperate cause, which for filling and healing of a scratch in the foote, openeth a deep and a deadly wound in the head. And now they haue hazarded so far for this, let it be considered whether it haue any cooling or refreshing quality to themward; for when Augustine defineth this sinne unto death to be not a declining or swarving, but a forsaking or leaving of the faith, hee seemeth not to be farre from that iudgement touching the sinne against the Holy Ghost which we hold. And if we should expound him, by him who (for his diligence in Augustines workes) may well be esteemed (after a sort) to haue had Augustines soule and spirit in him, it would appeare that he had no other meaning in this speech then wee haue: For Bede writeth thus; A great question riseth heere, where S. Iohn evidently sheweth that there are certaine brethren for whom it is not commanded that wee should pray, whereas the Lord biddeth us to pray for our persecutors, which cannot otherwise be resolved unlesse there bee some sinnes in the brethren more grievous then the persecution of the enemies: wherefore the sinne of a brother unto death, is when, after the knowledge of God, given by the grace of Iesus Christ, a man setteth himselfe against the brotherhood, and is by the firebrands of envie caried hither and thither against the grace whereby he was reconciled unto God. After, he bringeth divers examples of sinnes that may, and one of those that may not be prayed for: And making mention of this same exposition which the Iesuites follow, he reiecteth it as unagreeable and unsutable to the circumstance of the place. But it is to be feared that Bede, whom the Iesuites pen hath so often made venerable, shall heere, or (at least) herein be unsainted, as one that not onely offereth nothing unto the Idols of their braine, but utterly both unshrineth and even overthroweth the same, It ought not also to be forgotten that the Popish opinion of veniall and mortall sinne (as they understand it) is quite overthrown in this place; where that onely being made a mortall sinne, or sinne to death, which ought not to be prayed for: it fol- Bede upon this place.

loweth, that all those sinnes, for the forgiuenesse whereof we may pray are veniall: and the venialitie (if a man may so speake) standeth not in the nature of the sinne, but in the vertue of the intercession of our Saviour Christ, which is obtained unto us by the prayer of faith.

Prayer for the dead.

RHEM 4. [16. For that I say not.] If the sinne to death whereof he speaketh, bee the sinne wherein a man dieth without repentance, according to S. Augustines words before reheatsed: then the prayer which he speaketh of, must needs be prayer for the dead, because he speaketh of praying, or not praying, for them that died in deadly sinne, exhorting vs to pray, and encouraging us to do it with confidence to be heard, if we pray, for them that departed this life not in deadly sinne: and contrariwise dissuading and discouraging vs from praying for such as continued in wickednes euen to their liues end. And S. Augustine setteth down the Churches practise agreeable to the Apostles meaning. li 21. c. 24. de Ciuit. Dei. If there be any (saith he) that persist till death in impenitence of heart, doth the Church now pray for them, that is, for the soules of them that so are departed? So saith he. And this is the cause that Concilium Bracharense primum c. 34. forbiddeth to pray for such, as die in desperation, or kill themselues: and the reason why the Church forbeareth to pray for heretikes that die in their heresie, or maintaine heresie vnto death and by their death.

Some of the dead may not be prayed for

And that the place is most properly or onely meant of praying for the departed, this conuinceth that neither the Church nor any man is dehorted here from praying for any sinner yet liuing, nor for the remission of any sin in this life: all sins (of what sort soeuer) being pardonable, so long as the cõmitters of them be in case and state to repent: as they be, so long as they be in this world. And we see that the Church, praieth, and is often heard, for Heretikes, Iewes, Turkes, Apostates, and what other infidels or ill men soeuer, during their liues. And it is great blasphemie that the Caluinists vtter vpon this place: to wit, that Apostasie and certaine other sinnes of the reprobate, can not bee forgiuen at all in this life. Which they hold, onely to auoide the seque'e of praying for the dead vpon these wordes of S Iohn, besides that they must take vpon them presumptuously: to know and discerne of Gods secrets, who be reprobate, and who be not, and according to that, pray for some, and not for other some, all which is most wicked and absurd presumption.

It is proued that the Apostle peaketh of praying for the dead. The Caluinists blasphemy, to auoyd the sence of the Apostle

As for their allegation, that S. Ieremie the Prophet was forbidden to pray for the Iewes, and warned that he should not be heard, Cap. 7. 11. 14. there is great difference, first, he had a reuelation by the word of God, that they should continue in their wickednes, as wee haue not of any certaine person whereof S. Iohn here speaketh, secondly, Ieremie was not forbidden to pray for the remission of their sinnes, nor had denial to bee heard therein for any mans particular case, whereof the Apostle here speaketh: but hee was told that they should not escape the temporall punishment and affliction which he had designed for them, and that he would not heare him therein.

CARTVV. 4. [16. That I say not] Their false exposition of the sinne unto death, being ouerthrowne, this collection of Prayer for the dead, which themselues confesse to depend thereupon, must needs go to ground. And the lewdnesse of this collection may be further seene, in that if by not praying for those that sinne to death, be onely understood a not prayiug for the dead which dye vnrepentantly; it will follow, that by the prayer for those which sinne not unto death, must bee understood onely of prayer for the dead which died with repentance: and consequently the prayers of the faithfull shall bee shut up in the dead onely, and haue no manner of reach unto the liuing, to whom notwithstanding euen in the Iesuites iudgement they are due, and in truth (as hath been shewed) are onely due.

Their reason to strengthen this collection of p ayer for the dead, for that neither the Church, nor any man, is dehorted from praying for any sinner yet liuing: is a stout begging of that which is in question, and is manifest y ouerth own by the place of Paul, wherein therefore he prayeth against Alexander the Copper smith, that God would deale with him according unto his deserts; for that after excommunication (the last and seuerest correction of the Church, he not onely amended not, but as a bitter enemy was turned against those which had excommunicated him. And these prayers against him he made whilest he was yet liuing, as appea eth in that at the same time that hee prayed that God would pay him according to his workes, (which is all one with condemning him euerlastingly) he willed Timothy to take heed of him, whom yet Alexander could not haue bitten, if he had been then dead. Thus therefore Paul doth euidently beare witnesse to the doctrine of Iohn. Him we may not pray for whom we may and ought to pray against: but we may and ought to pray against some that are living, as appeareth by the example of Paul: wherefore there are some living for whom we ought not to pray.

1. Tim. 4. 14.
1. Tim. 1. 20.
2. Tim. 4. 15.

Touching the forbidding Ieremy to pray, chap. 7. 11. 14. unlesse you bring forth your Authour, it will be esteemed that you confute your owne shadow, and lay siege to a hold that no man holdeth: considering that as there is no strength in that place, so we remember none of ours that do alledge it. Howbeit if you like to see the conformity of the Spirit of God in the o'd Testament with that in the New: and the good correspondence herein of the Prophets with the Apostles, as of them both with their Master Christ, you may looke to Esay, where the Prophet threatning some of the Iewes for a malicious and despitefull crossing of the Lords commandement unto them, declareth that their iniquity shall not be done away untill death: which if you should haue the expounding of, in stead of a most horrible threat which the Lord maketh, he should make a most loving and amiable promise; namely, that howsoever they had despised and despited the Maiestye of God, and continued unrepentant untill the time of their death, yet then the Lord would make expiation of it, and of all other their sinnes with it; then which what can be more absurdly spoken, and unworthy the iustice and holinesse of the Lord.

Esa. 22. 12. 13. 14.

Concerning Augustine lib. 21. c. 14. de Ciuit. Dei, it hath been shewed how in the matter of Purgatory, and consequently of praying for the dead, he is very diuers: now doubting, now affirming, and now denying that which he had said: whereby his incompetencie of witnessing in this behalfe is cleare. But there is never a word here alledged that maketh one iot for the praying for the dead, such as the

Iesuits

Iesuites would establish. For it is well known, that in times past the Church used to make commemoration of the Saints departed which had beene of marke and note, either for their constancy in suffering, or for other graces whereby they had been profitable to the Church. And therefore that prayer was no petition of God for the soules departed, that it might be well with them, but a thanksgiving for them, and petition that those aliue might follow them. In which regard Augustine propoundeth it as an absurdity, that the Church should pray for them that persist to death in impenitencie of heart. Which thing may yet be better seen in their shamelesse and impudent abuse of the fift Councel of Braccara 14. where say they, the Councell preacheth prayer for the dead, in that it forbiddeth to pray for those which die in desperation: where the words of the Councell are, That there should bee no commemoration of them in the oblation, meaning with honour, as is before said, which is manifest by the reasons that follow. First, for that they through ignorance take upon them to doe it: which argueth that it was not done in despaire, but as the Circumcellions in Augustines and Theodorets time thought they did God good service in killing themselues. And therefore saying that they were thus infamous, and therefore not to be receiued into the account of worthy members of the Church: yet if they hold otherwise the faith of Christ wholy & soundly, they might obtain remission of this sin in him which is able to be compassionate ouer those that are ignorant. Secondly, for that they forbid the same commemoration of the Church to be used for any which are iusticed and punished for their crimes. Vnlesse therefore the Iesuites will be so shameless as to say, that the councell ordained that those which are punished for their crimes, may not be prayed for in regard that they die in their sinnes and without repentance, they are constrained to confesse that they shamefully haue wrested this Councell to another sence then it meant.

Hebr. 5. 2.

Verse. 21. My little children keepe your selues | from Idols. Amen.

RHEM. 5. [21. From Idols.] It is so known a treacherie of Heretikes to translate idola images (as here and in a number of places specially of the English Bible printed the yeere 1562.) that wee need not much to stand vpon it. As this also is seene to all the world, that they do it of purpose to seduce the poore ignorant people, and to make them thinke, that whatsoeuer in the Scriptures is spoken against the idols of the Gentiles (which the Prophet calleth Simulacra Gentium, is meant of pictures, sacred images, and holy memories of Christ and his Saincts. Against such seducers the second sacred Councell of Nice called the seuenth Synode, decreeth thus. Act. 4. Pag. 122. Quicunque sententias sacræ scripturæ de Idolis, contra venerandas imagines adducunt, anathema. Qui venerandas imagines idola appellant anathema. Qui dicunt quod Christiani adorant imagines vt Deos, anathema, that is, Anathema to all them that bring the sentences of holy Scripture touching idols, against the venerable images, Anathema to them that call the venerable images, idols, Anathema to them that say, Christians adore images as Gods.

Heret. translation against sacred images

Psal. 113. The 2. Councell of Nice pronounceth Anathema, that is, a curse against the Caluinists. Edit. Colon. an. 1567.

Now in their later translations the Heretikes perceiuing that the world seeing their vnhoneſt dealing corrected themselues in some places, and in this place haue put, idols, in the text: but to giue the people a watch-word that the Churches images are to be comprised in the word, idols, * they haue put images in the margent. But concerning this matter, it is most euident that neither euery idoll is an image, nor euery image an idoll: and that howsoeuer the origen or etymologie of the word idol, may be taken in the Greeke, yet both the words and the things be in trueth and by the vse of all tongues, farre differing. The great dragon that the Babylonians adored (Dan. 14.) was an Idoll, but not an image: the Cherubins in Salomons temple were images, but not idols, and the face of the Queen in her coine or else where, as Cæsars face vpon the coine that Christ called for, is an image but not an idoll, and the Heretickes dare not translate that text of Scripture thus. Whose idoll is this superscription? nor call the Queens image, the idoll of the Queen: nor Christ the idoll of his father nor woman the idoll of the man: nor man, the idoll of God, all which in Scripture bee named images for all that, and bee so indeed, and not idols. Which conuinceth that the Heretickes bee false and corrupt translatours in this place and other the like, confounding these two words as if they were all one.

 The bible of the yeare* 1577.

The great difference of idol & image

But as for the hauing of images or purtraites of holy things, not onely in priuate houses, but also in Churches, God himselfe doth warrant vs, who commanded euen the Iewes themselues (a people most prone to idolatrie, and that after hee had giuen a speciall precept of not hauing, making, or worshipping of idols) to make the images of Angels (the Cherubins & that in the soueraine holiest place of adoration that was in the Temple, and about the Arke, yea and in respect of which sacred images partly, they did (as S. Hierome saith ep. 17. c. 3.) so great reuerence to the holy place called Sancta sanctorum. If they then were warranted and commanded to make, & haue in so great reuerence the images of meere spirits or Angels, whose naturall shape could not be expressed: how much more may wee Christians haue and reuerence the images of Christ, his B. mother, the Apostles and other Saints being men whose shape may be expressed? So doth saith the said Nicene Councel argue against the Heretikes which at that time where the Aduersaries of images.

The 2 Councell of Nice was gathered about image-breakers.

And note here, that eight hundred yeares agoe, they were straight counted Heretickes that began to speake against images, and that Councell was called purposely for them, and condemned them for Heretikes, and confirmed the former ancient reuerence and vse of sacred images, which began euen in our Sauiours time or little after, when good religious folke for loue and reverence made his image, namely the woman that he heald of the bloudy flux which image was also approued by miracles as the Ecclesiasticall historie telleth, and namely Eusebius Eccl. hist. lib. 7. c. 14. * who also witnesseth that the image of Peter and Paul were in his dayes as you may see also S. Augustine (*li. d. concens. In whom also (lib. 7. ep. 109.) you may see the true vse of images, and that they are the books of the vnlearned, and that the people ought to be instructed and taught the right vse of them, euen as at this day good Catholike folk do vse them to helpe and increase their deuotion, in all Catholike Churches: yea the Lutherans themselues receiue them still S. Damascene wrote three books in defense of sacred images against the foresaid Heretikes.

CARTVV. 5. [21. From Idols.] The Popiſh Idols receiue a deadly ſtroke in this place alſo: For Iohn ſpeaking in the verſe before of one true and ever-living God, here oppoſeth Idols unto that true God: ſo that in all holy worſhip it is an Idoll whatſoever is not the true and everliving God. Our translating εἰδώλων of the word idols by an Image, is before warranted, and your contentious quarrelling about words, laid open. And therefore our translating Idols now, for Images in times paſt, is no correction, but either a declaration of the indifferent acceptation of both the words: or a proofe of our good care not to offend you, which in a matter indifferent, haue choſen that rather whereat your peeviſh and wayward ſpirits ſhould be leaſt moved. We confeſſe, that in the uſe of our ſpeech, an Idoll is a reproachfull thing, and an Image not ſo; but in the Greek tongue (whereupon the life of the cauſe lyeth) and even in the Latine tongue (whereupon you would lay the weight of it) an Idoll and an Image are one and the ſame; wherein the truth is ſo cleere, that your ſelues heerein haue been conſtrained to put the neck of your own opinion into the halter, in confeſſing that the orignall and etymologie of the word Idoll may ſo be taken in the Greek as we haue tranſlated: and therefore your diſcourſe of diuers things called Images and not Idols, and contrariwiſe; is but a ſmoake in the eyes of the unlearned, which haue no further knowledge then of their mother tongue. Not to ſpeak that all this is but coleworts, as is alſo your ſilly diſtinction of the Images of Gentiles and Chriſtians; likewiſe of the Cherubines Exod.25. of the Image of Chriſt made by the fluxed woman, Euſeb.lib.7.c.14. of Gregorie lib.7. epiſt.109. which affirmeth that Images are for bookes to the unlearned.

Vpon Act. 19.35. and Rom.11.4. 1.Theſſ.1.9

Look Rom. 1.23. Look Heb. 9.5.

Of like trumpery and mind to beguile the ſimple it is, that is alleaged out of the ſecond Councell of Nice, Gregorie, and Damaſcene: Firſt, for that theſe authorities neither agree between themſelues, nor with you; For your own Pope Gregorie, heerein agreeing with the Lutherans condemneth the Papiſts: in that hee being of mind (with the Lutherans) that onely they ſhould be ſet up, was not either of your or the Councels mind, that they ſhould be worſhipped.

C. peclatum de conſecr. diſt.3. c.venerand.

Secondly, for that they are not onely inferiour in authority and antiquity to the Authorities which haue been before alleaged againſt Church Imagerie; but even unto the Councell of Epheſus gathered under Conſtantine the ſecond, for the diſgracing whereof that unlearned and barbarous Councell of Nice was aſſembled: whoſe arguments were ſo ridiculous, and myracles for eſtabliſhing of Church Imagery ſo fabulous, as it is marvell it ſhould haue credite with him that hath a corne either of good learning, or ſtaid iudgement.

As for Hierom.epiſt.17. c.3. which affirmeth that the holy place was reverenced in reſpect of the Cherubines that were in it, it maketh nothing for Images; conſidering that hee ſheweth there that that reverence of the holy place, grew as well in regard of the Propitiatory, the Golden Altar, and Aarons rod, as in reſpect of the Cherubines. There being therefore no ſuch Image as the Papiſts plead for in theſe things, it is evident that the reverence roſe in reſpect that they were of moſt high ſignification, as appointed by the Lord himſelfe, and not in regard of any frame or ingraving in them. Again, it is one thing to reverence the holy things of God (which we do all, and even the loweſt of them) and another thing to worſhip them which we deny ought to be given to the holieſt and higheſt of them. And how Ierome ſtandeth affected in this cauſe of Imagery, may appeare by his care to tranſlate into his works Epiphanius Epiſtle touching the pulling down the Image of Chriſt out of a Church.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF IOHN THE APOSTLE.

CHAP. I.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 5 AND now I beſeech thee Lady, not as writing a new commandement to thee, but that which we haue had | from the beginning, that we loue one another.

RHEM.1. [5. From the beginning.] This is the rule of a Chriſtian Catholike man, to walke in in that faith and worſhip of God which he hath receiued from the beginning. Which is, that which we now call according to the Scriptures, the tradition of the Apoſtles: that which is come to us from man to man, from Biſhop to Biſhop, and ſo from the Apoſtles. So ſhall a faithfull man auoid ſeducers that riſe vp in euery age, teaching new doctrine.

CARTVV 1, [6 From the beginning.] It is the truth (indeed) that we haue receiued from the beginning; Alſo, that the doctrine receiued from the beginning is come to vs from man, to man, from Biſhop to Biſhop, is not denied by us, who acknowledge that there hath been alwaies a Church and a Miniſtery of the Church; but that this delivery from hand to hand under the Goſpell, hath been in any one Nation, much leſſe in any one Citie, we vtterly deny. Likewiſe that the certaineſt and moſt undoubted meaſure and ſquare to know what is from the beginning, is that it be that which hath been delivered from man to man, wee do deny, making the Canon call Scripture the true touch-ſtone onely whereby the antiquity of true doctrine may be diſcerned. And therefore our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Haue you not read, that he which made them at the beginning &c. And even in this place, what is it which Iohn affirmeth to haue been from the beginning, is it not expreſly ſet downe, to be the loue one of another: a matter not left to the report of men (how godly ſoever) but written by the ſpirit of God in the holy Scriptures. Math. 19. 4

Verſe 10. If any man come to you, and bring not this doctrine: receiue him not into the houſe, nor ſay, God ſaue you, unto him.

RHEM. 2. [10. This doctrine.] The Apoſtles, and true Paſtors their lawfull ſucceſſours, and the Church of God in holy Councell, vſe to ſet down the true doctrine in thoſe points. Which Heretikes call into controuerſie. Which being once done and declared to the faithfull, they need no other marke or deſcription to know an Heretike or falſe teacher by, but that he commeth with an other doctrine then that which is ſet down to them. Neiher can the Heretikes ſhift themſelues, as now a dayes they would do, ſaying, O let us firſt be proued Heretickes by the Scriptures, let them define an Heretike. No this is not the Apoſtles rule. Many a good honeſt ſheppheard knoweth a woolfe, that cannot define him, but the Apoſtle ſaith, If hee bring not this ſet doctrine hee is a ſeducer, So holy Church ſaith, Chriſt is really in the B. Sacrament, vnder forme of bread and wine &c. If therefore hee bring not this doctrine, hee is a ſeducer, and an Hereticke, and wee muſt auoide him, whether in his own definitions and cenſures hee ſeeme to himſelfe an Hereticke or no:

To bring willfully another doctrine then the Catholike Church ſetteth downe, is alwayes a marke of ſeducers and hertickes.

CARTVV. 2. [10. This doctrine.] Let him (hardly) goe in account of an Hereticke which cometh with another doctrine then that which the Church doth ſet downe. Provided that he doe it (as did S. Iohn) out of the word of God. And that it be in ſome principall and chiefe poynt of doctrine; ſeeing he is not by and by an hereticke which diſſenteth from every truth the Church holdeth. And albeit it be not required of every Chriſtian to define who is an hereticke, yet that a good honeſt Sheppard ſhould be able to doe it, thereby it is evident, that without it he is not able plainly to teach others to know who is an hereticke, which belongeth unto a good Sheppard howſoever it be iudged needleſſe in a Popiſh Sheppard, or Morrow-Maſſe-Prieſt, to whom it is enough if he haue a ſtrong paire of armes whereupon his ſtrengthleſſe God may ſtay it ſelfe. And how could you more cleerely haue proued your ſelues in the number of the Seducers which ſhall goe before the latter comming of our Saviour Chriſt, then in making this your marke to know your Church by, that it ſaith, Chriſt is really in the Sacrament, without the which you could not ſo eaſily haue been known for the falſe Prophets our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh of, which ſhall ſay, Here is Chriſt, There is Chriſt. And was it not enough that you ſhould ſtay untill other men diſcover your folly, but that your ſelues muſt go and proclaime your owne folly in the middeſt of the ſtreets? Mat. 24. 23

RHEM. 3. [10. Receiue him not.] Though in ſuch times and places: where the communitie or moſt part be infected, neceſſitie often forceth the faithfull to conuerſe with ſuch in worldly affaires, to ſalute them, to eate and ſpeake with them, and the Church by decree of Councell, for the more quietneſſe of timerous conſciences hee prouideth, that they incurre not excommunication or other cenſures for excommunicating in worldly affaires with any in this kinde, except they bee by name excommunicated or declared to bee Heretikes: yet euen in worldly conuerſation or ſecular acts of our life, we muſt auoid them as much as we may, becauſe their familiaritie is many wayes contagious and noyſome to good men, namely to the ſimple: but in matter of religion, in praying, reading their bookes, hearing their ſermons, preſence at their ſeruice, partaking of their Sacraments, and all other communicating with them in ſpirituall things, it is a great damnable ſinne to deale with them.

When and wherein to converſe with hereticks, is tollerable: when and wherein it is damnable.

CARTVV. 3. [10. Receiue him not.] This note free from matter of controuerſie, is yet not free from confuſion and ſenceleſſe ſpeech.

RHEM. 4. [10. Nor ſay, God ſaue you.] S. Ireneus (li. 3. c. 3.) reporteth a notable ſtorie of this holy Apoſtle touching this point, out of S. Polycarpus, which is this. There be, ſome (ſaith he) that haue heard Polycarpe ſay that when Iohn the diſciple of our Lord was going to Epheſus, into a bath, to waſh himſelfe, and ſaw Cerinthus the Hereticke within the ſame, he ſuddenly ſkipt out, ſaying he feared leſt the bath ſhou'd fall, becauſe Cerinthus the enemie of truth was within. So ſaith he of S. Iohn, and addeth alſo a like worthy example of Polycarpe himſelfe: who on a time meeting Marcion the Heretike, and the ſaid Marcion calling vpon him, and asking whether he knew him not: Yes, quoth Polycarpe, I know the for Satans ſonne and heire. So great feare (ſaith S. Ireneus) had the Apoſtles and their diſciples to communicate in word onely, with ſuch as were adulterers or corrupters of the truth: as S. Paul alſo warned, when he ſaid, A man that is an Heretike, after the firſt and ſecond admonition auoid. So far Ireneus. If then, to ſpeake with them or ſalute them, is ſo earneſtly to be auoided according to this Apoſtles example and doctrine: what a ſinne is it to flatter them, to ſerue them, to marry with them, and ſo forth?

S. Iohn wold not bee in one bath with Cerinthus the hereticke. The like zeale of S. Policarpe and other Apoſtolike men, is not communicating with Hertickes.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 5. MY deereſt, thou doeſt faithfully whatſoeuer thou workeſt on the brethren, ‡ and that upon ſtrangers.

RHEM. 1. [5. And that vpon ſtrangers.] A great grace to be beneficiall to ſtrangers, ſpecially to them that be of our Catholike faith and ſuffer for the ſame.

Verse 9. I had written perhaps to the Church: but he that loveth to beare ‡ primacy among them, Diotrephes doth not receiue us.

RHEM. 2. [9. Primacy among them.] It ſeemeth (ſaith S. Bede) he was an Arch hereticke or proud Sect maiſter.

Verse 10. For this cauſe, if I come, ‡ I will advertiſe his workes which hee doth: with malicious words chatting againſt us, and as though theſe things ſuffice him not: neither himſelfe doth receiue the brethren, and them that do receiue, he prohibiteth, and caſteth out of the Church.

RHEM. Commonebo, ὑπομνήσω. That is, I will rebuke them and make them knowen to bee wicked. Bede.

RHEMIST.

Mat. 13. Mat. 10. Mat. 13. Ioh. 19. Euſeb. hiſt. lib. c. 18.

IN the Goſpell theſe are called Fratres Ieſu, the brethren of Ieſus, Iames and Ioſeph, and Simon, and Iude. Their father is called Alphæus, where Iames is termed, Iames of Alphæus: and their mother, Maria Iacobi minoris, Maria the mother of Iames the yonger and of Ioſeph. Which Mary in an other place being called Maria Cleophæ, wee perceiue their father was named both Alphæus and alſo Cleophas, And that this Cleophas was brother to Ioſeph our Ladies husband. Hegeſippus* telleth vs. Therefore becauſe Ioſeph was called the father of Chriſt, his brothers children, were called the brethren, that is (according to the cuſtom of the Scripture alſo) the kinſmen of our Lord: and not becauſe they were the children of Ioſeph himſelfe by an other wife, much leſſe (as Heluidius the Heretike did blaſphemy) by our B. Lady the perpetuall virgin Mary. Howbeit ſome good authors ſay, that their mother Mary was the naturall ſiſter of our Lady, and that therefore they are called, Fratres Domini the brethren of our Lord.

Howſoeuer that be, three of them are reckoned among the 12. Apoſtles, Iames, and Simon Cananeus, and Iude. Yea and that they were ſomewhat more then Apoſtles, though leſſe then Peter, S. Paul ſignifieth, where he ſaith ſpeaking of himſelfand Barnabas: as alſo the other Apoſtles, and the brethren of our Lord and Cephas 1. Cor. 9.

Luc 6. Mat. 10. Mat. 10. Mar. 3.

And as S. Luke calleth this Iude, Iude of Iames, ſo he calleth himſelfe in this Epiſtle of his, Iude the ſeruant of Ieſus Chriſt, and the brother of Iames, S. Matthew, and S. Marke do call him Thaddæus, as Lebbæus alſo in the Greek. His feaſt and his brother Simons together, the Church keepeth Octob. 28. called Simons and Indes day.

His Epiſt. is an Inuectiue againſt all Heretikes (as it were a commentarie of 2. Pet. 2.) and namely (as *S. Aug. hath told vs) againſt thoſe, which miſconſtred S. Pauls Epiſtles and held Onely faith, whom he calleth therefore, Men that transferre or peruert the grace of God into riotouſneſſe, v. 4. exhorting Catholikes to be conſtant and vnmoueable from their old faith, and to contend for the keeping thereof verſ. 3. and verſ. 20. For, heretikes (ſaith hee) ſegregate themſelues from the Church and from her faith. v. 19.

CART VV. In the ſecond Section how falſe it is that they ſay this Iames and Iude were ſomewhat more then the reſt of the Apoſtles, though leſſe then Peter; it may eaſily appeare both by the priuiledges our Saviour vouchſafed Iohn and Iames the ſons of Zebedie aboue them, and by the expreſſe words of the Apoſtle, which ſhew that Iames, Peter and Iohn were, as it were, the pillars amongſt the reſt of the Apoſtles. And therefore the words 1. Cor. 9. As alſo the other Apoſtles, and the brethren of the Lord and Cephas, as they proue no ſuperiority of theſe two aboue the reſt: ſo they proue no preheminence of Peter aboue them. THE CATHOLICKE EPISTLE OF IVDE THE APOSTLE.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 8. IN like manner theſe alſo defile the fleſh, and ‡ deſpiſe dominion, and blaſpheme maieſty.

RHEM. 1. [8. Deſpiſe dominion.] Such be hereticks that will not be ſubiect to any ſuperiour, or that refuſe to obey the lawes either of Spirituall or Temporall rulers, in which kind (ſpecially in blaſpheming the ſupreme Spirituall Magiſtrate) the Proteſtants do paſſe.

CART VV. 1. [8. Deſpiſe dominion.] We honour Church Governours as our Fathers in the Lord: but the Pope, which is a Church-tyrant, we deteſt. Likewiſe, we honour temporall Rulers and Princes, although tyrants, whom ſeeing you deſpiſe, and make your drudges when they are moſt pliant unto you, and diſplace them when they ſerue not your humour: it is plaine that Iude in propheſying this, tooke meaſure of the Popiſh Clergie.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 9. When Michaell the Archangell diſputing with the Divell, made altercation ‡ for the body of Moſes: he durſt not inferre iudgement of blaſphemy, but ſaid, our Lord command thee.

RHEM. 2. [9 For the body of Moſes.] When, why, or how this altercation or combate was between S. Michael and the Diuell about Moyſes body, no man can declare, onely this we ſee that many truths and ſtories were kept in the mouths and hearts of the faithfull, that were not written in Scriptures canonicall, as this was among the Iewes. Truthes unwritten, and known by tradition.

CART VV. 2. [9. For the body of Moſes.] That this combat was of the one part by Chriſt, (here as other where called Michael) it appeareth plainly by the ſtory of the old Teſtament, which witneſſeth that Iehovah which went with the children of Iſraell as the Angell of the covenant, buried the body of Moſes. When it was, it may be eaſily gathered of the ſame place: for ſeeing none ever knew the place of Moſes buriall, it muſt needs be, that the contention was before his buriall. Of the other ſide, when Satan knew this to be done, of minde either to doe the people ſome great good, or to keepe them from ſome great evill: who is ſo ſimple-conceited as not to conceiue that the Divell to his uttermoſt would croſſe that counſell of the Lord? If it had been either in the buriall, or after, the Divell, (which is contrary to the ſtory) ſhould haue had the knowledge of it. The cauſe Why the Divell ſtroue, is evident by the counſell of God to keepe his body ſecret from the Iſraelits, leſt (as they were prone to idolatry) they ſhould haue ſhrined it, made Reliques of it, and to their uter deſtruction worſhipped it. How this altercation was, and what words our Saviour Chriſt gaue unto the Divell, although they be not ſpecified in the ſtory of his buriall; yet may they eaſily be gathered out of the Prophet, where theſe words (The Lord rebuke thee Satan) beeing uſed of our Saviour Chriſt in a caſe not unlike this, might regularly and anagogically be gathered to haue been the ſame in this caſe that they were in that. Laſt of all, granting that ſome circumſtance is here noted by S. Iude, that cannot be gathered of any booke of the old Teſtament: yet how little that maketh for the unwritten verities which you lay the ground of out of this and ſuch like places, let the Reader iudge by that which is ſaid before, upon 2. Tim. 3. 8. Dan. 10. 21 Deut. 34. 6. Zach. 3. 2.

Verſe 10. But theſe, what things ſoever certes they are ignorant of, they blaſpheme: and what things ſoever naturally, as dumbe beaſts, they know, in thoſe they are corrupted.

Ignorance maketh heretickes blaſpheme.

RHEM. 3. [10. They blaſpheme.] He ſpeaketh of Heretikes, who being ignorant in Gods myſteries and the diuine doctrine of his Church, when they cannot reproue things, then they fall to execrations, irriſions, and blaſphemies againſt the Prieſts, Church and Sacraments, and whatſoeuer is godly.

CARTVV. 3. [10. They blaſpheme.] Prieſts and Temple, or Prieſts and Sacrifices had beene well yoked together: but Prieſts and Church, or Prieſts and Sacraments, eſpecially vnder the Goſpell, are as evill ſorted and ſuted together, as an old patch vpon a new garment.

Verſe. 11. Woe vnto them which haue gone in the way of Caine: and with the errour of Balaam, haue for reward powred out themſelues, and haue periſhed in the contradiction of Core.

Heretikes reſembled to Caine, Balaam and Core.

RHEM. 4. [11. Cain, Balaam, Core.] The Apoſtle would haue Heretickes ſpecially to bee knowne by the reſemblance they haue firſt to Cain, in that for enuy that his brothers ſeruice and ſacrifice was accepted and his reiected, ſlew his ſaid brother, and was a fugitiue from the face and and citty of God, which is the Church. Secondly by their reſemblance to Balaam: who for mony was induced to curſe Gods people, as couetouſneſſe is commonly the cauſe that firſt maketh Heretikes and falſe Prophets; whereupon S. Auguſtine ſaith. He is an Heretike that for temporall commodities ſake either coineth or followeth new opinions. S. Auguſt. li. de Vtil. cred. c. 1. And laſtly by the reſemblance they haue with the ancient and notorious Schiſmatike Core, and his companions, who forſooke the ordinarie Prieſthood appointed by God, and would needs doe ſacrifice themſelues without lawfull calling.

CARTVV. 4. [11. Caine, Balaam, Core.] Bernards teſtimonie of the Popes Prieſthood is dry: neither taken out of the Lords Sanctuary, nor bearing ſo much as a flower or bud, much leſſe any ripe Almond wherewith he may convince thoſe which take exception to the Popes Vicaridge. The reſt of Caine and Balaam eſpecially (in your owne conſciences) as we ſuppoſe, ſtand farre neerer vnto you and to your Pope, which kill and ſlay, pill and poule ſo paſſingly, as being in time their children, you may well in iniqnity bee eſteemed their Fathers. And as for Cores example, notwithſtanding that therewith you may bleare the eyes of a ſimple Reader: yet to him that in the perſon of Aaron faſtneth his eyes vpon our Saviour Chriſt, of whom alone he was the figure, it may eaſily appeare that you, which ſet your Pope in Aarons place, are guilty of the rebellion of Core, and not we, which maintaine the prerogatiue and dignitie of Prieſthood vnto our Saviour Chriſt alone, to whom by ordinance of his Father it doth belong.

Verſe 19. Theſe are they which ſegregate themſelues, ſenſuall, having not the Spirit.

All heretickes ſegregate themſelues.

RHEM. 5. [19. Theſe are they which ſegregate themſelues.] The conditions of Heretikes in the later dayes, that is, euer ſince Chriſts time, not of theſe onely of our age. For there were many that forſooke Gods Church and ſegregated themſelues, from the fellowſhip of the faithfull euen in the primitiue Church: that wee may the leſſe maruell at theſe mens ſegregating themſelues, and going out from the reſt into ſeuerall ſects, which S. Auguſtine therefore calleth Segregations.

CARTVV. 5. [19. Theſe are they which ſegregate themſelues.] So the cauſe of ſeparation bee good, the ſeparation from a company wherewith we were firſt vnited, cannot bee blamed, much leſſe condemned of hereſie. Looke before vpon 1. Iohn. 2. 19.

THE ARGVMENT OF THE APOCALYPSE OF SAINT IOHN.

RHEMIST.

THAT which the Old Teſtament foretold of Chriſt himſelfe, the Apoſtles could report the fulfilling thereof in the New Teſtament, by way of an hiſtorie, euen from his Conception to his Glorification. But of his Church, they could not doe the like: becauſe in their time it did but begin: being to continue long after them, euen to the end of the world, and then at length to bee glorified as Chriſt her ſpouſe alreadie is. Hereupon God would haue S. Luke to report in the Acts of the Apoſtles, the ſtorie of the Churches beginning, and for the reſt of it to the end, (that we might receiue this benefit alſo by the Apoſtles hands) he would S. Iohn to tell vs of it in this booke by way of a prophecie.

Of

Of whith booke S. Hierom ſaith: The Apocalypſe of S. Iohn hath as many ſacraments or myſteries, as words. Yea more then that, In euerie word there are hid many old and ſundrie ſenſes Therefore it is very little that can here be noted, in reſpect. Yet to giue the good Catholike (whoſe comfort is here) ſome litle helpe, the booke may be deuided into fiue parts. Hier. ad Paulin.

The firſt (after the Proœme) conteineth ſeuen Epiſtles from Chriſt now in glorie, to ſeuen Churches of Aſia, or (for, theſe he maketh all one) to the ſeuen Biſhops of thoſe Churches: meaning not to thoſe onely, but to all his Churches and Biſhops, throughout the world: ſaying therefore in euery one of them, to all in generall: He that hath an eare, let him heare what the Spirit ſaith to the Churches. As alſo in euery one he exhorteth vs to fight manfully (in this ſpirituall warfarre of ours againſt ſinne) for the victorie, and in euery one accordingly promiſeth vs a reward in heauen. But before this, in the beginning of euery one, hee partly commendeth, partly reprehendeth, and exhorteth to penance. Where this is much to be noted and feared, that amogg ſo many, he reproueth ſomewhat in all, ſaue onely in two, which are the ſecond and the ſixth. In the beginning alſo of euery one, he taketh ſome peece out of the apparition going before, to frame thereof his ſtile agreeable to the matter of ech Epiſtle. 1 Part. Ca. 1. 2. 3.

After this admonition to Paſtors and their flocks: the ſecond part followeth, wherein the Church and whole courſe thereof from the beginning to the end, is expreſſed in the opening of a booke in Gods hand and the ſeuen ſeales thereof, by Chriſt, for the which, he ſeeth praiſe ſung now in heauen and earth, not onely to the Godhead, as before, but alſo (after a new manner) to Chriſt according to his Manhood. And here, when he is come to the opening of the laſt ſeale, ſignifying Domeſday, he letteth that matter alone for a while, and to ſpeake more fully yet of the ſaid courſe of the Church he bringeth in another pagent (as it were) of ſeuen Angels with ſeuen Trumpets. The effect of both the Seales and Trumpets, is this: that the Church beginning and proceeding, there ſhould be raiſed againſt it, cruell perſecutions, and peſtilent hereſies, and at length after hereſies, a certaine moſt blaſphemous Apoſtaſie, being the next preparatiue to the comming of Antichriſt: After all which, Antichriſt himſelfe in perſon ſhall appeare in the time of the ſixth ſeale, and ſixth trumpet, perſecuting and ſeducing (for the ſhort time of his reigne) more then all before him. The Church notwithſtanding ſhall ſtill continue, and wade through all, becauſe Chriſt her ſpouſe is ſtronger then all theſe aduerſaries, who alſo ſtraight after the ſaid ſixth time, ſhall in the ſeuenth, come in maieſtie and iudge all. 2 Ca. 4. to the 8. Ca. 8. to the 12.

Of the which iudgement, deferring yet a while to ſpeake at large, he doth firſt in the third part intreate more fully of the Deuils working by Antichriſt and his companie againſt the Church, that the iuſtice of Chriſt afterward in iudging, may be more manifeſt. 3 Ca. 12. 13. 14.

At length therefore in the fourth part he commeth to the ſeuen laſt plagues, the ſeuenth of them conteining the finall damnation of the whole multitude, ſocietie or corps of the wicked, from the beginning of the world to the end. Which multitude, in the Goſpell and firſt Epiſtle of this ſame S. Iohn (as alſo in the other Scriptures commonly) is often called Mundus, the world, and here hee calleth it partly, Meretricem, a whore or harlot, becauſe with her concupiſcence ſhe entiſeth the carnall and earthly man away from God: partly, Ciuitatem Babylon, the Cittie of Babylon, becauſe it maketh warre againſt Hieruſalem the cittie of God, and laboureth to hold Gods people captiue in ſinne, as it was ſhadowed in Nebuchodono'r and his Babylonians, leading and holding the Iewes with their Hieruſalem, in captiuitie, vntill Cyrus (in figure of Chriſt) deliuered them. But whether all theſe ſeuen plagues ſhould be vnderſtood (as the ſeuenth) of Domeſday it ſelfe, it is hard to define. More like it is, that the firſt ſixe are to go before Domeſday: but whether corporally and literally (ſo as Moyſes plagued Egypt) or rather to ſpiritually, it is more hard to define. Yet it ſeemeth more eaſie, to vnderſtand them corporally, as alſo the plagues wherewith Elias and his fellow ſhall in the time of Antichriſt plague the wicked (which peraduenture ſhall be the ſame laſt plagues) whereof we read in this booke c. 11. v. 6. But not content to haue deſcribed thus the damnation of the whole adulterers and blouddy ſocietie, hee doth alſo expreſly report of their three grand Captaines damnation, which are theſe, Antichriſt, and his Falſe prophet, and the Deuill himſelfe the author of all this miſchiefe. 4 Ca. 15. to the 21. 1. Ioh. 2. Apoc. 17.

Finally, on the other ſide, in the fifth part he reporteth the vnſpeakable and euerlaſting glory, that the Church after all this ſuffering, ſhall by Chriſt her glorious ſpouſe be aſſumpted vnto. And ſo he concludeth the booke. 5 Ca. 21. 22.

CAP. VV. If (good Reader) it haue appeared vnto thee that theſe Ieſuites in the eaſier bookes of Scripture, as it were in a faire or plaine way, haue notwithſtanding drowned themſelues and others that follow them, and haue fallen, and cauſed others their adherents to fall with them: then I leaue it to be conſidered what will become of them in theſe heights and depths, ſeas and mountaines of ſo great myſteries as this booke is full fraught with. Touching their diſguiſing of Anti-Chriſt and Babylon, by the one to cauſe us to turne our eies from their vncleane bird the Pope; by the other to divert our cogitation from his filthy neſt, which is Rome, it ſhall be more properly anſwered vpon the places which they haue for that purpoſe wreſted. Onely let the Reader note heere how by the Paganiſh word of pagent to note ſo holy and ſacred things, the Ieſuits as they bring their blinde eies to the beholding of theſe things: ſo they come alſo with filthy and prophane hands to handle them.

CHAP. I.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 13. AND in the middes of the seven Candlestickes of gold, one l. like to the Sonne of man, vested in a Priestly garment to the foot, and girded about neere to the pappes with a girdle of gold.

RHEM. 1. [13. Like to the.] It seemeth not to bee Christ himselfe, but an Angell bearing Christs person, and vsing diuers speaches proper to Christ.

CARTVV. 1. [13. Like to the.] Lest any man should doubt whether they bee Idolaters, they take euen a pleasure to translate that to the creatures which is proper to the Creator. For to let passe all other the description here laid downe, whereof euery tittle is in the greatest excellency: how can it be truly said of any created angell, I am α and ω, the first and the last? yea or of any angell at all that I was dead and am aliue? And what need is there, or what example can be shewed of setting foorth a created Angell to challenge those things unto him in the name of Christ, which are Christs alone? The onely colour for this absurd exposition, for that hee is said to bee like unto the sonne of man, rather then the sonne of man, argueth their ignorance, which know not that it is an Hebraisme, to call that often times like, which is the same thing with that whereunto it is compared: and is more effectuall to avow the truth of a thing, then if it had been uttered without the note of likenesse. And you may aswell conclude of the saying of the Apostle, Christ was in the likenesse of man, and in the shape or likeneſse of God, that Christ therefore was neither true man nor true God.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 1 The Apocalypse of Iesus Christ which God gaue him, to make manifest to his seruants the things which must be done quickly: and signified, sending by his Angel to his seruant Iohn,

An admonition to the reader concerning the difficultie of this booke.

RHEM. 2. [1. APOCALYPSE.] Of the Apocalypse thus writeth the ancient father Denys, Bishop of Corinth, as Eusebius alleageth him. li. 2. c. 20. hist. Eccl. Of this booke (saith he) this is my opinion, that the matter thereof is farre more profound then my wit can reach vnto, and I doubt not but almost in euery sentence of it, there lieth hidden a certaine sence exceeding mysticall and marueloꝰ, which though I vnderstand not, yet I conceiue that vnder the words there is a deepe meaning, and I measure not the matter by reason, but attribute all to faith, taking it to bee more high and diuine, then I can by cogitation compriſe: not reproouing that which I vnderstand not, but therefore I admire with reuerence because my wit cannot attaine to it. Againe S. Augustine saith, that in the Apocalypse many things are obscurely spoken, to exercise the minde of the reader: and yet some few things left euident, that through them a man may with labour search out the rest, specially for that the author repeateth the same things in diuers sorts, that seeming to speake of sundry matters, indeed is found but to vtter the same things diuers wayes, lib. 20. de Ciuit. Dei c. 17. Which wee set down here in the beginning, to warne the good Christian Reader, to bee humble and wise in the reading both of all other holy Scriptures and namely of this divine and deepe prophecie: giuing him further to vnderstand, that we will in our Annotations, according to our former trade and purpose, onely or cheefely note vnto the studious, such places as may be vsed by Catholickes, or abused by Heretickes, in the controuersies of this time, and some other also that haue speciall manner of edification, and that as briefely as may be, for that the volume groweth great.

Numbers mysticall.

RHEM. 3. [4. To the 7. Churches,] That certaine numbers may be obserued as significatiue and mysticall, it is plaine by many places of holy Scriptures, and by ancient Doctors speciall noting of the same to many purposes. Whereby we see the rashnes of our Aduersaries, in condemning generally all religious respect of certain numbers in our prayers, facts, or actions. Namely the number of Seuen, is mysticall, and propheticall, perfect, and which (as S. Augustine saith) the Church knoweth by the Scriptures, to be specially dedicated to the holy Ghost. and to appertaine to spirituall mundation, as in the Prophets appointing of Naaman to wash seuen times in Iordan, and the sprinkling of the bloud seuentimes against the tabernacle, li 4. quæst. in num. quæst. 23. See li. 5. c. 5. de Gen. ad lit. &

li. 5.

li.5.quæst.in Deuter.q.42. All these visions stand vpon Sevens, seuen Churches, seuen Angels, seuen starres, seuen spirits, seuen candelsticks, seuen lampes, seuen trumpets, seuen vials, seuen hornes of the Lambes, seuen hilles, seuen thunders, seuen heads of the dragon, signifying the Deuill: seuen of the beast that is antichrist: seuen of the beast that the harlot rid vpon: finally the nnmber also of the visions is specially marked to be seuen, in this booke, and euery time that this number is vsed in this prophecie, it hath a mysterie and a more large meaning, then the nature of that number is precisely and vulgarly taken for. As when he writeth to seuen Churches, it is to bee vnderstood of all the Churches in the world: as the seuen Angels, for all the Angels or Gouernors of the whole Catholike Church: and so forth in the rest, because the number of Seuen, hath the perfection of vniuersalitie in it, as S. Augustine saith li.5.quæst.in Deut.q 42.

The number of seuen mysticall: specially in the booke.

CAR TVV. 2. [4. To the seaven Churches.] If the number of seven. ten. &c. in the Scripture haue a perfection of vniversality in it, and signifie more then the words themselues in proper signification do beare, then it is meere sottery of our adversaries thereupon to ground a iust and precise number of praiers. Of the other side, when the scripture speaking of the number of seven, ten, &c. meaneth the precise and iust number it nameth and no more: for so much as it applyeth the number according to the matter, and frameth not the matter to the number, it is likewise evident that our adversaries, which frame praiers to a number, and not the number of praiers to the things they haue to pray for, doe it superstitiously, and beside all warrant of Scripture. Rather herein they follow the witches and Sorcerers, which ordinarily tie themselues to certaine numbers: As did Balaam that notable witch and predecessor of yours, who commanded seven Altars to bee built, seven bullocks and seven rams to be brought for sacrifice. And notwithstanding that his counsels succeeding not the first and second time he ought in godly increase of faith and repentance to haue multiplied his sacrifices (for his altars were too many at the first) yet still hee would not shift an inch from the number of his sacrifices, but abideth upon the iump of seven. And when the Iesuites themselues confesse that these numbers of seuen &c. are as well used in the Scripture to note things that are evill, as to report things which are good: and that it speaketh as well of seuen divels as of seven Angels, of seven heads of the beast, as of seven hornes of the lamb: but that they are given up to a mad and senceless minde, how is it that they understand not that, what credit their praiers get by these numbers applyed to good things, they loose againe in that the same are also used unto evill. You are also deceaved in that by seven Churches, whereunto Iohn wrote, you esteeme all the Churches in the world to bee understood. For he calleth them seven because there were so many principall Churches in the lesse Asia: for which cause he nameth those seven.

Num.23. 14.29.

Mat.12. 45. Mark.16. 9. Apo.17.3.

True it is that the doctrine written to them belongeth to all Churches: but that is proved by this that all are bidden to heare what the spirit writeth to those Churches, and by good consequence and collection, forasmuch as the same doctrine belongeth to all Churches which appertaineth unto one; not by any trope of seven for all. And if you had remembred your selues well, you would not haue given Rome such a blow, as in effect to say, that Iohn writing to all the Churches in the world forgat to name the Church of Rome, which you will needs haue to bee the Ladie and Princesse of them all.

RHEM. 4. [4. From the 7. spirits.] The holy Ghost may be here meant, and so called for his seuenfold gifts and graces, as some expositors think, but it seemeth more probable that hee speaketh of the holy Angels, by comparing this to the like in the 5. Chapter following: where hee seemeth to call these, the seuen spirits sent into the world, as S. Paul to the Hebrewes (c.1.14.) speaketh of Angels, and so the Protestants take it in their commentaries: which wee note, because thereupon they must needs confesse that the Apostle here giueth or wisheth grace & peace, not from God onely, but also from his Angels: though that benediction cometh one way of God, and an other way of his Angels or Saints, being but his creatures. And so they may learn, that the faithfull often ioyning in one speach, God and our Lady, our Lord and any of his Saints, to helpe vs, or blesse vs, is not superstitious, but an Apostolicall speech, and so the Patriarch said (Gen.48.v.16.) The Angel that deliuereth me from all euils, blesse the children. See the Annot. Act.15.28.

Grace and peace from God and the holy angels.

God and our Lady saue vs and the like.

CAR TVV. 4. [4. From the seaven spirits.] By the seven spirits that the angels are not understood, but onely the Holy Ghost which is the third person in Trinity, it is evident by comparison of this place with other: For these seven spirits are expounded to be the seven burning lamps which proceed from the father and the sonne, it being an vsuall thing to compare the Holy Ghost unto fire. But most cleerely it appeareth where these seven spirits are evidently distinguished from the foure beasts which are the Angels. Also that notwithstanding they are in the midest of the Throne, yet are they sent into all the earth; whereas the Angels cannot be both in heaven and earth together. Last of all, for that these seven spirits are defined to be the seven eies and seven hornes of Christ the lamb of God. Now it were absurd that the eies our Saviour seeth with, should be the eies of Angels, or that the strength whereof he is strong, should be the strength of Angels: But it is a manifest Catholike doctrine, that the strength and wisdom of the Holy Ghost is the strength and wisdome of the Sonne, as proceeding as well from him as from the Father. Neither doth the number of seaven hinder the interpretation, as that which noteth an infinite variety of gifts, and not any multiplicity of persons; a cleft in his graces, and not a division in his substance. And as all those are pregnant reasons to proue that there can be no other meaning of this, then in carrying these words to the third person: so is it not onely the iudgement of your owne Abbot, but even of that Ambrose whose authority you so willingly use in this booke. Whereby it appeareth what great need you haue to wrest this place for prayer to Angels: which making no conscience how you expound the word, if you haue any ancient Writer to leane upon, doe notwithstanding for vantage forsake both them and your owne to run after the interpretation of some one of the Protestants, from whom at other times of very peevishnesse, without any gaine unto your cause, you will needes dissent. You should withall haue taken his words, whereby he hedgeth and holdeth you out from reaching Verse.6 And hath made vs * a kingdome and priests to God and his father, to him be glorie and empire for euer and euer. Amen.

How all Christians be both Kings and Priests.

RHEM.5.[6. A kingdom and Priests.] As all that truely serue God, and haue the dominion and superiorie ouer their concupiscences and whatsoeuer would induce them to sinne, bee kings; so all that employ their works and themselues to serue God and offer all their actions as an acceptable sacrifice to him, be Priests. Neuertheless, as if any man thereupon would affirme that there ought to be no other earthly powers or kings to gouerne in worldly affaires ouer Christians, he were a seditious Heretike: euen so are they that vpon this or the like places where all Christians bee called Priests in a spirituall sort, would therefore inferre, that euery one is in proper signification a Priest, or that all Priests bee alike, or that there ought to bee none but such spirituall Priests, for it is the seditious voice of Core, saying to Moyses and Aaron. Let it suffice you, that all the multitude is of holy ones, and the Lord is in them. Why are you extolled ouer the people of the Lord? Num.16.

CARTVV.5.[6. A Kingdome and Priests.] Looke the answer before upon 1. *Pet.*2.5.

*Verse.*10 I was in spirit on the Dominical day, and heard behind me a great voice as it were of a trompet.

RHEM.6.[10. On the Dominicall day.] Many notable points may bee marked here, first, that euen in the Apostles time there were dayes deputed to the seruice of God, and so made holy and different, though not by nature, yet by vse and benediction, from other profane, or (as we call them) worke-dayes.

Difference of holy daies & worke-daies.

Secondly, that the Apostles and faithfull abrogated the Sabboth which was the seuenth day, & made holy day for it, the next day following, being the eight day in count from the creation: and that without all Scriptures, or commandement of Christ that we reade of, yea (which is more) not onely otherwise then was by the Law obserued, but plainly otherwise then was described by God himselfe in the second commandement, yea and otherwise then hee ordained in the first creation, when hee sanctified precisely the Sabboth day, and not the day following. Such great power did Christ leaue to his Church, & for such causes gaue he the holy Ghost to be resident in it, to guide it into all truths euen such as in the scriptures are not expressed. And if the Church had authoritie and inspiration from God, to make Sunday (being a work-day before) an euerlasting holy day: and the Saturday, that before was holy day, now a common work-day: why may not the same Church prescribe and appoint the other feasts of Easter, Whitsuntide, Christmas, and the rest? for the same warrant she hath for the one, that she hath for the other.

Sunday made holiday by the Apostles and the Churches authority.

Other feasts ordained by the Church.

Thirdly, it is to be noted that the cause of this change was, for that now we Christians esteeming more our redemption, then our first creation, haue the holy day which was before the remembrance of Gods accomplishment of the creation of things, now for the memory of the accomplishment of our redemption. Which therefore is kept vpon that day on which our Lord rose from death to life, which was the day after the Saboth, being called by the Iews, vna, or prima Sabbathi, the first of or after the Saboth. Mat.28. *Act.*20.1. *Cor.*16. Fourthly, it is to be marked, that this holy day by the apostles tradition also, was named Dominicus dies our Lords day, or, the Dominike, which is also an old Eccleiastical word in our language, for the name sunday is a heathenish calling, as all other of the weeke dayes be in our language: some imposed after the name of planets, as in the Romans time: some by the name of certaine Idols that the Saxons did worship, and to which they dedicated their dayes before they were Christians. Which names the Church vsed not but hath appointed to call the first day, the Dominike, after the Apostle here: the other by the name of Feries, vntill the last of the weeke, which she calleth by the old name, Sabboth, because that was of God, and not by imposition of the heathen. See the marginall Annotation *Luc.*24.1.

As Saturday was in memory of the creation, so Sunday of Christs resurrection.

The Church vseth not the Heathenish names of daies, but Dies Dominicus, feria, Sabbatum.

Lastly obserue, that God reuealeth such great things to Prophets, rather vpon holy dayes, and in times of contemplation, sacrifice, and prayer, then on other prophane dayes, and therefore as S. Peter (*Act.*10.) had a reuelation at the sixt houre of prayer, and Zacharie (*Luc.*1.) at the houre of incense, and Cornelius (*Act.*10.) when he was at his prayers the ninth houre, so here S. Iohn noteth that he hath all these maruelous visions vpon a Sunday.

God giueth greater grace at holy times of prayer and fasting.

CARTVV.6.[10. On the Dominicall day.] To the first note in this verse we answer, that it appeareth there was one day, and not dayes deputed to the seruice of God. The second note is Coleworts before obiected and answered vpon *Math.*15.9. & Acts 20. saying that as it falleth out with fooles, their former words being foolish, their latter are mad: so doth it with these men, in saying, that the Apostles ordained the Lords day, not onely otherwise then was by the Law obserued, but plainly otherwise then was prescribed by God himselfe in the second commandement: for euen according to their corrupt diuision of the commandements, the Lords prescript of the Sabboth, is not in the second, but in the third commandement. And if this be not their ignorance more then childish; let them tell us what they meane by Gods prescript of the Sabboth in the second commandement. To the third, fourth, and fifth notes we willingly yeeld.

Priestly garments.

RHEM.7.[13. Vested in a Priestly garment.] Hee appeared in a long garment or vestment proper vnto Priests (for so the word poderes, doth signifie, as *Sap.*18.24.) and that was most agreeable for him that represented the person of Christ the high Priest, and appeared to Iohn being a most holy Priest, and who is specially noted in the Ecclesiasticall historie for his Priestly garment called, petalon or lamina, *Euseb.li.*3. *hist.Eccl c.*25. & li 5.*c.*23.

CARTVV.6.[13. Vested in a Priestly garment.] The Greek word signifieth onely a garment comming down from the necke to the foote, which agreeth as well to his Princely as to his Priestly estate. And to his Princely estate so much rather then Priestly, as the Priestly garments being onely proper vnto Aarons Priesthood (which vanishing at the comming of our Saviour Christ, as the shadow

As for Iohns leaſe on his forehead to proue his Prieſthood; it is eaſily blowne away: for it being noted of Euſebius, as a ſpeciall apparrell of his; even thereby it appeareth to haue been no Prieſtly ornament: conſidering that ſo the reſt of the Apoſtles (ſaid of the* Ieſuits to be Prieſts) ſhould haue worne ſuch a leaſe as well as he. And the Ieſuites are herein evill adviſed, as forgetting that the leaſe was the upper marke of the high Prieſt, and not common to all the Prieſts. Wherefore it is dangerous to Peters ſupremacie, which is the Idoll they ſo greatly ſtriue for, that any ſhould weare this leaſe but Peter, much more that Iohn ſhould weare it and not Peter.

RHEM 8. [20. The ſeuen ſtarres.] The Biſhops are the ſtarres of the Churches, as the Churches themſelues are the golden candelſtickes of the world: no doubt to ſignifie, that Chriſt preſerueth the truth onely in and by the lawfull Biſhops and Catholike Church, and that Chriſts truth is not to be ſought for, in corners or conuenticles of Heretickes but at the Biſhops hands, and * vpon the candelſtick which ſhineth to all in the houſe.

CARTVV. 8. [20. The ſeuen ſtarres.] We grant that the truth is preſerued in and by the Biſhops: but that it is onely preſerued in and by them, is more then the word ſtarres, aſcribed vnto them, is able to iuſtifie. For although it do more plentifully agree to them to ſhine like ſtarres: yet the Apoſtle communicateth this with all the faithfull, that they are like ſtarres, ſhining amiddeſt a perverſe and froward generation. And our Saviour Chriſt termeth all his faithfull followers the ſalt and light of the world; not the Biſhops onely, but the reſt of the Church alſo, as your ſelues haue expounded it:

Math. 5. 13 14.

RHEM. 9. [20. The Angels of the Churches.] The whole Church of Chriſt hath S. Michael for her keeper ard Protector, and therefore keepeth his holy day onely by name, among all Angels. And as earthly kingdomes haue their ſpeciall Angell Protectors, as wee ſee in the 10. Chapter of Daniel: ſo much more the particular Churches of Chriſtendom. See S. Hierom in 34. Ezech. But of thoſe Angels it is not here meant, as is manifeſt. And therefore Angels here muſt needs ſignifie the Prieſts or Biſhops ſpecially of the Churches here, and in them all the gouernours of the whole and of euery particular Church of Chriſtendom. They are called Angels, for that they are Gods meſſengers to us, interpreters of his will, our keepers and directors in religion, our interceſſours, the carriers and offerers of our prayers to him, and mediatours vnto him vnder Chriſt, and for theſe cauſes and for their great dignitie they are here and in * other places of Scripture called Angels.

Biſhops and Prieſts are called Angels

Malac. 2. 7

CARTVV. 9. [20. The Angels of the Churches.] It is true that the whole Church hath Michael for her protector. But it is not Saint Michael: but the moſt Holy, and Saint of all Saints, even Ieſus Chriſt, who alone is called Michael in the holy Scriptures both Old and New. For the very name it ſelfe (Who is like vnto the mighty God) declareth that this Angell is the Angell of the Covenant. Whereof as the Reader may ſee ſomewhat before vpon Iude, verſ. 9. ſo is it better to bee ſeen in this place of Daniel which is quoted of the Ieſuites, where hee is called the firſt of the Princes, that is to ſay of the Angels which haue gouernement in the world, and is ſo approued to bee by the effect, in that he helped the Angell ſent of Embaſſage to Daniel. But moſt plainly and euidently in the end of the ſame chapter, where it is ſaid that there is none that ſtood with him for reſiſtance againſt the enemy, and defence of the Church, but Michael onely. Other both men and Angels therefore helping the Church miniſterially, beſide the Angell which was ſent to Daniel, it muſt needs follow that Michael which onely ſtood by him and ſtrengthened him, muſt needs bee eſteemed to haue helped, not as a creature, but as the Creator. Which is yet more euident, in that he is called there, the Prince of all the Church, a title peculiar vnto our Saviour Chriſt, eſpecially ſeeing all the Angels are our fellow-ſeruants. Ierom in Ezech. 34. by Angels in this place of the Apocalypſe, vnderſtandeth the Celeſtiall miniſtring Spirits: but maketh no manner of mention of any worſhip to be given vnto them. You therefore that reject Ieromes interpretation of this place, may be aſhamed ſo ſtrainedly to picke a quarrell here, to ſpeake of the worſhip of Angels without any aſſiſtance of proofe either diuine or humane.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 1 AND ‡ to the Angel of the Church of Epheſus write, Thus ſaith he which holdeth the ſeuen ſtares in his right hand, which walketh in the middes of the ſeuen candleſtikes of gold.

RHEM. 1. [1. To the Angel.] That which before he willed him o write to the Church, he now willeth to bee written to the Angels or Biſhops of the ſame onely, where we ſee it is all one, to the Church, and to the head or gouernour thereof.

CARTVV. 1. [1. To the Angell.] Let the Ieſuites tell us what mould this reaſon is of: Letters written to the Church are directed to the Angel: therefore the Church and the Angell are all one. The Letters written to the Senate, are directed to the Conſull, therefore the Conſull and Senate are all one. Whereas the letters to the Church are therefore directed to the Angell, becauſe hee is the meeteſt man by office by whom the Church may underſtand the tenure of the Letter. If you looke for ſome advantage by this ſophiſme, woe be unto that cauſe that goeth upon ſuch crutches. If nothing be gained thereby, twice woe be unto that that is light upon ſuch ſimple ſupporters. And indeed wee ſee not how it maketh for the Popes headſhip over all Churches in the world, if there be a head in every Church of little Aſia.

Verſe. 4 But I haue againſt thee a fewe things, becauſe ‡ thou haſt left thy firſt charitie.

RHEM. 2. [4. Thou haſt left.] By this we ſee is plainly refuted that which the Heretikes hold that a man once in grace or charity can neuer fall from it.

CARTVV. 2. [4. Thou haſt left.] O noble refuters! As if by charity were not meant the particular vertue of zeale, and not that mother vertue of loue wherein all vertues are found. Otherwiſe how could this Angell or Biſhop haue had patience and been diligent in confuting the errors of the Church deceivers, whereof the Holy Ghoſt giveth teſtimony, if hee had fallen vtterly from grace, and from the generall vertue of charity? Beſide that, who hath blinded your eyes that you cannot ſee that the Holy Ghoſt chargeth him not ſimply that he was fallen from charity, but that he was fallen from his former charity, in that he was not ſo zealous as he had been ſome time before.

Verſe. 9 I know thy tribulation and thy ‡ pouertie, but thou art rich: and thou art * blaſphemed of them that ſay them ſelues to be Iewes and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan.

RHEM. 3. [9. Pouertie.] This Church repreſenteth the ſtate of them that are ſpoiled of their goods, empriſoned, and manifoldly afflicted for the Catholike faith.

Verſe. 11 He that hath an eare, let him heare what the ſpirit ſaith to the Churches He that ſhall ouercome, ſhall not be hurt of the ‡ ſecond death.

RHEM. 4 [11. Second death.] The death of the body is the firſt death: the death of the ſoule the ſecond, which martyrs are ſureſt to eſcape of all men.

Verſe. 23. And her children I will kill vnto death, and all the Churches ſhall know that I am he that ſearcheth the reines and hearts, and I will giue to every one of you ‡ according to his workes.

RHEM. 5. [22 According to his works.] Who ſeeth not here that good works deſerue ſalnation, as ill works damnation, and that it is not faith alone that God rewardeth, but that faith which worketh by charitie.

CARTVV. Looke the anſwer before vpon Math. 25. 35.

ANNOTATIONS.

Chriſts care of his Church.

RHEM. 6. [1. Holdeth the ſeuen.] Much to bee obſerued that Chriſt hath ſuch care ouer the Church and the Biſhops thereof, that hee is ſaid here to beare them vp in his right hand, and to walke in the middes of them: no doubt to vphold and preſerue them and to guide them in all truth.

CARTVV. 6. [1. Holdeth the ſeuen.] S.

Verſe. 2 I knowe thy workes and labour, and thy penance: and that thou canſt not beare euill men, and haſt tryed them which ſay them ſelues to be Apoſtles, and are not, and haſt found them liars:

Speciall vertues required in a Biſhop.

RHEM. 7. [2. Thy works, labour, patience &c.] Things required in a Biſhop, firſt, good works and great patience in tribulation, next, zeale and ſharp diſcipline toward offenders is here commended in them, thirdly, wiſdom and diligence in triall of falſe Apoſtles and preachers comming in ſheepskinnes: where is ſignified the watchfull prouidence that ought to be in them, that Hereticks enter not into their flockes.

CARTVV. 7. [2. Thy Workes, labour, patience, &c.] If there were no other example but your ſelues, you alone are proofe enough of the neceſſitie of patience in him that ſhould deale with you. For what ignorance and Idiotiſme is it to divide the things required in a Biſhop, firſt into good workes and patience: next, into zeale and ſharpe diſcipline. &c. thirdly, into wiſedome and diligent triall: for zeale and diligence to try, &c. are good workes as well as patience. As if one ſhould part a man, firſt into his body and his legge: ſecondly, into his arme and his thigh: thirdly, into his eye and his eare. For by the word workes our Saviour ſetteth downe the whole, which afterwards he purſueth in the parts. And it is yet more ſottiſh, for that by workes the Apoſtle underſtandeth not onely the good workes of the Church, but alſo the evill. It being as much as if he had ſaid, There is nothing hidden from mee of that which thou doeſt, whether good or bad. Beſide that, it ſavoureth of great ignorance to make wiſedome and knowledge how to execute his office, the leaſt part, which is rather the firſt and principalleſt in a Biſhop: the other things being required of all Chriſtians, and this proper onely to a Biſhop. But it may be you ſpeake here of a Popiſh Biſhop, and Idoll Shephard: of whom it may bee oftentimes doubted, whether he or his crozur ſtaffe be better learned. And although the order of vertues in the Scripture doe not argue their degree of excellency: yet you haue not hereof ſo much as followed the order and place which the Apoſtle giveth vnto this vertue.

Verſe. 5 Be mindfull therefore from whence thou art fallen: and doe penance, and doe the firſt workes. But If not: I come to the, and I will moue thy candleſtike out of his place, vnleſſe thou doe penance.

RHEM.

RHEM.8.[5. Will moue.] Note that the cauſe why God taketh the trueth from certaine countries, and remoueth their Biſhops or Churches into captiuitie or deſolation, is the ſinne of the Prelates and people. And that is the cauſe (no doubt) that Chriſt hath taken away our golden candleſticke, that is, our Church in England. God graunt vs to remember our fall, to do penance and the former works of charitie which our firſt Biſhops and Church were notable and renowmed for.

Sinne is the cauſe that God taketh the Cath. faith from countries.

CARTVV.8. [5. Will moue.] He hath (his name be praiſed) removed your brazen candleſticke, and in the place thereof placed his owne of pure gold: and in ſtead of your Chandlers light put in the burning lampe of his holy word. Our hope is alſo, that if your Idolatry was able in Gods iuſt iudgement to vomit you out of the land; the ſame having a new addition of moſt unnaturall treaſons, will bee able to hold you out ſtill. Notwithſtanding we confeſſe that if your penance were not more abhominable in the ſight of his Maieſty, then our unrepentance; the Lord, to revenge the unſufficient fruits of ſuch over-flowing benefits, might in iuſtice haue exchanged your eſtate with ours. Wherefore as we haue iuſt cauſe to feare the revenge of our unthankfulneſſe, ſo we do aſſuredly expect that the ſame iuſtice of God which will bring the rod upon us, will draw the ſword of utter deſolation upon you.

Verſe. 6 But this thou haſt, | becauſe thou hateſt the factes | of the Nicolaites which I alſo hate.

RHEM.9.[6. Becauſe thou hateſt.] We ſee here that of all things, Chriſtian people (ſpecially Biſhops) ſhould haue great zeale againſt Heretikes and hate them, that is, their wicked doctrine and conditions euen as God hateth them, for which onely zeale, our Lord ſaith here that hee beareth with ſome Churches and Prelates, and ſaueth them from periſhing.

Zeale againſt Heretikes.

CARTVV.9. [6. Becauſe thou hateſt.] S.

RHEM.10.[6. Of the Nicolaites.] Heretikes haue their callings of certaine perſons, as is noted at large, *Act.*11.26. Theſe had their names of Nicolas, one of the 7. firſt Deacons that were choſen *Act.*6. Who is thought to haue taught communitie of women or wiues, and that it was lawfull to eate of meates offered to idols. Which later point is ſuch a thing, as if one ſhould hold it lawfull to receiue bread or wine of the new Communion, which is a kind of Idolothyta, that is, idolatrous meats, for though ſuch creatures be good by creation, yet they be execrable by profane bleſſinge of Heretikes or Idolaters. And concerning the name of Nicolaites giuen here by our Lord himſelfe to thoſe Heretikes it is a very paterne and marke vnto the faithfull for euer, what kind of men they ſhould be, that ſhould be called after the like ſort, Arians, Macedonians, Neſtorians, Lutherans, Zuinglians &c. See S. Hierom cont. Luciſer. in fine.

Nicolaites the firſt Heretikes ſo caled, as a paterne of Arians, Lutherans, and the like peculiar calling.

CARTVV.10. [6 Of the Nicolaits.] It is not worth the reaſoning whether Nicolas the Deacon held a community of wiues; and whether theſe heretickes had him for author of their hereſies, or rather ſhadowed theſe foule hereſies under his honeſt credit in the Church. It deſerveth no more anſwer, which is heere belched out againſt the holy Communion; conſidering that it is onely the ſtinking breath of the Ieſuites, without all reaſon or colour of reaſon: And if it had not been anſwered before vpon *Act.*11.26. let the adverſary, in whom there remaineth a ſparke of equity, iudge of this importunacy of the Ieſuites, which both (againſt our likings) call us Lutherans, and Zuinglians, and condemne us alſo for the ſame

Verſe. 14. But I haue againſt thee a few things: becauſe thou haſt there, them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to | caſt a ſcandall before the children of Iſrael, to eate and commit fornication.

lib.4. Antiq c.6. Balaam ouercoming Gods people by perſuaſion of lecherie & bellechere, was a tipe of Heretikes. 2.Pet.2.15 Iude.v.11.

RHEM.11.[14. To caſt a ſcandall.] Ioſephus writeth that when Balaam could not curſe Gods people nor otherwiſe anoy them, he taught Balac a way how to ouerthrow them: to witte, by preſenting vnto them their heathen women very beautifull: and delicate diſhes of meate offered to Belphegor: that ſo being tempted they might fall to Heatheniſh manners and diſpleaſe God. To which craftie Councell of Balaam the Apoſtle reſembleth Heretikes fraude, who by offering libertie of meate, women, Church goods, breach of vowes, and ſuch other licentious allurements, cauſe many moe to fall, then by their preaching.

CARTVV.11. [14 To caſt a ſcandall.] What would theſe men haue done, if they had (as their deſire and endeuour is) the Scriptures priſoners in their own hands ſtill, which take this boldneſſe when they are in ſo many mens hands, who can with a bare opening of a booke conuince them of a lie? And what will not theſe men giue out of the ancient Writers, whom few can get and fewer uſe, when they are thus forheadleſſe in forging Scriptures, whereof the triall is ſo ready? Paul ſpeaketh of heretickes which under colour of Religion will forbid meates and marriage, and which will not ſpare the fleſh, nor giue it any honour in ſatiſfying it. But neither 2.Pet. 2.15. nor Iude 11. haue a word of hereticall liberty in meats, women, Church goods, or breach of vowes, for the which they are here quoted. And yet if we ſhould deny that heretikes teach fleſhly liberty, your archheretick of Rome (that diſpenſeth with monſtruous luſts, to whom no dung of wicked life ſmelleth not ſweet, that is perfumed with golden gain) would ſtand up againſt us. And if it be a Church robbery to haue taken away the lands from Abbey-lubbers, the Pope himſelfe hath a principall hand it; who in the beginning of Queen Maries raigne (the eaſilier to hold the Nobility of this Land in his obedience) ſent a diſpenſation by Cardinall Poole, whereby he ſtrengthned the poſſeſſion of thoſe lands in their hands, to whom they were alienate.

Verſe. 20. But I haue againſt thee a few things: becauſe thou permitteſt | the woman Ieſabell, who calleth her ſelfe a Propheteſſe, to teach and to ſeduce my ſeruants, to fornicate, and to eate of things ſacrificed to idols.

RHEM.12.[20. The Woman Iezabell.] He warneth Biſhops to bee zealous and ſtout againſt the falſe Prophets of what ſort ſoeuer, by alluding couertly to the example of holy Elias that in zeale killed 450. falſe prophets of Iezabel, and ſpared not Achab nor Iezabell themſelues, but told them to their faces that they troubled Iſrael, that is, the faithfull people of God. And whether there were any ſuch great woman then, a furtherer and promotour of the Nicolaites whom the Prophet ſhould here meane, it is hard to ſay.

CARTVV. 12. [20 The woman Ieſabell.] Belike you haue it by tradition that Elias told Iezabell to her face that ſhe troubled Iſrael: for 3. Reg. 18. nor any other Scripture maketh the leaſt mention of his appearance before her.

Verſe. 21 And I gaue her a time that ſhe might do penance: and ſhe will not repent from her fornication.

Free will. God is not author of euel.

RHEM. 13. [21. Shee will not repent.] See fre will here moſt plainely, and that God is not the proper cauſe of obduration or impenitence, but man himſelfe onely. Our Lord giueth ſinners ſo long life, ſpecially to expect their amendment: but Iezabel to whom the Apoſtle here alludeth) would neuer repent.

CARTVV. 13. [21 Shee will not repent.] It is true, that the blinde eate many a flie: for in the Greek text there is never a letter of this will, whereof theſe blinde harpers haue turned their note: Nay, it is not ſo much as of the future time, that hath the ſigne of ſhall or will; but it is the firſt Aoriſt, which ſignifieth a time that is paſt. And as this tranſlation is directly contrary to the ſignification of the word, ſo doth the circumſtance of the place ſtand vp againſt it: For declaring her puniſhment for her vnrepentance, in the next verſe, by the Ieſuites expoſition it would follow that God puniſheth men for faults that are not yet, but are after to be committed. Who alſo knoweth not that the reſt of the booke being a prophecie of things to come, theſe firſt chapters containe a ſtory of things already done, and meddle not with any Propheticall fore-telling, eſpecially of particular perſons, further then ſuch as are drawn from the Analogie of the Scripture, which is, that it ſhall be well with the good, and evill with the wicked? And tell us, I pray you, what freewill had this Ieſabell to repent, when God had ſaid (as you beare us in hand) that ſhe will not repent? For if ſhe could haue repented after God had ſo ſaid, ſhe ſhould by her truth haue falſified the word of the Lord, Laſt of all, if there had been any ſuch word here, as would haue borne out your tranſlation, whereof there is not the leaſt prick; yet it is ſhewed otherwhere, vpon Luk. 13. 34. that the the ſame maketh no proofe of the free will which you fancie.

Eſai. 3. 10. 11.

Verſe. 22 Behold I will caſt her into a bed: and they that commit aduoutry with her, ſhall be in very great tribulation, vnleſſe they do penance from their works.

They that communicate with Heretickes, ſhall be damned with them.

RHEM. 14. [22. They that commit aduoutrie with her.] Such as communicate with Heretikes, ſhall be damned (alas) with them, for not onely ſuch as were in their hearts, of Iezabels religion, or inwardly beleeued in Baal, but ſuch as externally for feare worſhipped him (which the Scriptures call, bowing of their knees to Baal) are culpable, as now many bow their knees to the Communion, that bow not their heart.

3. Reg. 19. 18. Ro 11.

CARTVV. 14. [22 They that commit adultery with her.] Notwithſtanding that the Communion be the holy inſtitution of God: yet do not we bow our knees, much leſſe our hearts vnto it, but vnto Chriſt, which is in heaven, to whom the holy Communion directeth. And if any bow either knee or heart vnto it, the condemnation thereof lyeth ſtill vpon your neckes in part, vpon whom the inheritance of your fathers ſins falleth heavily, that haue infected our peoples minds with bread-worſhip.

Mat. 23. 32. 35.

Verſe. 26 And he that ſhall ouercome and keepe my workes vnto the end: I will giue him power ouer the nations.

Saincts alſo are Patrones, not onely Angels.

RHEM. 15. [26. I will giue him power.] Obſerue that not onely Angels haue power and regiment ouer countries vnder God, but now for the honour of Chriſts humane nature, and for his miniſterie in the world, the Saincts deceaſed alſo, being in heauen, haue gouernment ouer men and Prouinces, and therefore haue to do with our affaires in the world. Which is againſt the Hereticks of theſe dayes, that to take away our prayers to Saints, would ſpoile them of many ſoueraigne dignities, wherein the Scripture make them equall with Angels.

2. Pet. 1. 11

Apo. 1. 6.

CARTVV. 15. [26 I will giue him power.] You wittingly (as ſeemeth) deceiue your Reader, which would beare him in hand, that the bar of prayer to Saints departed, ſtood onely in this, that they deale not with our affaires in the world: whereas we teach, that if that were granted, yet were there many lets (as it were ſeelings caſt between) to hinder, that our prayers cannot reach to them; But even this alone is able to break the neck of all your prayers to the Saints departed, for, I pray you, when ſhall they haue this rule, but in the end of the world, when they ſhall ſit on the right of God as Chriſt doth? And therefore it is ſaid here, I will giue him power to rule, and hee ſhall rule, even then when there ſhall be no uſe of prayer: which appeareth by that which hee promiſeth alſo, the Morning Starre, which is a full enioying of Chriſt himſelfe. Hereby although the Ieſuits can proue nothing, yet we will not deny, but that this rule is begun after death; yet ſo, that they remember withall, that it is in part entred vpon in this life, according to their meaſure of victorie againſt the kingdom of Satan, and their fellowſhip in the Kingdom of Chriſt: whereupon we are taught, that all the godly are Kings whiles they are vpon earth. If then we muſt make our prayers to the Saints that are departed, becauſe they haue their fellowſhip in the Kingdom and regiment of Chriſt; it will follow, that they having this fellowſhip in this life, are to be prayed vnto and worſhipped in this life. Secondly, let it be obſerved, ouer whom this rule here ſpoken of, is given; namely, not to one faithfull man ouer another, but to the faithfull ouer the wicked, whom the faithfull ſhall breake with a rod of Iron: ſo that if there be any warrant for prayer vnto the departed Saints, it is for the infidels, and not for the faithfull. And their reward for their prayer is no other, but to haue their heads broken with a barre of Iron: a reward very meet for ſuch as will enlarge their marriage bed (which they ought to keepe undefiled to our Saviour Christ alone) unto every Saint. Last of all, let it be marked how farre this rule ſtretcheth, even to all the coaſts of the earth, whereſoever are any wicked ones, not to the regiment of one Country or Province alone, as the regiment of the Angels is before aſſigned; whereupon by this rule and regiment, implying a calling upon the Saints that are departed, it followeth that every Saint is at one time able to heare the prayers of all men whereſoever they be: which not onely overthrowes the partition of countries to ſeverall Saints, (as every nation in Popery hath made choyce of their country god and patron) but alſo changeth the nature of Saints into the nature of the moſt Holieſt, as thoſe that heare in all places; yea in this poynt of excellencie they ſet the Saints aboue God himſelfe, becauſe that whereas God is therefore truely ſayd to heare in all places, becauſe he is preſent in them, all the Saints by the Ieſuites doctrine, can heare in all places being preſent in none of them from whence the prayers are made. And withall it appeareth, how fooliſh their marginall note is upon verſ. 28. As if Chriſt were honoured when the Crowne which his holy Father made for him alone, is ſet upon the head of euery petty Saint, although he occupy but the place of a toe in the body of Chriſt, which is his Church; not to ſpeake of thoſe Divels, which being canonized by the Pope, muſt haue alſo the ſame rule over us, if the Ieſuits may haue their will.

RHEM. 1. [4. Which haue not.] Such as haue not committed deadly ſinne after baptiſme.

RHEM. 2. [4. Are worthy.] Note that there is in man a worthineſſe of the ioyes of heauen, by holy life, and this is a common ſpeach in holy Scripture, that man is worthy of God; of heauen, of ſaluation.

CARTVV. This is anſwered before upon Mat. 5. 23. and upon Luke 20. 35.

Verſe 20. Behold I ſtand at the doore and ‡ knocke. If any man ſhall heare my voyce, and open the gate, I will enter in to him, and ſuppe with him, and he with me.

RHEM. 3. [20. Knocke, if.] God firſt calleth vpon man and knocketh at the doore of his hart: that is to ſay, offereth his grace, and it lieth in man to giue conſent by free will holpen alſo by his grace.

CARTVV. 3. [20. Knocke.] As the Prophet ſaith, that we ſhall turne when God hath turned us: ſo we ſhall then open unto him when he hath firſt opened the doore himſelfe; for as it is he that beginneth the good worke in us, ſo it is hee that perfecteth the ſame even unto the day of the Lord IESVS. Wherefore as here hee is ſaid to knocke; ſo otherwhere hee is ſaid to haue opened their hearts by his ſpirit, at whoſe doores by the offer of the Goſpell he knocked. Phil. 1. 6. Act 16. 14. Deut. 29. 1. 2. 3. 4.

Verſe 5. ‡ He that ſhall ouercome, ſhall thus be veſted in white garments, and I will not put his name out of the booke of life, and I will confeſſe his name before my Father, and before his Angels.

RHEM. 4. [5 He that ſhall ouercome.] In all theſe ſpeaches to diuers Biſhops and their Churches, he continually encourageth them to conſtancie in faith and good life, by ſetting before their eyes the reward of the next life. And yet the Caluiniſts would haue no man doe good in reſpect of ſuch reward. Doing well in reſpect of reward.

CARTVV. 4. [5. He that ſhall ouercome.] Anſwered before upon Mat. 6. 4.

Verſe. 9 Behold I will giue of the ſynagogue of Satan, which ſay they be Iewes, and are not, but doe lie, Behold I will make them come and ‡ adore before thy feete, and they ſhall know that I haue loued thee.

RHEM. 5. [9. Adore before thy feete.] You ſee this word of adoration is in Scripture vſed for worſhip of creatures alſo, and that to fall before the feete of holy men or Angels for duety and reuerence, is not idolatrie, except the proper honour due to God, bee giuen vnto them. See the Annotations vpon the 19. and 22. Chapter concerning the Apoſtles proſtration before the Angel. And the Aduerſaries euaſion, ſaying that the adoration was of God onely: and that, before the feete of the party ſignifieth nothing elſe but, in his preſence, is falſe and againſt the phraſe of the Scriptures, as 4. Reg. 4. where the Sunamite adored Eliſeus, falling down before his feete, and 4. Reg. 2. the ſonnes of the Prophets adored him in the ſame ſort, and here this adoration cannot bee meant but of the Biſhop or Angel of Philadelphia, becauſe hee promiſeth this honour as a reward, and as an effect of his loue towards him, ſaying, And they ſhall know that I haue loued thee! And that which hee ſaith in thee 22. Chapter, I fell down to adore before the feete of the Angell: the very ſame hee expreſſeth in the 19. Chapter, I fell before his feete to adore him: making it all one, to adore before his feete, and to adore him. Adoration of creatures called Dulia.

CARTVV. 5. [9. Adore before thy feet.] It was an uſuall thing in the Church (as it is yet with us) that the Teachers had a chaire, which for the better commodity of hearing, was raiſed up on high Ezra 8. 4.

aboue the people that were taught, whereupon the people which ſate beneath the Teacher, are ſaid to Act.22.3. be at the Teachers feet. So Paul is ſaid to be brought up at the feet of Gamaliel. And in that ſence it is Act.4.35. likewiſe ſaid, that they laid the almes at the feet of the Apoſtles. Even ſo the place of the Church exerciſe, where the people ſate to heare the word, and ioyned together in publike prayer, is here ſaid to be at the feet of the miniſter, where theſe adverſaries of the truth ſhall worſhip God. And therfore it is not ſayd, that he ſhall worſhip the feet of the Miniſter, but before his feet; that is to ſay, in that place where he ſhall ſit on high as Teacher, and theſe adverſaries ſhall ſit below as learners. So the Reader ſeeth evidently that this is no evaſion, but a thing agreeable to the reſt of the Scriptures. But it is an evident, partly falſification, and partly a wreſt of the Scripture, which they haue oppoſed unto our 2.Kings.4. 27. anſwer. For firſt, they falſifie the Scripture in ſaying that the Sunamite fell at the feet of Elizeus: for
Mat. 28 9. it is not ſaid that ſhe tooke hold of his feet and worſhipped him, as it is ſaid that the women did unto Chriſt, but onely that ſhe tooke faſt hold of his feet: where the word feet being taken (as needs it muſt) for the leg, conſidering that whether he were going or ſtanding, ſhee could not hold him by his feet, but by his legs; it is evident that ſhe might eaſily lay hold of him in that ſort without falling downe before him. As we ſee at this day, that men in token of dutie and reverence to others that are their betters, will embrace them beneath the thigh. And that it was not to giue any holy or religious worſhip, but the more to importune him for his repaire to the place of her dead childe; it ap-
2.Kings.4. 30. peareth by her owne words, wherein ſhe ſware unto him, as truely as the Lord lived, and as hee lived, ſhe would not let him go, vnleſſe he would goe with her. Now it is but a rude and homely kinde of worſhip to hold the legges of him whom we will ſeeme to doe holy and religious worſhip unto. And if the Ieſuits will be bold here (as otherwhere) to ſay that Elizeus was ſo very low a man, and the Sunamite ſo tall a woman, as to lay hold of his legges ſhe muſt needs fall downe before him; yet it may be anſwered, that Gehezie, who well knew his maſters miſliking of this proſtration, aſſayed, as in a thing that his maſter was not accuſtomed with, to pull her from it. For although Elizeus bid him let her alone, yet the reaſon why he did ſo appeareth not to haue been becauſe hee miſliked not that behaviour of her towards him, but onely for that it was in vaine then to deale with her, for that the bitterneſſe of her minde ſo occupied all her wits and ſences, as ſhee was not fit to bee dealt withall vntill ſhe were relieued and eaſed ſomewhat. Laſt of all, ſeeing they cannot deny but a civill honour was due from her unto him, according to the precept of honouring the parents, whereof the Miniſter is a principall one, it wanteth the giue of a good concluſion, of a civill falling downe before a living Saint, to conclude a religious worſhip of thoſe which are dead.

2.Kings.2. 15. The 4.Reg.2. is more fooliſhly alledged: for it is not there ſaid, that they fell at Elizeus feete,
Gen.19.1. but that they bowed themſelues before him, or in regard of him, to the ground: which is a ſhorter
Gen.18.2. manner of expreſſing that which is otherwhere ſpoken more at large, where it is ſaid that they bowed themſelues with their faces to the ground. And this very phraſe which they heere alleage, is ſaid of the reverence that Abraham gaue unto the three Angels, whom as travelling men Abraham gueſted in his houſe: where it were abſurd to ſay that he kneeled unto them, much more abſurd, that hee religiouſly worſhipped them. Likewiſe it is ſaid that this reverence that heere was done to the Prophet,
Gen.33.3. was done ſeven times of Iacob unto Eſau before he came to him; yet I ſuppoſe the Ieſuites will not Mal.1.3. ſay, that Iacob kneeled upon his knees ſeven times before he came to his brother, much leſſe that he Rom.9.13. ſhrined Eſau, that was a devill, and gaue him a holy and religious worſhip. Let the Reader there-
Gen.49.8. fore underſtand, firſt, that it was a cuſtome of Gods people, civilly to bow their faces to the earth to all that were their ſuperiours, although the ſuperiority were no greater then of one brother over another. Secondly, according to the degree of ſuperiority, ſo they bowed leſſe or more, to the 1.Reg.1. 23. falling flat upon their faces, as we ſee the experience in the Prophet Nathan to David the King. Which bowing even to the very ground, if it proue not, nor can proue an holy or religious worſhip, the Ieſuites, which would conclude of all manner of bowing and bending the head to the ground, a religious worſhip, muſt needs be found altogether either without knowledge of the phraſe of the Scripture (whereof they brag) or without conſcience.

The third reaſon, that they muſt needs adore the Angell, becauſe it is promiſed as a reward unto him, may haue ſome weight with ſuch hirelings as you be, which do all for your own gaine or honour. But to them who loue the ſalvation of others more then their own liues, and the honour of Exod.32. 32. God more then their owne ſoules; it is a great reward to haue them humble themſelues before
Rom.9.3. God in the Miniſterie of the Word, which did in reſiſtance thereof proudly lift up themſelues againſt the Lord: and it is an honour even to the Miniſter himſelfe, when hee is openly acknowledged and avowed by them, to be the ſervant and Embaſſadour of God, of whom he was before reiected, as a deceiver and counterfeit.

Their laſt reaſon is, that of Apocalypſe 22. hee fell before the feet of the Angell, with that Apocal.19. he fell before his feet to worſhip him: ſo that, ſay they, to fall down to worſhip before the Angels feet is the ſame as to fall downe and worſhip him. This, although it ſeem to carry ſome ſhew, yet indeed it hath no pith in it: for if to fall before the feet of the Angell be all one as to worſhip, then that additition, to worſhip him, had been idle: for thereby he declareth that a man may fall before
Dan.7.& 9. the feet of an Angell, and yet haue no purpoſe to worſhip him, as did Daniel, and divers others that fell before the Angell for feare, being aſtonied at his glory. Now having noted Apoc. 19. why hee fell down at his feet, to note this ſecond worſhip, it was enough to ſay afterward that hee fell down at his feet, without adding to worſhip him, eſpecially when by the anſwer of the Angell that he ſhould not ſo do, but worſhip God, the ſame might be evidently known.

Againe, the word tranſlated, before the feet, is not the ſame heere in this place, with that which is ἐνώπιον. i. κατ' ὄψιν. uſed c.19.& 22 Apoc. for the word ἐμπροσθεν vſed 19.& 22. Apoc. hath relation to the place and time: where ἐνώπιον here vſed hath regard to the view of the perſon before whom the perſon is: ſo that a man may be ἐμπροσθεν, or before the feet or preſence of a blind man, but hee cannot bee ἐνώπιον, or in the ſight and view of a blind man. Wherefore the Ieſuites are deceiued in eſteeming that theſe

ſpeeches

ſpeaches of Apoc. 3. and 19. and 22. are all one. And if they were all one, how can the one be commended and the other condemned: conſidering that they cannot here flie to their old hole of adoration and worſhip, the ſame word of honour being vſed in all theſe three places: eſpecially it being there declared vnlawfull religiouſly to adore the bleſſed ſpirits that are wholy pure without any mixture of corruption: it muſt be much more vnlawfull, religiouſly to adore a man, whoſe fellowſhip is with fleſh and corruption. προσκυνησαι

RHEM. 7. [11. That no man take thy crown.] That is, his crown of euerlaſting life and glory, if he perſeuere not to the end in faith and good works: otherwiſe an other ſhall enter into his place, as Mathias did both to the dignitie of the Apoſtleſhip, and to the heauenly crown due for the well-vſing and exeeuting of the ſame function: which Iudas might and ſhould haue had if hee had perſeuered to the end, and as the Gentiles came into the grace and place of the Iewes. Other difficulties concerning this kinde of ſpeach are reſolued in Schoolemen, and are not here to bee ſtood vpon. Perſeuerance in good and continuing to the end.

CARTVV. 7. [11 That no man take thy crown.] Although there be not a letter here whereupon they can ſpell, that the heavenly crown is due vnto any, yet we yeeld that it is due to the faithfull Miniſter, provided that it be underſtood to be due, not by merite of our workes, but by truth of Gods promiſe, who hath promiſed to reward it. Otherwiſe the heavenly crown is of purer gold then that it can be deſerved by workes of ſo great allay: and therefore in the next chapter they caſt their crownes from them before the Throne, confeſſing that they were unworthy of that honour, and that Chriſt alone is worthy of glory, &c. Verſe. 10.

Verſe. 8 And the foure beaſtes, euery one of them had ſixe wings round about: and within they are full of eies, and they had noe reſt day and night, ſaying Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God omnipotent, which was, and which is, and which ſhall come.

RHEM. 2. [8. Holy, holy, holy.] This word is thriſe repeated here, and Eſa 6. and to the imitation thereof, in the ſeruice of the holy Church, at Te deum, and at Maſſe, ſpecially in the Preface next before the great myſteries, for the honour of the three perſons in the B. Trinitie, and that the Church militant may ioyne with the triumphant, and with all the orders of Angels, who alſo are preſent at the conſecration, and do ſeruice there to our common Lord and Maſter, as S. Chryſoſtome writeth lib. 6. de Sacerdotio, and hom. 1. de verb. Eſa. to. 1. The Greekes call it the hymne Triſagion, that is Thrice holy. The Sanctus thrice repeated.

CARTVV. 2. [8. Holy, holy, holy.] Theſe words in your Maſſe and other maſh of yours is like a gold ring in a ſwines ſnout. And it is one of her harlots trickes to ouerlay her writhen and wrinckled face with the faire colours of goodlie words, if happily hee may ſnare ſome fooles that know not her filthines. And whether theſe three holies, be to ſet forth the Trinitie or no, we will not diſpute at this time. We thank God that our faith of the holy Trinity hath ſurer grounds to reſt upon then this. For we would rather take it to be an earneſt avowance of the iuſt iudgment of God againſt the contempt of the Goſpell that is after deſcribed; as if they ſhould ſay, that God in the execution of his iudgement is moſt holy, howſoeuer fleſh and bloud will charge him of too great ſeueritie. And in this reſpect it is preſcribed in Eſay before the moſt holy and moſt fearefull iudgement of hardning the hearts of the Iewes by the Miniſterie of the Prophets vntill they ſhould bee vtterly cut off from being Gods people. At the celebration of the Lords ſupper wee willingly accord that the Angels are preſent, as at all other the Church exerciſes, there to doe their ſeruice vnto our Sauiour Chriſt 1. Cor. 11. 10.

Christ in the protection of the Church. And so were they also vnder the law as often as Gods people were assembled for the Lords commanded worship. And therfore the curtaines of the tabernacle were on both sides, both within and without, wrought with Cherubims: but that the Angels worship the sacraments (which you would giue some inckling of, and would speake it out, (if for shame you durst) is a thing worthy to be hissed at. And if Chrysostome when he saith that Christ is offered there, had meant that Christ had been really offered, and not sacramentally (as before diuers times hath been shewed out of him) he would not haue said, that the Angels were present and stood neere vnto the Priest that offereth him; but he would haue said that they worshipped the sacrament in his hand, whereof Chrysostome neuer dreamed. And as touching the Angels presence, he therein giueth, no speciall priuilege vnto the sacrament of the supper, seeing as heere, so otherwhere he saith, that they were present at the administration of the Sacrament of Baptisme also.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse. 1 AND I saw in the right hand of him that sate vpon the throne, a ‡ booke written within and without, sealed with seuen seales.

RHEM. 1. [1. Booke written.] S. Gregory taketh it to be the book of the holy Scripture. li. 4. Dialog. c. 42.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Booke written.] To expound this booke sealed with seuen seales, to be the booke of the holy Scripture, is an exposition bettet beseeming the Pope, that is drunken with the spirit of errour then, S. Gregorie, which had some things not to be despised. For it is the prophecie and secret of this booke, whereof it is said before that God gaue it vnto Christ. For as for the Scriptures, they were not at this time sealed from Iohn, which bewailed the want of the knowledge of this book: much lesse were they hidden from the Angels.

Apoc. 1. 1. Vers. 4.

Verse 3. And no man was able neither in heaven nor in earth, nor ‡ vnder the earth to open the booke, nor looke on it.

RHEM 2. [3 Vnder the earth.] He speaketh not of the damned in Hell, of whom there could be no question? but of the faithfull in Abrahams bosome, and in Purgatorie.

1. Sam. 28. 19. Den. 13. 2. 3

CARTVV 2. 3. Vnder the earth (say the Iesuites) that is, in purgatorie. For their grosse head cannot conceiue how any vnder the earth can haue vnderstanding of things to come, but such as are in the Popes scalding house. For they forget, that the Deuill foretold the very precise time of the death of Saul and his sonnes, euen as it came to passe. Whereupon also Moses fore warneth that they should not goe after false Gods, although the false Prophets should confirme that false worship with some signe, which should follow accordingly. Yewisse the Diuels know much more of the things that are to come then the puling soules of purgatorie. And if this were not, yet might this phrase with more grauitie & truth be carried vnto the faithfull men aliue, which by reason of persecution were then driuen to liue in holes, dens and dungeons vnder the earth, then to such a bridewell of the Popes building. When you say also, that purgatorie men are in Abrahams bosome, which is all one with Abrahams rest: either you must needs make Abraham still in purgatorie; or you must shape him such a side and large bosome, as cannot be cut out of the cloth of any creature, namely, that hee should bee in the highest heauens, and his bosome, I know not how far vnder the earth.

Heb. 11. 38.

Verse. 9 And they sang a new canticle, saying Thou art worthy O Lord to take the booke, and to open the seales thereof: ‡ becausse thou wast slaine, and hast redeemed us to God in thy bloud, out of every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation.

RHEM. 2. [9. Becausse thou wast slaine.] This maketh against the Caluinists who are not content to say that wee merite not, but that Christ merited not for himselfe. Calu. Philip. 2. vers. 9.

CARTVV. 2. [9. Becausse thou wast slaine.] It is enough to gather your argument to make you ashamed of it, if you haue not the white leprosie on your faces, that you cannot blush. And this it is: Christ deserueth, and that worthily, at our hands, to haue glory and praise for the redemption which he hath purchased for us: therefore he deserueth it at the hands of God his heauenly Father. Looke for further answer hereof before upon Philip. 2.

Verse 13. And every creature that is in heaven and upon the earth, and under the earth, and that are in the sea, and that are therein: all did I heare saying, To him that sitteth in the throne, and ‡ to the Lambe, benediction and honour, and glory, and power, for ever and ever.

RHEM. 3. [13. To the Lambe.] All the said creatures are bound to giue honour, not onely to God, but to Christ as man, and our redeemer: and so they here do.

Act. 20. 28.

CARTVV. 3. [13 To the Lambe.] To Christ they are bound to giue all honour, and to the Lamb all honour and glory is due, yet not to him as he is man, but in regard of his personall union with the Sonne of God, everliving God. Wherefore it is your wonted fore-head, that where the Text giveth all honour and glory to the Lambe, or to the man Christ, you adde (beside the Text, and without assistance of any proofe) that all this honour is due vnto him as he is man, making the Manhood of Christ (which considered in it selfe, is a creature) equall with the God-head, and the Creator thereof. Wee confeſſe that the very Manhood of Chriſt is to be honoured aboue all creatures, aboue Angels, and Arch-angels, Thrones, Principalities, and aboue euery name that is named either in heaven or in earth, or vnder the earth. But that the honour which belongeth vnto God, bleſſed for evermore, ſhould be given to his Manhood, doth not onely diſhonour God, but even Chriſt himſelfe in his moſt principall nature which is his Godhead.

Creator,

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 8 And when he had opened the booke the foure beaſtes and the foure and twentie ſeniors fell before the Lambe, hauing euery one harpes, and golden vials full of odours, which are | the prayers of Saincts.

RHEM. 4 [8. The prayers of Saincts.] Hereby it is plaine that the Saints in heauen offer vp the prayers of faithfull and holy perſons in earth (called here Saints, and in Scripture often) vnto Chriſt. And among ſo many diuine and vnſearchable myſteries ſet down without expoſition it pleaſed God yet, that the Apoſtle himſelfe ſhould open this one point vnto vs, that theſe odours be the lauds and prayers of the faithfull, aſcending and offered vp to God as incenſe, by the Saints in heauen. that ſo the Proteſtants may haue no excuſe of their errour, That the Saints haue no knowledge of our affaires or deſires. The Saints in heauen offer ouer prayers to God, CARTVV. 4. [8. The prayers of Saints.] It is maruelous to ſee how the Ieſuites to maintaine the Popes fraud of enriching himſelfe by canonizing of dead Saincts, will neuer acknowledge any Saincts vpon earth willingly. And where the words are ſo preſſing that no forehead (although neuer ſo braſen) can deny it but by Saints are vnderſtood the faithfull aliue, there alſo they reſtraine the word Saints to their beggerlie friers and other ſuch vermine. But here where there is no circumſtance preſſing the referring of this word Saint vnto the faithful aliue: Yet (for aduantage of prayer to Saints) they will needs haue this word Saint carried vnto thoſe that are aliue. But theſe will not helpe them vnleſſe they ſtraine the text further and expound the 24. Elders the Saincts that are departed, who notwitſtanding haue no title nor propertie giuen vnto them, which agreeth not in ſome meaſure aſwell to the Saints which are aliue, as vnto thoſe that are departed. And whether theſe be the prayers of the Saints in earth, or of thoſe in heauen, or of both; it is certaine, that the ſame are the offerers of the prayers that are the owners: and the ſame the Saints, which are 24. Elders. For the prayers that were here offered, were made by the 24. Elders, and are by oppoſition ſet forth in theſe words: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to take the booke, &c. The Proteſtants therefore are well excuſed in not admitting this will worſhip. But you are without all excuſe, which upon ſuch ſandy grounds do lay ſuch weighty and fundamentall poynts of your ſalvation. For beſide that the circumſtance of the text doth plainly convince your interpretation of falſhood; if you had found that which you dig for ſo painfully; yet doth it not conclude your cauſe. For it followeth not, that if the departed Saints do offer up our prayers, that therefore we muſt pray vnto them, as before hath been ſhewed. Looke Rom. 15.

Verſe 10. And haſt made us to our God | a kingdome and Prieſts, and wee ſhall reigne upon the earth.

RHEM. 5. [10. A kingdom and Prieſt.] To ſerue God and ſubdue vices and ſinnes, is to reigne or to be a king ſpiritually, likewiſe to offer vnto him the ſacrifices of good works, is to be a Prieſt after a ſort: though neither the one nor the other in proper ſpeach. See the Annotation before, Chap. 1. v. 5. Spirituall kings and Prieſts.

CARTVV. 5. [10. A kingdome and Prieſts.] See the anſwer there alſo.

RHEM. 6. [13. Euery creature.] He meaneth the creatures in heauen, as Angels and Saints, the holy perſons in earth, and thoſe that were in Limbo, or be in purgatorie (for of the damned in hell he cannot ſpeak in this caſe:) laſtly, of the peoples in Ilands (here called the ſea) which the Prophets vſe often to name ſeuerally, when they foretell the ſpreading of Chriſts glory through the world, as Eſa. c. 49. Here ye Ilands and yon people a farre of. &c. Limbus Patrum and Purgatorie.

CARTVV. 6. [13. Euery creature.] Looke the anſwer before upon verſ. 3. and if that will not content them, let them turne to Pſalme 148. and be aſhamed of this trifling ſpirit; unleſſe they will haue purgatory a ſcalding houſe as well for the bodies of birds as the ſoules of men.

CHAP. VI.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 9. AND when he had opened the fifth ſeale: I ſawe | vnder the altar the ſoules of them that were ſlaine for the word of God, and for the Teſtimonie which they had writer ſoeuer was the author thereof) Ser. 11. de Sanctis. Vnder the altar (ſaith he) of God I ſaw the ſoules of the ſlaine. What is more reuerent or honorable, then to reſt vnder that altar on which ſacrifice is done to God, and in which our Lord is the Prieſt, as it is written. Thou art a Prieſt according to the order of Melchiſedec? Rightly do the ſoules of the iuſt reſt vnder the altar, becauſe vpon the altar our Lords body is offered, neither without cauſe do the iuſt there call for reuenge of their blond, where alſo the blond of Chriſt is ſhed for ſinners, and many other goodly words to that purpoſe.

REM. 1. [9. Vnder the altar.] Chriſt as man (no doubt) is this altar, vnder which the ſoules of all Martyrs liue in heauen, expecting their bodies, as Chriſt their head hath his body there already. And for correſpondence to their place or ſtate in heauen the Church layeth commonly their bodies alſo or relikes neere or vnder the altars where our Sauiours body is offred in the holy Maſſe: and hath a ſpeciall prouiſo that no altars bee erected or conſecrated without ſome part of a Saints body or relikes. Conc. African. can. 50. Carthag. can. 14. See S. Hiorom cont. Vigilant. cap. 3. S. Auguſtine de ciuitate Dei. lib. 8. cap. 27. S. Gregorie. lib. 5. epiſt. 50. lib. 1. epiſt. 52. lib. 2. epiſt. 58. Whereunto the Prophet ſeemeth here to allude, making their ſoules alſo to haue their being in heauen, as it were vnder the altar. But for this purpoſe, note well the words of S. Auguſtine (or what other auncient writer Conſecration of altars with Saints relikes.

This place alſo the wicked Heretike Vigilantius (as S. Hieroms writing againſt him witneſſeth c. 2.) abuſed, to proue that the ſoules of Martyrs and other Saincts were included in ſome certaine place that they could not be preſent at their bodies and monuments (where Chriſtian people vſed in the primitiue Church to pray vnto them, as Catholike men do yet) nor be where they liſt, or where men pray vnto them. To which the holy doctor anſwereth at large, that they bee where ſoeuer Chriſt is according to his humanitie: for vnder that altar they bee. Part of his words be theſe, that you may ſee how this bleſſed father refuted in that Heretike, the Caluiniſts ſo long before they were borne.

The Caluiniſts hereſie concerning the Saints confuted by S. Hierom long agoe.

Apoc. 14.

Doeſt thou (ſaith he) preſcribe lawes to God? Doeſt thou fetter the Apoſtles, that they may be kept in priſon till the day of iudgement, and be kept from their Lord, of whom it is written, They follow the Lambe whether ſoeuer he goeth, if the Lambe be in euery place, then they that be with the Lambe, muſt bee euery where. And if the Deuill and wicked ſpirits gadding abroad in the world with paſſing celeritie, be preſent euery where: ſhall holy Martyrs after the ſhedding of their blond, be kept cloſe vnder an altar, that they cannot ſtirre out from thence? So anſwereth this learned doctor.

They vnlearnedly accuſe S. Hierom as an vbiquitiſt.

Which miſliketh our Caluiniſts ſo much, that they charge him of great errour, in that he ſaith, Chriſt according to his humanitie is euery where, as though hee were an Vbiquetarie Proteſtant. Where if they had any iudgment, they might perceiue that he meaneth not, that Chriſt or his Saincts ſhould be perſonally preſent at once in euery place alike, as God is: but that their motion, ſpeed, and agilitie to be where they liſt, is incomparable, and that their power and operation is accordingly, which they may learne to be the holy Doctors meaning, by the words that follow of the Deuill and his miniſters: whom he affirmeth to be euery where no otherwiſe but by their exceeding celeritie of being and working miſchiefe now in one place, now in another, and that in a moment. For though they be ſpirits, yet are not euery where at once according to their eſſence. And for our new Diuines it were a hard thing to determine, how long Satan (that told our Lord he had circuited the earth) was in his iourney, and in the particular conſideration and tentation of Iob: and how many men hee aſſaulted in that his one circuit. No, no, ſuch curious companions know nothing nor beleeue nothing, but that they ſee with corporall eyes, and teach nothing but the way to infidelitie.

Iob. 1.

CART VV. 1. [9. Vnder the Altar.] Chriſt without doubt is this Altar, vpon whom the holy Martyrs being laid, were acceptable ſacrifices vnto God: and therefore as vnder the Law the aſhes of the Sacrifice falling through the grate, ſtayed in the bottom and Baſe of the Altar: Even ſo the ſoules of the martyrs, after their bodies were conſumed, reſted vnder the cover and protection of Chriſt vpon whom they were offered. But if Chriſt here be the altar and that without doubt, notwithſtanding that he is not here expreſly ſaid ſo to be: why ſhould not he ſo be alſo in Heb. 13. 10. where the the name of Altar is more directly applied vnto him? Why was it there an Altar of ſtone which is here of fleſh? there in proper ſpeech an Altar, which is here but by a borrowed ſpeech? Verily there can be no other reaſon why that Altar was of ſtone, but that the Ieſuits, which out of that place framed it, either for heavineſſe of vnderſtanding to conceiue the truth, or for hardneſſe of heart to yeeld vnto it, were heauier and harder then the very ſtones themſelues, whereof they would haue the Altar. And as herein diſagreeing with themſelues, they agree with the truth: ſo in that which followeth, Chriſt is the Altar as he is man, they are as farre from the truth, as they are neere and like vnto themſelues; eſpecially if they meane he is the Altar according to his Manhood alone: for when his manhood being the ſacrifice, was ſanctified by Chriſt which is the Altar: and the thing which ſanctifieth is of a higher nature then that which is ſanctified by it; it muſt needes follow that our Saviour Chriſt muſt be conſidered in ſomewhat elſe then in his manhood, when he is ſaid to ſanctifie the ſame.

Looke their note vpon Hebre. 13. 10.

Mat. 23. 19.

Heb. 7. 7.

Now where they ſay that S. Iohn by this Altar in heaven alludeth to an Altar vpon earth where Maſſe is ſaid, whereVnder are buried the bodies and reliques of the Martyrs, is a ſottery whereof their owne conſcience (if it be not cleane ſeared away) did ſtrongly and with a loud voyce cry out vpon them. For who knoweth not that all ſuch ſpeeches of Iohn are drawne from the vſe of the ſeruice of God vnder the Law, and not from that vnder the Goſpell? Hereupon the writer to the Hebrewes affirmeth, that the things vnder the Law are ſhadowes and patternes of the heauenly things. Wherefore it is indeed no alluſion but an illuſion when they ſay that Iohn had regard in this ſpeech to the manner of buriall of the Martyrs vnder the Altar. And let the Reader obſerue what dotage this is that the Ieſuits are fallen vnto, who to proue that the martyrs were buried vnder Altars, in Iohns time, alledge onely certaine Councels that were not diuers hundred of yeares after Iohn. And if there had been any ſuch Altars in his time in the Church, which can never be ſhewed, yet they receiue a ſlender proofe by a bare alluſion of the Prophet vnto them: ſeeing the Scripture not alludeth onely, but even compareth moſt holy things vnto thoſe things that are not lawfull; as the comming of the Son of man to the comming of a theefe. And as the Scripture giveth no manner of countenance to theſe Hill-Altars: ſo the purer times which followed the Apoſtles, do ſet out the Church cuſtome to haue been to bury their dead (even thoſe that were martyred) in a place together; thereby to teſtifie their communion and ſocietie in death, which they both had before in earth, and after ſhould haue in heaven. And this ſuperſtition which they here ſtand for, appeareth to haue had ground from the conſtitutions of Romiſh Biſhops long after. As for Ierom, he is by his great likers much miſliked for his dealing againſt Vigilantius in this behalfe, as one whoſe ſtrength againſt it, conſiſted rather in reproches of the perſon, then reproofes of the matter. Although it is evident by Ieromes owne confeſſion that this was not ſo much Vigilantius his opinion (who was an Elder of the Church as Ierome himſelfe ſelfe was) but of ſundry Biſhops wich lived in the ſame time that they both did; which advantage if you had for the advancement of Saints Relickes as wee haue for the pulling of them downe, wee doubt not but your tongues would runne merrily upon theſe ſtrings, of greater weight in the ſaying of many, then of one; and of Biſhops rather then of a bare Elder: Eſpecially when Ierom, who knew well how to make his advantage of the iudgement of other learned men) diſſenting from theſe Biſhops which agreed with Vigilantius, maketh no mention of any other Biſhops that were of contrary iudgement, wherewith he might haue counterballanced theirs which thought otherwiſe then he himſelfe did. Auguſt. de Civit. lib. 8. cap. 27. teaching that there is no adoration or Sacrifices done, or Altars built of Chriſtians unto Saints, but whatſoeuer is done is onely for the celebration of their memory, can make nothing for this cauſe.

Heb. 8. 5.

The other Annotation of Auguſtine, firſt is light, as that which having his name, hath nothing of himſelfe, as hath beene before ſhewed. Secondly, it hath nothing for confirmation of that for which it is alledged, but againſt it: For, the deſcription of that Altar which hee maketh, cannot agree to their maſſie and ſtonie Altars, but agreeth onely to our Saviour Chriſt, who is both the Sacrifice, the Prieſt, and the Altar alſo. And hee ſaith not that the Martyrs onely reſt under this Altar, but ſimply the iuſt. Neither doth hee ſay that their bodies reſt under the Altar, but that their ſoules reſt under it. And therefore it is more then fooliſhly alledged to proue the Maſſing Altars which are of lime and ſtone.

What Gregorie ſaith heerein is not worthy the looking after, ſeeing he being not onely neere the time of Antichriſt, but neere to him in his eſtate alſo, could not be free from many of the errours, by the infinitie whereof that chaire is ſupported.

The ſaying of Ierom touching the departed Saints being upon earth miſliketh (ſay they) the Caluiniſts. It miſliketh the Proteſtants we confeſſe; and doth it like you Papiſts, that the heavens, which are infinitely greater then the earth and the ſeas in compaſſe, ſhould be called a priſon: and that they which haue the full walke and ſcope of the whole heavens ſhould be ſaid to be folded in? And if you like this, why ſhould not you in a miſlike of heaven, fall in loue, as long agoe with the waies which lead to hell, ſo now with hell it ſelfe alſo? By this doctrine it muſt needs follow, that when the children of God in the latter day ſhall be put in full poſſeſſion of the whole inheritance of the Kingdom of heaven, there to remaine for evermore; that they ſhall bee in heaven but as in a priſon, & that they are there as it were in fetters & Irons becauſe they may not come down into the earth. And why may it not as well be ſaid, that the Saints in heaven are therefore in priſon becauſe they cannot go down to hell? ſeeing all hinderance that ſtayeth them from any place, where, not they deſire, but the Ieſuites (according to Ierom) would haue them, is as a priſon and fetters unto them? yet our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that there is ſuch an infinite gulfe between thoſe in heaven and them in hell, that the one cannot come unto the other. Luc. 16. 26. And where there is alledged for proofe of this preſence upon earth, Apoc. 14. that they follow the Lambe whereſoever hee goeth: it ſo cruſheth this opinion of the Saints out-courſes into the earth, as nothing can do more: For ſeeing the heavens muſt containe our S. Chriſt untill the day of the reſtoring of all things; it muſt needs follow, that the Saints (to enioy a continuall preſence of our S. Chriſt) may not paſſe the pale of the heavens; which may well hold them, ſeeing (according to his humanitie) they hold the Sonne of God. Act. 3. 21. Hitherto belongeth that David for his comfort over the death of his child, affirmeth that hee ſhould go where hee was, and that his child ſhould not come any more to him. 2. Sam. 12. 23.

And whereas the Ieſuites deride the ubiquitarie Proteſtants, for that they could not finde how Chriſt ſhould be preſent in all places by his Humanity, unleſſe his Humanity were in every place where his Godhead is: as they are no better ſighted then you in their fancie of the naturall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament; ſo yet herein their ſight is farre ſharper then yours, that they did well ſee that the ſame cannot be, without an ubiquity and preſence of the humanity of Chriſt in all places at once. And you that ſee not that this abſurdity (as a ſhadow) waiteth upon your feigned body in the Sacrament (if you refuſe to be pittied) are moſt worthy to be derided. For by the ſame reaſon that a body may bee in two places at one inſtant and moment of time, it may be alſo in ten thouſand, yea euery where: for that every moving of a body from one place to another, although it bee for never ſo ſmall a diſtance, is done in time.

And as for your proofe by compariſon of the devill and other wicked ſpirits, which for their celeritie and agilitie incomparable haue a moſt ſpeedy motion; it is ſo childiſh as may well become them, that in matter of true godlineſſe, know not ſo much as the difference between their left and right hand: For notwithſtanding that their celeritie be incomparable, eſpecially in reſpect of all ſpeed that can be made by any creature upon earth, yet it is impoſſible either for them, or for the elect Angels to be at the ſame inſtant and point of time in divers (not Countries onely removed far off, but) places how neere ſoever: otherwiſe why do the wicked ſpirits divide them into Legions and Bands to aſſault men? or why haue the elect Angels their ſeverall charges, ſome here, and otherſome there, if by their agility they could at once be in all places at one moment of time? whereas to maintaine a naturall preſence in the Sacrament, it is required that at one moment and inſtant of time, the body of Chriſt muſt be in ſundry places divided by ſea and land. Luc. 8. 30. Dan. 10. 20. If indeed your ſacrificers ſhould offer one after another, & that none of them did ever iump with his fellow in the time of conſecration, or that you taught not that they be Chriſts which are in the Pixe, this defence of yours might haue ſome colour out of Ierome, which is now ſo miſhapen that it is marvell that you would ever offer it to the veiw of any, euen of your own beguiled and deceived ones.

And yet granting that our Saviour Chriſt (which yet is moſt falſe, and may not be granted) could through a wonderfull celerity of his body be in all places at one and the ſame inſtant: and granting further (which is likewiſe untru) that the Saints come frō heaven unto men: yet ſeeing this wonderfull celerity of the body of Chriſt ſhould be a portion of that Crown which his Father made for him againſt the day of his Coronation; it muſt needs follow that the Saints cannot haue this celeritie rity in the ſame meaſure that he hath, but according to the meaſure of that place which they occupy in the body whereof Chriſt is the head; eſpecially ſeeing our Saviour being glorified both in body and ſoule, they are yet but in ſoule alone. Wee ſuppoſe alſo, that as you carry the ſoule of our Saviour Chriſt after death unto the place of the damned (without any diſparagement as you ſay to the glorious eſtate thereof) ſo now alſo you will not ſtick to affirme that he may ſtill alſo (for his further inlargement) go down to hell, whether yet the Saints cannot poſſibly go: wherefore even heerein you inlarge the preſence of Chriſt further then that which the Saints departed can haue approach unto: and conſequently you falſifie the ground which you haue laid of their preſence in all places taken from their following of the Lambe. Beſides that, this following of the Lambe mentioned in the Apocalypſe is not ſo much to be underſtood of a locall following of Chriſt, as to note a conformity of the bleſſed ſoules unto our Saviour Chriſt. For it is well known, that when our Saviour Chriſt commeth in the aire at the latter day to iudge the quick and the dead, the Angels ſhall beare him company, when as the bleſſed ſoules ſhall not come in company with him, but be ſent to their bodies in the graues, and from thence to bee rapt into the Aire, to be preſented before him, and not to ſtand behind him. So alſo when it ſaid, that who euer will bee Chriſts Diſciple muſt deny himſelfe take up his Croſſe and follow him: Thereby is not meant that they ſhould follow him after a corporall manner, but that they muſt haue their converſation blameleſſe by mortification, as hee had his by nature.

Luc. 9 23.

But heere let the Reader marke the manifeſt contradiction of Popery in this behalfe, which ſometimes affirme, that the Saints departed ſee all things by reflection from God, in whoſe preſence they are: and other ſome times, ſay that they get this knowledge by courſing or perambulation of the earth: whereas if they behold all in God as in a glaſſe, what need they be trauelled in going up and down which they may haue by bare contemplation, an exerciſe far meeter for them then this poſting up and down can be: For if it be in vaine to do that by many which may be done by few, it is then both vaine and fooliſh to do that by a longer way that may be done by a ſhorter.

Verſe. 10 { And they cryed with a loude voice, ſaying, How long Lord, holy and true, iudgeſt thou not { and reuengeſt thou not our bloud of them that dwell on the earth?

That Saints pray for vs, S Hierome proueth againſt the Heretike Vigilantius.

RHEM. 2. [10 And they cried] S Hierom alſo againſt the ſaid Vigilantius, reporteth that hee vſed an argument againſt the prayers of Saincts out of this place, for that theſe Martyrs cried for reuenge, and could not obtaine. But wee will report his wordes, that you may ſee how like one heretike is to an other, theſe of our dayes to thoſe of old. Thou ſayeſt in thy booke (ſaith S. Hierome c. 3.) that whiles wee bee aliue, one of vs may pray for another: but after wee bee dead, no mans prayer ſhall bee heard for another: ſpecially ſeeing the Martyrs asking reuenge of their bloud, could not obtaine. So ſaid the Heretike. Againſt which the holy doctor maketh a long refutation, prouing that they pray much more after they be in heauen, then they did here in earth: and that they ſhall bee much ſooner heard of God, then when they are in the world.

But for the heretikes argument framed out of theſe words of the Apocalypſe thus, Theſe Martyrs did not obtaine, ergo Saints do not pray for vs: it was ſo friuolous, and the antecedent ſo manifeſtly falſe, that he vouchſafed not to ſtand about it. For it is plaine the Martyrs here were heard, and that their petition ſhould be fulfilled in time appointed by God, (whereunto they did and do alwayes conforme themſelues:) for it was ſaid vnto them, That they ſhould reſt yet a little time, till &c. And that Martyrs prayers be heard in this caſe, our Sauiour teſtifieth Luk. 18. ſaying, And will not God reuenge his elect that cry to him day and night: I ſay to you he will quickly reuenge them. And if God do not heare Saints ſometime nor grant their requeſts, is it therefore conſequent that they do not or may not pray? Then Chriſt himſelfe ſhould haue prayed his father to remoue the bitter cup of death from him, becauſe that petition was not granted.

CARTVV. 2 [10 And they cried] As Vigilantius was not well awake in ſo reaſoning as Ieromo bringeth him in: ſo the Ieſuites in anſwering it were depely aſleepe. For notwithſtanding that the controuerſie is not between vs and them whether the departed Saints pray for vs or not, but whether we ought to pray vnto them: yet the proofe out of Luke 18. that they pray for vs, is not of proofe: but is like the graſſe growing vpon the houſe toppe, which vaniſheth without a diſputer, as that withereth without a mower. For that this crying day and night, is not meant of the Saints departed, but of thoſe aliue, is declared not onely by the parable of a deſolate widow, fitly ſhadowing out not the ioyfull and bleſſed eſtate of the Martyrs in heauen, but of confeſſours in earth: but alſo for that he greatly blameth ſome of thoſe which cry for vengeance, that they doe not ſo perſwadedly in faith look for it, as becometh them which haue ſo certaine and vndoubted promiſes of their reuenge. And the prayers which are here made by the Saints, are not for the Saints that are vpon earth but (by the Ieſuits own confeſſion) they haue a direct reſpect vnto the glory of God, and their own accompliſhment in glorious and bleſſed eſtate. And notwithſtanding that that cannot but draw at the end of it, the good alſo of thoſe that are aliue: yet that is not the maine and principall thing whereunto the Martyrs prayers haue reſpect. And howſoeuer it be, yet this is worthy to be marked, that their prayer is not framed out of any ſpeciall knowledge of a particular eſtate of the militant Church, but is conceiued onely of the eſtate of the Church which is generall, and which themſelues carried with them from the earth: whereas to proue that which the Ieſuites pretend, they ought to ſhew that the Martyrs make prayers for ſuch ſpeciall either perſons or things as they could not come vnto by their own knowledge which they had vpon earth.

Luc. 18. 2. 8.

RHEM. 3. [10. Reuengeſt thou not.] They do not deſire reuenge vpon their enemies for hatred, but of charitie and zeale of Gods honor, praying that his enemies and the perſecutors of his Church and Saincts, that will not repent, may be confounded: and that our Lord would accelerate his generall iudgement, that ſo they might attaine the perfect crown of glory promiſed vnto them both in body

and in body and ſoule: which is to deſire the reſurrection of their bodies, which then ſhall triumph perfectly and fully ouer the perſecutors that ſo cruelly handled the bodies of the elect, which then ſhall appeare glorious to the enemies confuſion.

CARTVV. 3. [10. Reuengeſt thou not.] S.

Verſe. 11 And white ſtols where giuen, to euery one of them ‡ one: and it was ſaid to them, that they ſhould reſt yet a litle time, ! till their fellow ſeruants be complete, and their brethren, that are to be ſlaine euen as they.

RHEM. 4 [11. Till their fellow ſeruants be complete.] There is a certaine number that God hath ordeined to die for the teſtimony of truth and the Catholike faith, for conformitie of the members to the head Chriſt or chiefe Martyr, and till that number be accompliſhed, the generall condemnation of the wicked perſecutors ſhall not come, nor the generall reward of the elect.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 3 SAYING, Hurt not the earth and the ſea, nor the trees, till ‡ we ſigne the ſeruants of our God: in their foreheads.

RHEM. 1. [3. We ſigne the ſeruants.] It is an alluſion to the ſigne of the Croſſe which the faithfull beare in their foreheads, to ſhew they bee not aſhamed of Chriſt. S. Auguſt. Tractat. 43. in Ioan.

CARTVV. 1. [3. We ſigne the ſeruants.] This phraſe of ſigning the ſeruants of God in their foreheads, is taken (as others moe) from the Prophet, and alludeth to the deliverance of the people of God in Egypt, when the Angell of vengeance executing the iudgement houſe by houſe, paſſed by the Iſraelites houſes which were ſprinkled with bloud; and onely ſignifieth here, that the Lord in his iudgements wherewith he will revenge himſelfe upon his enemies, will deliver his faithfull ones in ſuch ſort, that although ten thouſand fall of their right hand, and as many on the left, yet the plague ſhall not come nigh unto them to hurt them. And it is more then a ſigne of an intollerable boldneſſe, that when the Scripture alludeth onely to a ſigne generall without all reſtraint to draw it to ſo particular a ſigne as is that of the croſſe. And it is evidently falſe, and contrary to the text which they ſay, that this is an alluſion to the ſigne of the croſſe which the faithfull beare in their foreheads, to ſhew that they be not aſhamed of Chriſt: ſeeing this is not to teach what duetie they ſhould doe in not being aſhamed; but what reward they ſhould haue for that they had not been aſhamed of the teſtimony of Chriſt. And although Auguſtine tract. 43. in Io. can make no croſſe here where the Scripture hath made none: yet there is not ſo much as his authoritie to crooke this text withall in that place, nor any thing approching thereunto: unleſſe the faſtning of a ſpirituall croſſe in our hearts, make any thing to proue a fleſhly croſſe upon our forehead; which as none will thinke that hath a mans heart: ſo none will dare to ſpeake but he which hath a dogges forehead. Ezc. 9. 4. Exod. 12. 13

Verſe. 4 And I heard the number of them that where ſigned, an hundered fourtie foure thouſand where ſigned, ! of euery tribe of the childeren of Iſrael.

RHEM. 2. [4. An hundred fourtie foure thouſand.] Hee ſignifieth by theſe thouſands and the multitude following, all the elect: but the elect of the Iewes to be in a certaine number: the elect of the Gentiles to be innumerable.

CARTVV. 2. [4. An hundred forty foure thouſand.] That a greater number of the Gentiles ſhall be ſaved then of the Iewes, is truely gathered of this place. But that the elect of the Iewes are in a certaine number, becauſe their number is ſet downe, and the other of the Gentiles is not: is more then the Scripture doth warrant. For when this is not the preciſe number of the elect Iewes which is here ſet downe by twelue thouſand out of every Tribe, as if there were no more ſaved of one tribe then of another, of a greater then of a leſſe: what is he that ſhall be able to tell the number of the elect Iewes under the Goſpell but God alone, to whom the number of the elect amongſt the Gentiles is as well knowne as the number of the elect amongſt the Iewes.

Verſe. 9. After theſe things I ſaw a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations and tribes, and peoples and tongues: ſtanding before the throne, and in the ſight of the Lambe, clothed in white robes, and ‡ palmes in their hands.

RHEM. 3. [9 Palmes in their hands.] Boughes of the palme tree, bee token of tryumph and victory.

CARTVV. 3. [9. Palmes in their hands.] The palme bough is indeed a token of victory; but the Palme here mentioned is the Date tree, and not that which wee call palme: that the Reader may underſtand how your ceremony of palmes is not onely Apiſh, which it ſhould be although you had the Date bough indeed; but moſt beggarly which in ſtead of a moſt noble and fruitfull bough, haue taken up ſuch a baſe and fruitleſſe twigg.

CHAP. VIII.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 3 AND an other Angel came, and ſtoode ‡ before the altar, hauing a golden cenſar: and there where giuen to him many incenſes, that he ſhould giue of the praiers of all ſaints vpon the altar of gold, which is before the throne of God.

RHEM. 1. [3. Before the altar.] The Prieſt ſtanding at the altar praying and offering for the people in the time of the high myſteries, Chriſt himſelfe alſo being preſent vpon the altar, is a figure of this thing, and thereunto he alludeth.

CARTVV. 1. [3. Before the altar.] If you meane by the time of the high myſteries, the time of your low & baſe Maſſe, you haue not onely no word in the text to beare vp that collation, but euident words to beare it down. For where the Law ordained that there ſhould bee but one altar to offer up incenſe at, Iohn ſheweth that that Altar is in heauen. And it is a groſſe and a palpable errour (whereupon the rageing luſt after your Idoll thruſteth you to tie the interceſſion of our Sauiour Chriſt, which is continuall day and night, to the time wherein your Maſſe is vpon the ſtage.

Verſe. 4. And the ſmoke of the incenſes of the prayers of the Saints aſcended from the hand of the Angell before God.

RHEM. 2. [4. Of the prayers of the Saints.] If this be S. Michael or any Angel, and not Chriſt himſelfe, as ſome take it. Angels offer vp the prayers of the faithful, as the 24. Elders chap. 5. for this word, Saints, is taken here for the holy perſons on earth, as often in the Scripture: though it bee not againſt the Scriptures, that the inferiour Sainct or Angel in heauen ſhould offer their prayers to Gods by their ſuperiour there. But hereby wee conclude againſt the Proteſtants, that it derogateth not from Chriſt, that Angels or Saints offer our prayers to God, as alſo it is plaine of Raphael, Tob. 12. 12.

CARTVV. 2. [4. Of the prayers of the Saints.] There being but one Mediatour between God and man and that in matter of interceſſion, whoſoeuer ſetteth a created Angell in the place of that Mediatour, muſt needs thruſt out our Sauiour Chriſt. Before the Ieſuites would haue placed the Elders in the Prieſthood of our Sauiour Chriſt, which notwithſtanding it is wickedly and fooliſhly done, as hath been there ſhewed; yet it hath ſo much more probabilitie, as that the name and office of Prieſthood in ſome reſpect is giuen to all faithfull men. But that either the name or office of a Prieſt ſhould be giuen to an Angel which is not partaker of fleſh and bloud, is a ſtriking of popiſh owles, onely heard of in the wildernes of the Romiſh Church. And it is a cleere caſe, that Iohn by the Angel here, noteth our Sauiour Chriſt the onely Michael of whom it hath been before ſpoken which appeareth firſt of all, by the manner of ſpeach, Of another Angell, whereby Iohn vſually noteth out our Sauiour Chriſt in this booke, as one which differeth from other Angels both in nature, in Office, and operation.

1. Tim. 2. 5.

Secondly, for that the perfume and ſweet Odours wherewith the infection and imperfection, (as it were an euill ſauour of the prayers of the Saints) are perfumed, is his alone and giuen to him: whereas the holineſſe of Angels, which are not partakers of fleſh and bloud, although it were perfecter and greater then it is, cannot make any ſupply of our wants, whoſe defects muſt be made vp by one of our own nature.

Thirdly, for that it is ſaid that this Angell offred up the prayers of all the Saints whereſoeuer diſperſed, which cannot be done by all the creatures in heauen and earth, much leſſe by one onely creature. For if there were any one Angel which could bee in all places at one time and in one moment, to heare the prayers of all the faithfull, what needs ſo many legions and ten thouſands of Angels for the miniſterie of the Saints?

Laſt of all the Ieſuits themſelues out of the verſe before, haue truly affirmed that it is our S. Chriſt; and therefore it argueth their extreme beggery, which vpon ſome mens iudgements, not onely contrary to the truth, but contrary to that which they hold for truth, lay the foundation of the interceſſion of Angels vpon this place: ſo that vnleſſe Tobies Angel, which is not onely many graines too light, but is a very counterfeit will helpe them; the interceſſion by Angels lyeth (as they ſay) in the backhouſe ditch; out of the which all the popiſh teames in Rome and Remes are not able to draw it.

CHAP. IX.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe 1 AND the fifth Angell ſounded with the trompet, and I ſaw ‡ a ſtar to haue fallen from heauen vpon the earth, and there was giuen to him the key of the pitte of bottomles depth.

RHEM. 1. [1. A ſtarre to haue fallen.] The fall of an Arch heretike, as Arius, Luther, Caluin, out of the Church of God, with the key of Hell to open and bring forth all the old condemned hereſies buried before in the depth.

CARTVV. 1. [1. A ſtarre to haue fallen.] This ſtarre is the great ſtarre ſpoken of before which which noteth but the Pope of Rome; as appeareth both by his deſcription of his Seate, now a matter at large layd out by the learned of our times, and therefore not eſpecially here to be dealt in further then the Ieſuites by wreſt of this prophecie ſhall enforce. Howbeit, euen you Papiſts, if your writings were not of as many colours as the Rainebow would haue freed both Luther and Caluin from this charge. For Maiſter Caluin (in your iudgement) was neuer any ſtarre or burning lampe in the heauens, giuing light vnto the ſonnes of men, that is to ſay, was neuer (in your iudgement) a Biſhop of the Catholicke Church. This beeing therefore (as our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe expoundeth it) one that ſometimes had a lawfull Miniſtery in the Church, from which hee was throwen down; cannot bee M. Caluin that died in the ſame Miniſterie which he firſt entred into after his departing from you. Neither can it be Luther, for although he were (in your iudgement) ſometimes in the dayes of his ignorant Monkery a ſtarre in the heauens: yet being then (in your own iudgement) but a ſorrie Monke, hee could not be the great and blaſing ſtarre here ſpoken of: ſo that it appeareth euidently that your pen goeth before your wit, and that you care not (ſo you may hurle ſomething at us) either what or how you hurle. But vnto the Biſhop of Rome both by your iudgement which (vaunt of the ſhining light he gaue in times paſt) and by ours which confeſſe that he was indeed ſometimes a burning lampe; it agreeth moſt aptly.

Verſe. 20 And the reſt of men which were not ſlaine with theſe plagues, neither ‡ haue done penance from the workes of their handes, not to adore Diuels and † Idols of golde and ſiluer and braſſe and ſtone and wood, which neither can ſee, nor heare, nor walke, RHEM. 2. [20. Haue done penance.] This phraſe being the like both in Greeke and Latine, ſignifieth ſuch ſorrowfull and penall repentance as cauſeth a man to forſake his former ſinnes and depart from them, μετανοησαι απο των ἐργων. See the ſame phraſe cap. 2.21,22. & Act. 8.9.22.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 4 And it was comanded them that they ſhould not hurt the graſſe of the earth ‡ nor any greene thing, nor any tree: but onely men which haue not the ſigne of God in their foreheads.

RHEM. 3. [4. Nor any greene thing.] The Heretickes neuer hurt or ſeduce the greene tree, that is, ſuch as haue a liuing faith working by charitie, but commonly they corrupt him in faith who ſhould othe wiſe haue periſhed for ill life, and him that is reprobate, that hath neither the ſigne of the Croſſe (which is Gods marke) in the forehead of his body, nor the note of election in his ſoule. Who are ſeduced by heretikes.

CARTVV. 3. [4 Nor any greene thing.] Indeed divers learned men expound theſe greene things to be thoſe that haue a liuing faith working by charity: but with their good leaue wee iudge otherwiſe: firſt, for that it hath been ſaid before that the faithfull ſhould not be hurt by thoſe plagues. Apoc. 7.3. Secondly, for that the trees which are alſo heere commanded not to bee hurt no more then other greene things, are before diſtinguiſhed, and made a ſeuerall member from the Elect. Thirdly, and moſt principally, for that it is ſayd before, that the third part of the greene graſſe, and the third part of the trees were burnt with the fierce plagues of God. Wherefore it beeing there taken for graſſe and for trees literally, and not for the godly which cannot periſh amidſt the iudgements of God: it were contrary to all good ſence and courſe of expoſition here to interpret it of the faithfull. It is therefore to be underſtood of the fruites of the earth, as the words doe ſound. And ſo it is a propheſie of the ſtate of Popery, that in the midſt of the groſſe ignorance and Idolatry that ſhall be in it, there ſhall be notwithſtanding great plentie and abundance of all things; thereby meeting with the common obiection of Popery, which to iuſtifie their falſe worſhip, hold out this alwayes for their buckler, that vnder the profeſſion of that religion, they had foure and twenty egges for a penny; whereas Iohn declareth, that it is ſo farre from ſhifting it from the brand and marke of Antichriſtianity, as it rather yeeldeth a proofe and teſtimony thereof. And no doubt but this is one cauſe why the Prophet hath noted this plague for one of the laſt three, ſo much the more fearefull and dreadfull as men beeing drowned in errours, were by this plentith and over-flow of Gods bleſſings rocked a ſleepe in the middeſt of their idolatries. Hereupon alſo in the 11. chapter following, he meeteth with the offence taken at the preaching of the Goſpell: vnder which he ſheweth that there ſhall be great dearth, becauſe that his two witneſſes (whereby is meant a competent number of able miniſters) ſhall ſhut up the heavens as in Elias time, and bring divers plagues vpon the earth as Moſes did in Egypt: not becauſe the Goſpell is the cauſe thereof, but becauſe theſe iudgements ſhall fall vpon the places where it is reiected and vnfruitfully receiued. Touching the ſigne of the Croſſe, looke the anſwer before, vpon chap. 7.3. Apoc. 8.7.

Verſe. 7 And the ſimilitudes of the locuſtes, like to horſes † prepared into battel: and vpon their heades as it were crownes like to gold: and their faces as the faces of men.

RHEM. 4. [7. Prepared into battel.] Heretikes being euer ready to contend, doe pretend victorie, and counterfeit gold: in ſhape as men, as ſmooth and delicate as women, their tongues and pennes full of gall and venim: their hearts obdurate: full of noiſe and ſhuffling: their doctrine as peſtiferous and full of poyſon, as the taile and ſting of a ſcorpion, but they endure for a little ſeaſon. The manifold hypocryſie of Heretikes.

CARTVV. 4 [7. Prepared into battell.] A notable and liuely deeſcription of the Popiſh Clergie of Prieſts, Monks, Friers, and other ſuch vermin, which will fight with themſelues rather then lacke an enemy: who pretend that they are Kings and a Kingly Priesthood, and in token thereof weare their shaven crownes, which make a shew of humanity and mildnesse, when notwithstanding they are as ravening as Lyons, so womanish and given to all filthy lusts, as there is no Goat so stinking as they, and yet notwithstanding so fenced with priviledges and executions from Law, as neither for their ravening nor for their Sodomitry they can be any more pierced with the sword of the Magistrate, then he that hath an Iron breast-plate upon him.

Heret. transl. RHEM. 5. [20. Idols of gold.] Here againe the new Translatours abuse the people, for idols saying images, the place being plainely against the pourtraites of the heathen Gods, which are here and in the Psalme 95. called, damonia Devils.

CARTVV 5. [20. Idols of gold.] Looke the answer before upon 1. Ioh. 5. 21. Besides that these are apparantly the Idols, not of the heathen, but of those that the starre which fell from heaven, drew with him, that is, of such as had fallen away from true Christianity. And the Iesuites expounding this of heretickes, cannot make these to be the heathenish Idols.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 4 AND when the seuen thunders had spoken their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voyce from heauen saying to me: Signe the things which the seuen thunders haue spoken: and‡ write them not.

RHEM. 1 [5. Write them not.] Many great mysteries and trueths are to bee preserued in the Church, which for causes known to Gods prouidence are not to bee written in the booke of holy Scripture.

CARTVV. 1. [4. Write them not.] If the glose be accursed which corrupteth the text, it is much more accursed that contrarieth the text. It is true that some things were reuealed to Iohn which were not to bee written, But that the same which are forbidden to be written are to be preserued in the Church, is directly contrary to the words of our Saviour Christ, which commandeth them to be sealed vp that no man should haue the knowledge of them. For if the knowledge of these mysteries come by our Sauiour Christ his opening of the seales and no otherway as before hath been shewed: they must needs remaine secret and vnknown which he will haue to be sealed and shut vp who onely can vnseale and open them. For partly for honour of his seruant, and partly for speciall comforts ouer speciall afflictions which he either had or should suffer, or for both, it pleased the Lord to reueale certaine things to him which he would not communicate with the rest of the Church euen as also Paul being rapt vp to the third heauen saw things which it was not lawfull for him to cõmunicate with the Church. And this he did rather to Iohn, because he had admitted him to a greater priuitie of friendship with him then he did the rest of the Apostles as being the friend of our Sauiour Christ, to whom belongeth the knowledge of the greatest secrets.

2. Cor. 12. 4

Verse. 9 And I went to the angel, saying vnto him, that he should giue me the booke, And he said to me, Take the book, and deuoure it: and it shall make thy belly to be bitter, but in thy mouth it shall be ‡ sweete as it were honie.

RHEM. 2. [9. Sweete as it were.] Sweete in the reading, but in fulfilling, somewhat bitter, because it commandeth works of penance and suffering of tribulations.

CARTVV. 2. [9. Sweete. as it were.] Sweete, not in reading but in preaching, considering that a man may reade the booke although he haue no exercise of his mouth, which is otherwise in preaching. And when he saith that they were bitter in his bellie, hee meaneth thereby to set out the dutie of a faithfull Minister, which is not to keepe and conceale within him that which hee hath receiued of the Lord, no more then a man which hath some bitter humor in his stomack can be at quiet till it be out: euen as Ieremy also saith that the word was like a fire within him which he could not be able to hold in. And Elihu that it was like to new wine that will breake the vessell vnlesse it haue a vent, As of the contrary part, it is pleasant vnto him when he preacheth the will of God. And so our Sauiour Christ, which is this Angell, expoundeth it when hee saith. Thou must propheſie againe. And for the better vnderstanding hereof, we are to note the order that he is first commanded not to eate it, but to deuoure and swallow it; and after the deuouring or swallowing, it is said that it shall be bitter in his bellie: and thirdly that when it shall be published by his mouth, then it shall be as sweete as honie: wherfore in the obedience of this Commandement of Christ, to make the execution answer the Commandement, it ought (in our iudgement) thus to be turned: And I deuoured or swallowed it: and it was in my mouth as sweet as honey; although when I had eaten it, my bellie was imbittered. And so καὶ according to the manner of the Hebrewes is oftentimes taken for the aduersatiue although. And as for the expoſition of the Iesuites that it is bitter because it commandeth works of penance and suffering of tribulation it is not onely sottish and vnsauorie, but cleane contrary to the drift and purpose of the holy Ghost, which is to comfort the Church ouer the spirituall flood of iniquitie and persecution denounced in the former Chapter: and that hee doth by two meanes. One in swearing that it is not long to the day of iudgement when all these confusions shall cease. The other for that the knowledge of the Gospell which was smothered and ouerwhelmed by the Antichristian practises described in the former chapter should be renewed and set vp afresh: so farre is it from denouncing of suffering of tribulation as this note supposeth.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 2 BVT the court which is without the temple, caſt forth, and meaſure not that: becauſe it is giuen to the Gentiles, and they ſhall treade vnder foote the holy citie ‡ two and fourtie moneths.

RHEM. 1. [2. Two and fourty] Three yeares and a halfe, which is the time of Antichriſts reigne and perſecution.

CART VV. 1. [2. Two and forty.] That this of Antichriſts comming three yeares and a halfe before the end of the world, is a vaine fable, hath been before declared upon 2. Theſſ. 2. And that it hath no colour from this place, it is evident. Firſt, for that by theſe words of two and forty moneths, is not meant a preciſe tearme of yeeres, but (according to the uſe of the Scripture in diuers places) he noteth an vncertaine time by a certaine; and yet ſo, as thereby he teacheth both that the time of perſecution ſhall not be at the pleaſure and luſt of the world, but according to the will of the moſt Higheſt; and alſo that for the choſen ſake it ſhall be cut ſhort: for which cauſe he after nameth it a time, and two times and halfe a time. And euen in this very chapter that which hee heere tearmeth forty two moneths, and a hundred and ſixtie dayes, which are three yeares and a halfe, hee tearmeth three dayes and a halfe; as alſo Proſper doth expound the place: for who doubteth (eſpecially ſeeing the experience) but that during all the time of Antichriſts perſecution, the miniſters of the Goſpell are moſt cruelly handled, and not three onely dayes and a halfe: his rage againſt them being ſo great as hee cannot be ſatisfied with their blood, vnleſſe the fire of his indignation feed alſo upon their dead bodies. This is yet further confirmed, for that the Apoſtle in this booke to note one and the ſame time knowne vnto God alone, noteth it indifferently by an houre, a day, a moneth or a yeare. Further, that this cannot be taken preciſely for the time of three yeares and a halfe onely, it is manifeſt, for that after the things mentioned to be fulfilled in theſe three yeares and a half, there are ſome other things mentioned to be done before the end of all: as a great part of the ſlaughter of one part of the wicked Citty, and a great converſion of an other part of it vnder God; which the Ieſuites may well know will not bee effected with a trentall of Maſſes, but muſt bee wrought by ſome good continuance of the preaching of the Goſpell. Laſt of all, when the two witneſſes whom they imagine to come into the world after Antichriſt, and to go out of the world before him, are ſaid as well to preach three yeares and a halfe, as Antichriſt is ſaid to perſecute three yeares and a halfe: the one not being able to be underſtood of that certaine ſtint of time, what reaſon is there that you ſhould ſtraightly lace the other?

Verſe. 8 And their bodies ſhall lie in the ſtreates of the ‡ great citie, which is called ſpiritually Sodom and Aegypt, where their Lord alſo was crucified.

RHEM. 2. [8. Great cittie, which.] He meaneth Hieruſalem named Sodom and AEgypt for the imitation of them in wickednes. So that we ſee his chiefe reigne ſhall be there, though his tyrannie may extend to all places of the world.

CART VV. 2. [8. Great Citty, Which.] That the Cittie of Ieruſalem is not the ſeate of Antichriſt; not onely for that there is no appearance of the rebuilding of it, but for other cauſes alſo looke before. And this deſcription here can in no wiſe agree vnto it. For firſt, this Citty particularly was never called Sodome; neither are the Iewes branded any where in theſe dayes of their baniſhment, with any ſuch note of monſtrous vncleanneſſe. But all the world knoweth, both by hearing of their practiſe, and by reading of their bookes written in defence of buggery, that it moſt fitly agreeeth to Rome, and to the Romiſh Clergy. Againe alſo it is well knowne, that the title of ſpirituall Egypt cannot agree to the Iewes, which abhorring from all groſſe Idolatry and adoration of creatures, haue no appearance of ſuch a ſudden change into palpable Idolatry, which being in times paſt the ſinne of Egypt, doth moſt properly agree to Rome, or the Weſterne Babylon, the mother of ſpirituall fornications, which in her bread-worſhip is more filthy then ever were the Egyptians in the worſhip of their venemous wormes. And for the other poynt, that it is the place where Chriſt was crucified, it cannot agree to the Citty of Ieruſalem. For firſt, our Saviour Chriſt could not with the truth of the propheſies and figures vnder the Law, be crucified in the Citty of Ieruſalem, but muſt needs ſuffer without the Cittie. Secondly, he was not crucified by any authority of that Citty, or of the people thereof; but it fitteth Rome ſingularly well, ſeeing by the authority of that Citty, and in the dominion thereof, he was crucified then in his owne perſon, and now in his members, and Miniſters eſpecially. Hebr. 13. 12. Ioh. 18. 31.

Verſe 18 And the Gentiles were angrie, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, to be iudged, and ‡ to render reward to thy ſeruants the prophets and ſaints, and to them that feare thy name, ‡ litle and great, and to deſtroy them that haue corrupted the earth.

RHEM. 3. [18. To render reward.] To repay the hire or wages (for ſo both the Greek word and the Latin ſignifie) due to holy men, proueth againſt the Proteſtants, that they did truly merite the ſame in this life.

RHEM. 4. [3. My two witneſſes.] Enoch and Elias, as it is commonly expounded, for, that Elias ſhall come againe before the later day, it is a moſt notorius known thing (to vſe S. Auguſtines words) in the monthes and hearts of faithfull men. See li. 20. de Ciu. Dei c. 29. Tract. 4. in Ioan. and both of Enoch. and Elias, lib. 1. de pec. merit. c. 3. Furthermore that they liue alſo in Paradiſe, it is partly gathered out of the Scripture Eccleſi. 44. 16. where it is plainely ſaid of Enoch, that he is tranſlated into Paradiſe, as all our Latin exemplars do read: and of Elias, that he was taken vp aliue it is euident 4. Reg. 2. And S. Irenæus ſaith, it is the tradition of the Apoſtles, that they be both there li. 5. in initio. Dicunt Presbiteri (ſaith he) *qui ſunt Apoſtolorum diſcipuli. So ſay the Prieſts or Auncients that are the ſcholers of the Apoſtles. See alſo Hypolytus booke of Antichriſt and the end of the world. All which being well conſidered, the Heretikes are too contentious and incredulous, to diſcredite the ſame as they commonly doe.

CARTVV. 2. [3 My two witneſſes.] By two witneſſes is meant a few faithfull Miniſters which God will raiſe up here and there amidſt the power of darkneſſe in the greateſt ſtrength of the Antichriſtian reigne, according to his promiſe of neuer taking quite away his Word and his Spirit from his Church, not in the greateſt waſtes and deſolations of the Church: And yet that this rareneſſe and ſcarcity of able Miniſters of the Goſpell ſhall be ſo moderated as that the Lord will not leaue himſelfe vnprouided of ſo many witneſſes of the truth of the Goſpell as may be ſufficient as well for the ſalvation of thoſe whom hee will in thoſe ruines of the Church deliver: as for the deeper condemnation of ſuch as ſhall haue their ſpeciall work in this Babylonicall confuſion as appeareth by the continuall claime which hath from age to age been made by worthy men whom the Lord hath raiſed up againſt the diſſeiſin and uſurpation of the Antichriſt of Rome.

Deut. 19. 15. Zach. 11. 14.

Here if it be asked why the Apoſtle uſed the number of two rather then any other, it may bee anſwered: Firſt, for that the Law of God requireth ſo many witneſſes for neceſſary triall of a matter in controverſie: and ſecondly, that according to his accuſtomed manner of alluding to the Propheſies under the Law, hee might make his ſpeech conformable to the Propheſie of Zachary which hee euidently alludeth unto. Look the Acts and Monuments of maiſter Fox, and Flaccius Illiricus his booke called the Catalogue of the witneſſes of the truth. And as this expoſition frameth well with the words of the Apoſtle, conſidering his manner of writing in this book throughout, which is almoſt altogether figuratiue and tropicall: ſo is it ſtrengthened by the circumſtance of the place in ſuch ſort, as whoſoeuer ſhall withſtand it (after conſideration) ſhall declare himſelfe either very heavie of conceite and underſtanding, or very affectionedly given over to loue his own opinions, without any reuerent regard of the truth in vailing bonnet unto it when it meeteth him ſo full in the face. For firſt, how ſhould two onely and no more, and that in ſo ſhort a ſpace as three yeeres and a halfe, and the ſame not ſcattered and ſundred in place, but going together and yoked in their Miniſtery in one Citie of Ieruſalem, as the Ieſuites will haue it: I ſay, how can they make the truth of the Goſpell known to all the Nations, Tongues & Tribes of the earth; ſeeing for the publiſhing thereof in the beginning of the Kingdom of Chriſt, beſide many Prophets and Euangeliſts, there needed twelue Apoſtles, accompanied with ſuch vertue and power of miracles and giftes, as never were given before, or ſhall bee after: And the ſame were continued many yeares, and ſcattered into all the coaſts and corners of the world. Beſides, they of the ordinary Miniſterie of Paſtors and Teachers (in your language Parſons and Vicars) whom the Apoſtles, Prophets and Euangeliſts, appointed for the intertainment of the work which they had begunne. Vnleſſe therefore they had had (I will not ſay Stentors voyce) but the voyce of thunder it ſelfe, which is heard from the one end of the earth to the other. Firſt, it is not poſſible for two onely to performe this that is heere mentioned to be done. Secondly, how could the Nations and Tongues and Tribes and People, behold theſe dead bodies in one Citie Ieruſalem in the ſpace of three daies and a halfe: or if they could haue beheld them; yet what authority could the Nations, People, Tribes and Languages, haue to forbid the buriall of them in the Citie of Ieruſalem: when as theſe which maintaine the opinion of reſtoring the Iewes to their old Countrie and Policie, make them onely the Rulers and Gouernours thereof. Thirdly alſo, who will yeeld them that the Cittie of Ieruſalem (vpon rebuilding and reſtabliſhing whereof all the credit of this dreame of theirs doth depend) ſhall bee rebuilded againe? where haue they any warrant thereof? Of the contrary ſide, ſeeing our Sauiour Chriſt would therefore haue it raized to the foundations, to the end that all the world might know that the law of Ceremonies is vtterly abrogated: wee ſee not why but that (as it was ſometime in the Cittie of Iericho) whoſoeuer ſhould build a new Ieruſalem, ſhould by iuſt iudgement either of God or man lay the foundation thereof in the bloud of his eldeſt ſonne, and ſet vp her gates in the deſtruction of his yongeſt. And if there be credit to that which is written in this behalfe; the effects haue been already ſtrange by the hand of God vpon ſuch as haue giuen the attempt and onſet for the building thereof. And if the light of the interpretation which we haue followed, be not cleere enough in it ſelfe; yet we hope it will ſhine further out in the view of the miſtie and myſticall interpretation which the Ieſuits haue ſet down, the effect whereof ſtandeth in two points. One, that theſe two are Enoch and Elias: the other, that being in Paradiſe they ſhall come down from thence to preach againſt Antichriſt: things ſo at battaile betweene themſelues, as one of them cannot hold hand from

Mat. 24. 2. Luc. 19. 44. Ioſ. 6. 26.

the throat of the other. For if they be now in Paradiſe as it were in the holy mountain & in the glory of the ſons of God, then ſhall they neuer come into this vale of miſery to bee ſorrowfull as men that weare ſackloth and to be hurt, much leſſe to be killed. And if they ſhall come into this vale of miſerie, then are they not in Paradiſe, for fleſh & bloud cannot inherit the kingdom of heauen, neither can corruption inherit incorruption. If therefore it be true (as we for our part do eſteeme as well as you) that theſe two are already freed from all corruption, then how can they of immortal without their fault be made mortall? It is true that the ſoules of ſome few which were departed, haue for the glorie of God returned to their bodies againe: but that they which being perfectly bleſſed in body and ſoule ſhould be ſent back againe from the top of their happineſſe to the foote and baſe of the greateſt miſerie which can be vpon earth; needeth a further ground of ſound reaſon then the Ieſuites haue layd down, or (as we are perſwaded) are able to lay down. And if it could bee ſhewed of ſome other, yet it would leaſt of all frame with theſe two; for if Enoch that he ſhould not ſee death, to the end as the Scripture ſaith that it might be witneſſed that in beleeuing hee pleaſed God, as ſome other ſay, that he might be an example of Repentance vnto the Nations: verily it will giue but either ſmall confirmation of the former, or encouragment vnto the latter, if he ſhould by ſo cruell death (as this here ſpoken of) bee depriued of the priuiledge that God had beſtowed vpon him. Againe, if Elias did not therefore ſee death that the Iewes might be confirmed in the perſwaſion of the true ſeruice of God whereof he was the reſtorer: who ſeeth not but that it muſt needs weaken the faith of the Iewes in the true worſhip of God to ſee him ſuffer the death from which he was therefore exempted, that he might therein ſtrengthen them. And both theſe examples of Enoch and Elias being alleaged by writers new and old, as pledges of the immortalitie of our bodies in the kingdom of heauen, all men ſee that that prop and vnderſtay of our faith of the Reſurrection, is cleane ouerthrown, if after they were immortalized they might fall into their former mortalitie againe.

1. Cor. 15. 50.

Heb. 11. 5. Eccl. 44. 16.

The teſtimony of the Scripture, Math. 17. is before ſhewed to be of Iohn Baptiſt, who is called Elias, becauſe of the like gifts of the ſpirit they both had, and becauſe of their conformity in the repaire of the great ruines of the Church that they both were imployed in. And the Ieſuites in quoting the Propheſie of Malachy for confirmation thereof, lay hands vpon their owne cauſe: for ſeeing it is well known that the writings of the Prophets vnder the Law (for any particular propheſie of things to come) reach no further then vnto the times of our Saviour Chriſt: and that for the Propheſies of ſpeciall accidents that ſhould befall the Church after Chriſt, the Lord hath folded them up in the writings of the Apoſtles, eſpecially of this holy Apoſtle Iohn; it is evident that the Prophet Malachies place muſt needs be underſtood of Iohn the Baptiſt. Eccleſiaſticus 44. 16. hath no word of Enochs coming againe, and therefore is falſified. In the chapter 48. 10. he appeareth to bee of minde, that Elias ſhould come againe: but becauſe his authority is not divine, but Eccleſiaſticall onely, his ſpirit being but private, it hath as much credit as his reaſons giue it, and no more: whereof, becauſe hee hath left no ſtep behinde, the plant of his opinion muſt needs wither. Of the reſt of the teſtimonies, ſome as counterfeit coyne are ſmitten through, as Hippolites; ſome are of light credit in matter of controverſie, as are Gregory, Bede, and Damaſcene. As for Oecumenius upon the 17. of Matthew, it is good reaſon he ſtay for anſwer untill he be extant. Some other places, as Auguſtine lib. 1. de peccato merit. Chryſoſt. & hom. 22. Geneſ. & 22. in epiſt. ad Heb. make nothing for that which they are alledged for. The reſt ſpeake either of one, or elſe two which ſhall come before the ſecond comming of Chriſt, but not after that ſort which the Ieſuits haue laid down. For Hilary 20. Can. in Matthew affirmeth moſt conſtantly, that Elias and Moſes are the two witneſſes here ſpoken of, and confuteth this opinion of Enoch which the Ieſuites ſet downe. And to ſay the truth, if theſe two here ſpoken of, ſhould be two ſingular perſons, & of the number of thoſe which are already gone out of the world, there is more appearance of truth in this opinion of Hillary, who holdeth that Moſes & Elias ſhall come, then in the Ieſuits, who affirm that Enoch & Elias ſhall come. For if this be the reaſon (as it is the beſt they haue) why Elias ſhal come, becauſe of the mention that is made of calling fire from heaven: why ſhould not Moſes be the other, ſeeing mention is made verſ. 6. of the turning of waters into bloud, which was done by Moſes onely, & not by Enoch. And if it be ſaid that the greater part of the ancient Fathers concurre in Enoch and Elias, it may be anſwered: Firſt, that the ancienter they are, the unfitter they be to witneſſe in the matter of Antichriſt, which in that time was not manifeſt, as now he is. And therefore no marvell if (as in things ſeen a farre off, and as it were in a riddle) they were deceiued. Secondly, although the greater ſort of ancient writers which are extant hold for Enoch, yet it appeareth by Hilary, that there were as many who eſteemed that Ieremy ſhould be ioyned with Elias, as that iudged Enoch his companion, wherefore, ſeeing (beſides the iudgement of Victorinus a Martyr,) there were as many ancient Fathers for Ieremie as for Enoch: it is evident that the Ieſuites haue no better teſtimonie of Antiquitie for Enoch then for Ieremie ſauing onely that the euidence of the one hath been better kept then the other. Which wee write not as though there were any more trueth in the one then in the other, but becauſe hereby it might appeare how vaine the Ieſuites confidence is in this that they are able to alleadge diuers old Fathers for warrant of Enochs and Elias comming againe.

Licet varia vel de Henoc, vel de Hieremia plurimorum extiterant opiniones, ſaith Hilary.

Touching their tranſlating in that they ſay that they are now in Paradiſe, it is a thing that we can well afford the Ieſuites, not onely without any hinderance of the truth of our cauſe, but (as hath been noted) euen with ſome aduantage vnto it: although Chryſoſtome holdeth it curious to enquire whether they are gone. And ſeeing Auguſtines in the laſt place by you cited lib. 1. de peccat. merit 6. 3. affirmeth that the qualitie of their bodies is not yet altered, and made ſpirituall as they ſhall be in the day of the Reſurrection: you bewray the rancor and canker of your ſtomack too euidently, that reproach the Caluiniſts (as you terme them) for that wherein they thinke more of them in this behalfe then Auguſtine doth. For as for that which you charge them with, that Enoch is dead, is but your falſe tongue, which with cuſtome of continuall lying you haue taught to ſpeake moſt manifeſt vntruths, not onely where there is no ſtep or apparance of that which you ſay, but euen where the way is beaten and trodden with diuers reaſons to the contrary of that which you ſay: for Maſter Calvin flatly confuteth confuteth them which hold that Enoch died, and ſaith further that he was a viſible glaſſe of the bleſſed Reſurrection, and that without death his corruptible body was made incorruptible; as alſo ſhall bee their bodies whom the latter and great day of the Lord ſhall find aliue.

Calv. in Geneſ. 5.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 1 AND a great ſigne appeared in heauen, ‡ a woman clothed with the Sun, and the Moone vnder her feete, and on her head a crowne of twelue ſtarres.

RHEM. 1. [1. A woman.] This is properly and principally ſpoken of the Church: and by alluſion of our B. Lady alſo.

CARTVV. 1. [1. A woman.] Heere is a manifeſt alluſion to the Cant. 6. 9. Who is this that commeth as the morning riſing, faire as the Moone, bright as the Sunne? which is ſpoken of the bleſſed virgin Mary, whom you call your Lady: for of her, as of a true member of the Church, and the ſame amongſt women the moſt bleſſed, it is not alluding, but moſt truely verified, that ſhe is clothed with the Sunne, and hath the Moone vnder her feet.

Verſe. 3 And there was ſeene an other ſigne in heauen, and behold ‡ a great red dragon hauing ſeuen heads, and ten hornes: and on his heads ſeuen diadems, RHEM. 3. [3. A great red Dragon.] The great Diuell Lucifer.

CARTVV. 2. [3. A great red Dragon.] Why not Satan the great Diuell Belzebub, as the Scripture doth moſt certainly and euidently teach, rather then the great diuell Lucifer, vngroundedly ſurmiſed by ſome of antiquity? But that the Ieſuites of purpoſe deſire rather to goe the doubtfull by-path of mens opinions, then to walke in the knowne and high way of the holy Scriptures.

Math. 12.

Verſe. 4 And his taile dreew ‡ the third part of the ſtarres of heauen, and caſt them to the earth, and the dragon ſtood before the woman which was ready to be deliuered: that when ſhe ſhould bee deliuered, hee might deuoure her ſonne.

RHEM. 3. [4. The third part of the ſtarres.] The ſpirits that fall from their firſt eſtate into Apoſtaſie with him, and by his meanes.

CARTVV. 3. [4. The third part of the ſtarres.] Theſe ſtars are the Miniſters of the word, as they are before expounded: but yet ſuch as our Saviour Chriſt holdeth not in his right hand: whereof it commeth, that being left of him vnto themſelues, they are by the power of Satan intentations, caſt vnto the ground. Therefore they are not the damned ſpirits which fell from heauen being drawne by the Dragons taile, ſeeing thoſe Apoſtate ſpirits are ſaid after to bee caſt downe from heaven by our Saviour Chriſt and his Angels, for fighting againſt Chriſt and his Church: whereas it is euident, that there was no Church in the world when the Apoſtate ſpirits fell from their firſt eſtate.

Apoc. 1. 20.

Verſe. 14. And there were giuen to the woman two winges of a great eagle, that ſhee might flie into the deſert vnto her place, weere ſhee is nouriſhed for ‡ a time and times, and halfe a time, from the face of the ſerpent.

RHEM. 4. [14. A time and times.] This often inſinuation that Antichriſts reigne ſhall be but three yeares and a halfe (Dan. 7. 25. Apoc. 11. 2, 3. and in this Chap. v. 6. c. 13. 5.) proueth that the Heretikes be exceedingly blinded with malice, that hold the Pope to be Antichriſt, who hath ruled ſo many ages.

CARTVV. This hath been anſwered before. Apoc. 11. 2.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 6 And ‡ the woman fled into the wildernes where ſhee had a place prepared of God, that there they might feede here a thouſand two hundred ſixtie daies.

The Church ſhall flee as to a deſert in antichriſtes time, but not decay or be vnknowen, no not for ſo ſhort a time.

RHEM. 5. [6. The woman fled.] This great perſecution that the Church ſhall flee from, is in the time of Antichriſt, and ſhall endure but three yeares and a halfe, as is noted v. 14. in the margent. In which time for all that, ſhe ſhall not want our Lords protection, nor true Paſtors, nor bee ſo ſecret, but all faithfull men ſhall know and follow her: much leſſe ſhall ſhe decay, erre in faith, or degenerate and follow Antichriſt, as Heretikes doe wickedly faine. As the Church Catholike now in England in this time of perſecution, becauſe it hath no publike ſtate of regiment nor open free exerciſe of holy functions, may be ſaid to be fled into the deſert, yet it is neither vnknown to the faithfull that follow it, nor the enemies that perſecute it; as the hid companie that the Proteſtants talk of, was for ſome worlds together neither known to their friends or foes, becauſe there was indeed none ſuch for many ages together. And this is true, if we take this flight for a very corporall retiring into wildernes. Where indeed it may be, and is of moſt expounded, to be a ſpirituall flight, by forſaking the ioyes and ſolaces of the world, and giuing her ſelfe to contemplation and penance, during the time of perſecution vnder Antichriſt. And by enlarging the ſenſe, it may alſo very well ſignifie the deſolation and affliction that the Church ſuffereth and hath ſuffered from time to time in this wildernes of the world, by all the forerunners ad miniſters of Antichriſt, Tyrants and Heretiks.

CARTVV. 5. [6. The woman fled.] This fable of three yeares and a halfe, preciſely taken for Antichriſts reigne, here and after reported, is before confuted. Alſo it hath been before ſhewed that the Church is ſometime hidden not onely from her foes, but euen from ſome of her louers. For wherefore elſe ſhould ſhee flie into the wilderneſſe but to hide her ſelfe: And doth not the Lord bid her that ſhee ſhould ſhut vp her ſelfe and be hidden vntill the tempeſt of perſecution be ouerblowen? and hauing a commandement to hide her, it muſt follow that ſhe hath a promiſe that he ſhall be hidden accordingly. Eſay 26.20

A monkiſh and Contemplatiue life is not the life of any member of the Church much leſſe of the whole Church. But as in other Arts (eſpecially Mathematicall) the hand and practiſe is alwayes called for, for a ſetling of the knowledge which is gotten by precepts: ſo in Chriſtianity much more, where, not ſo much as the precepts themſelues in any ſoundneſſe of knowledge can bee vnderſtood without the practiſe of the firſt beginnings and elements of religion. Seeing alſo this is a ſpeciall reuelation of the Spirit, and propheticall foretelling of the troubles of the Church, it is a fond expoſition that carrieth it to the deſolation of the Church from time to time in the wilderneſſe of this world by any Tyrant or Hereticke, ſeeing all that may be declared without the gift or ſpirit of propheſie. Looke vpon Math. 3. 1. & 4. 1. & Luk. 10.42 Pſal. 25 14 Ioh. 7. 17.

That the Church ſhall faile or follow Antichriſt, are things which you falſly father vpon vs, and we vtterly abhorre. That the Church may erre in ſome things which are not fundamentall, nor ſuch as whereby ſhe looſeth her hold of Chriſt her head, hath been before diuers times declared.

Verſe. 7 And there was made a great battell in heauen, Michael and his Angels fought with the dragon, and the dragon fought and his Angels:

RHEM. 6. [7. A great battell.] In the Church there is a perpetuall combat betwixt S. Michael (protector of the Church militant as he was ſometime of the Iewes Synagogue Dan. 10. 21.) and his Angels and the Deuill and his miniſters, the perfect victorie ouer whom, ſhall be at the iudgement. Marke here alſo the cauſe why S. Michael is commonly painted fighting with a dragon. S. Michael fighting with the dragon.

CARTVV. 6. [7. A great battell. That Michael is no created Angell, but Chriſt the Angell of the Covenant, looke before. And it appeareth alſo here, in that his Angels here ioyned with him in battell againſt the Diuell and his Angels are the militant Church of Chriſt his members, eſpecially Miniſters thereof, to whom he hath before given the names of Angels. For ſeeing it is ſaid, in this fight in heaven (which is the Church) that thoſe that fought died, and loued not their liues unto death, and that it is euident that the bleſſed ſpirits cannot die, it muſt needes follow, that the Angels heere mentioned, were not the elect Angels (whereof ſome other created Angels had the leading and conduction) but men, and eſpecially the Miniſters of the Church. Apoc. 12. 34

Verſe. 15 And the ſerpent caſt out of his mouth after the woman water as it were a floud: that he might make her ‡ to be caried away with the floud.

RHEM. 7. [15. To be carried away.] By great perſecution hee would draw her, that is, her children from the true faith: but euery one of the faithfull elect, gladly bearing their part thereof, ouercome his tiranny. At whoſe conſtancie he being the more offended, worketh malicious attempts in aſſaulting the frailer ſort, who are ſignified by the reſt of her ſeed that keepe the commandements, but are not ſo perfect as the former. Antichriſts attempts to draw from the true faith.

RHEM. 1. [3. In admiration.] They that now follow the ſimpleſt and groſſeſt Heretickes that euer where without ſeeing miracles would then much more follow this great ſeducer working miracles.

CARTVV 1. [3. In admiration.] Wee which by the grace of God haue not been carried away with the very Antichriſt himſelfe ſhall much leſſe be moued by this painted Antichriſt, which you with colours of your owne fantaſticall head haue portrayed out. And why ſhould you thinke that we will be ſo eaſily tranſported by the Miracles of your counterfeit Seducer, ſeeing you haue had good experience of vs that were not moued no one inch from the plaine truth of the word of God by all the miracles which you the falſe prophets of Antichriſt work, or at leaſt will ſeeme to worke before the preſence, and to the behooſe of your Pope.

Verſe. 6 And he opened his mouth vnto blaſphemies towarde God, ‡ to blaſpheme his name, and his tabernacle, and thoſe that dwell in heauen

RHEM. 2. [6. To blaſpeme his name.] No heretickes euer liker Antichriſt, then theſe in our dayes ſpecially in blaſphemies againſt Gods Church, Sacraments, Saints, miniſteries, and all ſacred things.

CARTVV. 2. [6. To blaſpheme his name.] Your Saints whom your vncanonicall Pope canonizeth, as Francis, and Becket, alſo your Sacraments which either your braine hath inuented or your preſumptuous ſpirit hath deformed and defiled, wee worthily condemne. But to the true Saints and Sacraments wee giue the honour which is due; whom notwithſtanding you by making idols blaſpheme, and therein follow your Fathers the Phariſees, who ever honored the holy Prophets departed, whoſe doctrine they deſpiſed and perſecuted when they were aliue.

Verſe. 11 And I ſaw ‡ an other beaſt coming vp from the earth: and he had two horns like to a lambe, and he ſpake as a dragon.

RHEM. 3. [11. Another beaſt.] An other falſe prophet inferiour to Antichriſt, ſhall worke wonders alſo, but all referred to the honour of his Maſter Antichriſt. So doth Calvin and other Arch-heretikes peruert the world to the honor of Antichriſt and ſo do their ſchollers alſo for the honour of them.

CARTVV. 3. [11. Another beaſt.] This beaſt which is in ſhape like a lambe, but yet is betrayed to haue the ſpirit of the dragon by his voyce which is his doctrine: is the popiſh Clergy, the Monks and begging Friers eſpecially, who although for their outward behauiour to ſimple ideots they appeare to come in ſheeps cloathing, yet by their fruits, of doctrine eſpecially, they are known to be the falſe prophet here ſpoken of, who laboureth the ſupport and vnderſettiug of Antichriſt, and that not by falſe doctrine onely, but by falſe miracles alſo, falſe alwayes in regard of the end whereunto they are wrought, and falſe for the moſt part in reſpect of treacherous iuggling and legerdemaine wherewith they beguile ſimple folke. And as this agreeth moſt fitly to the Popiſh Clergie, which profeſſe the working of Miracles to ſeale vp their doctrine: ſo can it not be wreſted vnto Calvin and others of our profeſſion, who vndertake no ſuch thing. And theſe are the ſame which both more generally and more figuratiuely are deſcribed before to be locuſts riſing out of the ſmoake of the bottomleſſe pit, which like horſes are alwayes ready to moue battell againſt the Saints upon earth, which haue as it were crownes of gold on their heads, that is a princely authoritie whereof their ſhauen crowns are repreſentatiue ſignes & tokens, whoſe faces are for their apparance of wiſdom, and coulerable carriage of their foule maners like vnto the faces of men: and their haire for filthines of life; and vncleanneſſe in all ſorts, like to the haire of women, whereof they carie the viſible mark in the long lockes of their head, & their bare and ſmooth faces, not hauing one haire of an honeſt man vpon their beards; whoſe teeth for ſpoiling and deuouring a great part of the pleaſenteſt ground of the countrie where they dwel are compared to the teeth of a lyon. And notwithſtanding that for their manifold crimes they are worthy death, yet they haue ſuch priuiledges, ſuch Sanctuaries, ſuch exemptions, and other Cleargie benefits, that by them, as by iron habergeons they haue armour of proofe againſt the executions that other criminall perſons do goe under. And although they haue a mans face, yet their voices and roarings in their Temples are ſo either without vnderſtanding of that which they ſing & ſay, or elſe without any reaſon, that it may be rather compared to the confuſed noiſe of the fluttering of wings, or to the ratling of Chariots down the hill, then to the voice of a man ruled by any good diſcretion. Laſt of all, hee declareth, that for their doctrine they are like vnto the ſcorpions tailes, wherewith they ſting to death the ſoules of thoſe which are ſtricken by them. Here alſo the Reader may note, that as by the falſe prophet heere, is not meant one particular and ſingular man, but many and ſundry falſe Teachers: euen ſo by Antichriſt, to whom the falſe Prophet is ſubordained, is not meant one ſingular man, but a continued ſucceſſion of the heads and Generals of the Apoſtacie which ſhall be in the latter end of the world. For what reaſon or apparance of reaſon is there that one falſe Prophet alone ſhould ſeduce almoſt all the world eſpecially when againſt him (in the Ieſuites iudgement) ſhall riſe two of the moſt excellent Prophets that euer were, Elias and Enoch, furniſhed with ſuch gifts both of knowledge and working of Miracles, as the falſe Prophet of Antichriſt ſhall in compariſon of theſe two Cedar trees ſcarce haue the eſtimation of a bramble? And beſides that the forgers of this tale of Antichriſt haue had ſmall iudgement to make one peece ſutable with an other as that which hath a lyons head and an Aſſes taile; they do euill remember that as the number of the wicked is greater then the number of the godly: ſo the number of their falſe Prophets is greater then the number of the true Prophets, in ſuch ſort as it is more likely that for one Elias there ſhould be two Baalites, and for one Micheas two Zedechiaes, then of the contrarie ſide. And to this point ſerueth that they are compared before to the ſwarmes of locuſts bred of the ſmoake of ignorance and errour, which came foorth of the furnace of hells pit.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 1 And I ſawe ‖ a beaſt coming vp from the ſea, hauing ſeuen heads, and tenne hornes, and vpon his hornes ten diademes, and vpon his heads names of blaſphemie.

Many myſteries expounded.

RHEM. 4. [1. A beaſt comming vp.] This beaſt is the vniuerſall company of the wicked, whoſe head is Antichriſt: and the ſame is called (Apoc. 17.) the whoore of Babylon. The 7. heads be expounded (Apoc. 17.) ſeuen kings: fiue before Chriſt, one preſent and one to come. The 10 hornes be alſo there expounded to be 10. kings that ſhall reigne a ſhort while after Antichriſt. This dragon is the Deuill, by whoſe power the whore or beaſt or Antichriſt worketh, for in the words following (v. 3. & 4.) Antichriſt is called the beaſt, to whom the dragon, that is, the Deuill giueth that power of feined miracles, as we adore God, for giuing power to Chriſt, and his followers, ſo they ſhall adore the Deuill for aſſiſting Antichriſt and giuing him power.

CARTVV. 4. [1. A beaſt comming up.] Beſides the Ieſuites continuall purpoſed wandring from truth, to turne mens eyes from Rome, and from the Pope, there is an apparant ſpirit of ſlumber upon them in theſe interpretations, whereby they pittifully hew and cut themſelues and their Client the Pope of Rome. For marke, that they which before haue placed their principall ſtrength of freeing the Pope of Rome from the title of Antichriſt, becauſe he being called the man of ſinne, muſt needes be intended to be one particular or ſingular perſon, and not a number of men ſucceſſiuely taking one anothers place. Now, as hunger-ſtarven men which eate the arme of their own ſtrength, they are content under the name of a beaſt, to underſtand the vniuerſall company of the wicked, together with Antichriſt their head. And if theſe words, a beaſt, which meane nothing elſe but a beaſtly man, haue (in your iudgement) such a collectiue and compounded vnderstanding, as that many thousands of particular men may at once be lodged in them: why should not also these words, a man of sin, or the man of sinne, be able at seuerall times, one entring as another goeth forth, to couch and kennell some reasonable number of vnreasonable Popes, which answer that Apostaticall seat of Antichrist? Touching the interpretation of this beast, of the hornes and heads thereof, we shall consider cap. 17. where they are expounded by the Holy Ghost himselfe. In the meane season the childish interpretation of fiue of the seuen Kings to haue been before Christs comming, is worthier to be hissed out, then to be confuted; seeing the whole booke is either of things which were in Iohns time, and at the writing of this booke, as the three first chapters; or else of those which should befall the Church from that time vnto the worlds end.

Verse. 7 And it was giuen vnto him to make battaile with the saints, and to ouercome them. And power was giuen him vpon euery tribe and people, and tongue, and nation, RHEM. 5. [7. To make battell with the Saints.] He shall kill the saints then liuing, Elias and Enoch, and infinite moe that professe Christ, whereby we must learne, not to maruell when wee see the wicked persecute and preuaile against the iust, in this life. Then shall his great persecution and crueltie try the Saints patience as his wonderfull meanes to seduce shall trie the stedfastnes of their faith which is signified by these words following, Here is the patience and the faith of Saints. And when it is said, They adored the beast, whose names are not written in the booke of life of the Lambe, it giueth great solace and hope to all them that shall not yeeld to such persecutions, that they are of Gods elect, and their names written in the booke of life. Great persecution by Antichrist, and his ministers. Their blessednes that continue constant.

CARTVV. 5. [7. To make battell with the Saints.] Look the answer before against the Fable of Enoch and Elias. The rest hath no matter of answer.

Verse. 14 And he seduceth the inhabitants on the earth through the signes which were giuen him to doe in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwel on the earth, that they should make the image of the beast which hath the stroke of the sword, and liued

RHEM. 6. [11. The image of the beast.] They that now refuse to worship Christs image, would then worship Antichrists. And wee may note here, that as the making or honouring of this image was not against the honour of Antichrist, but wholy for it, as also the image erected of Nebuchodonosor, and the worship thereof was altogether for the honour of him, so is the worship of Christs image, the honor of Christ himselfe and not against him, as the Protestants madly imagine. The honour of Christs Image is for the honour of Christ.

CARTVV. 6. [14 The image of the beast.] Mark good Reader to what extremity the Iesuites are driven in defence of their Imagerie that rake in such a filthie kenell as this, for some reliefe. For what true honour came ever to Antichrist or to Nabuchodonosor, by their Images which they are said to haue reared. Nay, are they not thereby become shamefull and ignominious to all posterities, which haue made Images of theirs to be adored. If therefore this proue an honour to Images, verily it is such an honour as is turned into shame. But grant that it were to the honour of a Prince to haue his Image crouched and kneeled to, yet how long will the Iesuites be ignorant of this, that that may be abhomination in Gods service, which is commendable in the honour and service that is done vnto men: and that the Lord hath expressly forbidden that a man should worship him as it seemeth good in his own eies. Num. 15. 38 39. Deut. 12. 8.

And how leaden headed they bee that out of this place gather, that Antichrist shall make his Image or counterfeit to be worshipped, appeareth in the next verse where it is said, that this Image here spoken of, had spirit and life giuen vnto it, which such stockes and Images haue not. And therefore by the Image of the beast is set forth the Pope, whose whole power and gouernement is so ordered and disposed of, as in it the forme taken from the beast (which is the Empire of Rome) might seeme still to be in place, there being as great a resemblance between the one and the other, as between the naturall face of a man and the image thereof, most liuely and most cunningly set forth. And therefore this second beast is said to cause the first beast to be honoured of all; the Romane Empire and the Popedome making one politicke body of the first beast: euen as it is an ordinary thing to call the liuely counterfeit and representation of a man by the name of him whom it setteth forth; and therefore having said in the 12 verse that this beast which hath two hornes like a Lamb, maketh the earth and the inhabitants thereof to worship before the first beast whose deadly stroake was healed: hee declareth vers. 14. how that was performed, namely, in procuring that the inhabitants of the earth should make an Image like to the Empire of Rome, in the which it liuing and continuing, might still be honoured. And whether soeuer we turne our eyes in comparing of them both, whether to Religion, or to the Gouernement, it shall appeare that the face in water answereth not more conformably to that which looketh into it, then the Romane persecuting Empire, to this Antichristian estate of the Bishop of Rome which hath been ever since the time of Boniface. Touching Religion, the one is as detestable in filthy Idolatry as the other was: the difference onely is, that which the Apostles haue foretold; that the former being in open hostility against the Lord and his annointed, this should be vnder-hand, vnder an hypocriticall pretence of serving God, and him whom hee hath sent Christ Iesus: the former being without any vizard to disguise his hatred of God and his Christ; this shall be mistically muffled with a shew of the loue of both. In the Gouernement also, milke is not more like milke, then they are one to another. For first, as in the Empire there was one which commanded absolutely, so is it in this Image thereof. And as the Empire tooke authority over matters both Diuine and Humane: so the Pope challengeth and vsurpeth both swords Temporall and Ecclesiasticall. And as diuers of the Emperours in the pride of their heart challenged diuine honour: so the Pope professeth that hee is able to forgiue sinnes, and to throw to 2. Thes. 2. 7 1. Tim. 4. 2 2. Pet. 2. 1.

hell infinite ſoules, &c. and may not once be asked why hee doth ſo. And as ſome of the Emperours (as Diocleſian) offered his feete to be kiſſed of his ſubiects: ſo the Pope offereth his feete to be kiſſed even of the Emperours themſelues. As the Emperours had their Senate at Rome, ſo the Pope hath his Cardinals for a ſet ſtanding Councell at Rome. As they had their Deputies over every Province to keep them under the obedience of the Empire: ſo hath he his Metropolitans over Provinces, and Biſhops over Dioceſes which may hold the Popes bridle in the mouthes of the people, that being ridden with ſuch a churliſh bit, they may be the more eaſily holden in the thraldome and ſervitude of his Iron and tyrannous yoake.

This Image and reſembling reacheth it ſelfe to the Seate alſo; the Popes See being in the ſame place where the Emperours throne was. Alſo, to the language there being the ſame endevour of the Pope in the Church, to thruſt vpon it the Latine tongue, as was of the Emperours in urging the uſe thereof in the Common-weales of their iuriſdiction, whereof the ſteps yet remaine in our Evidences and Conveyances of lands and goods. And had it not been that the Scripture muſt heerein alſo be fulfilled, there was no reaſon that the Hebrew and the Greek tongues (which the holy Ghoſt hath made choice of for the records of the holy Scripture) ſhould be paſſed by, and the Latine tongue taken, which hath no more priviledge of holineſſe then other barbarous tongues haue; eſpecially ſeeing by theſe two, as well as by the Latine tongue, they might haue gained the advantage of one of the principall bulwarkes of Popiſh religion, which is, the peoples ignorance in that which is ſaid or ſung; to the end, that in the ignorance of all, they might neither hate the evill, nor yet fall into any liking of that which is good.

Laſt of all, let the Reader note that the Ieſuites in defending of Images, are themſelues become Images and ſhadowes of men, rather then men. For how groſſely and palpably do they erre, which eſteeme that Nabuchodonozor ſet up his own Image to be worſhipped, to the end that in the honour of this Image he might be honoured: as both their words in part, and the drift of their argument, and their other examples of Chriſt and his Image, and Antichriſt and his Image which they haue coupled with this, do declare? Where it is evident that Nabuchodonoſor made the Image of his God, and not of himſelfe: And therefore he chargeth the three yong men, not becauſe they refuſed to honour him, but becauſe they refuſed to honour his God in the Image he had erected: And the yong men deny not to ſerue and honour him, but to ſerue and honour his God, or the Image of his God. And ſeeing he had made the Image ſix cubites high, and as many cubites broad, he ſhould thereby haue propounded himſelfe to be gazed upon for a monſter, rather then to be with any commendation, much leſſe with admiration be regarded of his ſubiects.

Verſe. 17 And that no man may bye or ſel, but he that hath the character, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name.

Antichriſts triple honor againſt the honor of Chriſt.

RHEM. 7. [17. The character or the name.] As belike for the peruerſe imitation of Chriſt, whoſe image (ſpecially as on the Rhood or crucifixe) he ſeeth honored and exalted in euery Church, he will haue his image adored (for that is Antichriſt, in emulation of like honour, aduerſarie to Chriſt) ſo for that he ſeeth all true Chriſtian men to beare the badge of his Croſſe in their forehead, he likewiſe will force all his to haue an other marke, to aboliſh the ſigne of Chriſt. By the like emulation alſo and wicked oppoſition he will haue his name and the letters thereof to be ſacred, and to be worne in mens caps, or written in ſolemne places, and to be worſhipped, as the name of Ieſus is and ought to be among Chriſtian men. And as the ineffable name of God was among the Iewes expreſſed by a certaine number of 4. characters (therefore called Tetragrammaton) ſo it ſeemeth the Apoſtle alludeth here to the nmmber of Antichriſts name.

The proteſtants by aboliſhing of Chriſt image, and croſſe and irreuerence to the name IESVS, make a ready way to the honor of Antichriſt.

And here it is much to be noted, that the Proteſtants pluckiug down the image of Chriſt out of all Churches, and his ſigne of the croſſe from mens foreheads, and taking the honour and reuerence of the name IESVS, do make roome for Antichriſts image, and marke, and name. And when Chriſts images and enſignes or armes ſhall be aboliſhed, and the Idoll of Antichriſt ſet vp in ſteed thereof, as it is already begun: then is the abomination of deſolation which was foretold by Daniel and our Sauiour.

CARTVV. 7. [17 The character or the name.] Behold againe the thwarteſſe of the Popiſh teachers: In other bookes of Scripture where the ſpeech being plaine and ſimple it calleth a ſpade a ſpade, their tongues and pennes itch after Allegories and diffuſed expoſitions; but in this booke, which is almoſt altogether allegoricall, they will tie the holy Ghoſt, as it were, to the ſtake of his words: for otherwiſe, who can bee ſo ſimple as not to know, that by a Marke or Character in the right hand, or in the fore-head, is underſtood an open avowance and profeſſion of the doctrine of Anti-chriſt, whereby they bee as well knowne to appertaine to Antichriſt, as the ſheepe or other cattell by their brand, are known to belong unto their owners. And it is a ſpeech borrowed from the Prophet, who teacheth that all the faithfull had, as it were, a marke in their forehead, which being known to the Lord, hee would by a ſecret providence of his, ſo cauſe the deſtroyer to paſſe by them without hurt, as if the enemy himſelfe and the revenger, had been able to haue read ſomething in their foreheads that ſhould haue ſerved for a warning unto him not once to touch them. The difference onely is, that where that marke was onely known to God, the marke here ſpoken of is alſo known to men. But whether it be by profeſſion of ſpeech, or of ſome other outward marke in the head or in the hand, left or right, this place doth not preciſely determine. Your Prieſts and Clergie carry it in your crownes, and even the very ſigne of the Croſſe, under the covert whereof you would gladly ſhroud your Pope, that he ſhould not be diſcovered to be the Antichriſt, is no other but that which may well become the Antichriſt whom the holy Apoſtles Paul and Iohn doe paint out. For ſeeing he is not by their deſcription an open and profeſſed enemy of Chriſt, as were the Emperours of Rome whoſe Image he is, but a coulourable mainetainer of him, what badge or cogniſance could he more fitly deviſed to ſteale upon & ſurpriſe the true Chriſtians with, then the ſame which ſometime they vſed to teſtifie that they were not aſhamed of that kind of death of Chriſt for the which the Infidels proudly and deſpitefully reiected him? It is well knowne to bee a practiſe for one enemy to ſpread out the banner and enſignes of the other: and therefore as men in warre do change their enſignes, and yet fight the ſame quarrell ſtill: even ſo we ſeeing the ſhamefull abuſe of the croſſe, ſometimes borne and holden out by the true Profeſſors of Chriſt, uſe the ſame liberty in laying it downe which they did in taking it up. The dotage of the Rhemiſts expounding the abhomination of deſolation, Math. 24. of Antichriſt, is before confuted upon Math. 24.

Verſe 18 Here is wiſdom. He that hath vnderſtanding, let him count the number of the beaſt. For it is the number of a man: and the number of him is ſixe hundred ſixtie ſixe.

RHEM. 18. [18. Let him count] Though God would not haue it manifeſt before hand to the world, who in particular this Antichriſt ſhould bee: yet it pleaſed him to giue ſuch tokens of him, that when hee commeth, the faithfull may eaſily take notice of him, according as it is written of the euent of other prophecies concerning our Sauiour. That when it is come to paſſe, you may beleeue. In the the meane time wee muſt take heede that wee iudge not ouer raſhly of Gods ſecrets, the holy writter here ſignifying, that it is a poynt of high vnderſtanding, illuminated extraordinarily by Gods ſpirit, to recken right and diſcipher truely before hand, Antichriſts name and perſon. Antichriſts name ſecret. Io. 14. 29.

CARTVV. 18. [18 Let him count.] Who is the particular Anti chriſt could not bee manifeſted before: ſeeing he is no particular perſon as hath been ſaid and proved: otherwiſe the Holy Ghoſt uſeth all meanes that men may know him euidently before hand, to the end that when he ſhould come, none of Gods people might be deceiued by him. And if he had been a ſingular or particular man, as he is dreamed to be, it is to bee deemed that the Lord would haue marked him out by name, as he did Ioſias and Cyrus, whom hee calleth by their names long or euer they came into the world. And ſo much the rather as both the Reuelations vnder the Goſpell are more lightſome then thoſe vnder the Law, and the matter prophecied heere intereſteth the Church more then the matter there foretold did. And therefore that he hath no proper name, but common names onely, as the deſtroyer, &c. it argueth that he is no particular man, but a politick body conſiſting of many members ſucceeding one another. As for Ioh. 16. 29. it maketh nothing to proue that the Lord would not particularly name Antichriſt if he had been a particular man, but rather proueth the contrary: For our Sauiour Chriſt doth tell the diſciples moſt particularly of things that ſhould befall vnto him touching his death and reſurrection, to the end that when they ſhould be executed they might be known to be the ſame which he foretold. 1. King. 13. 2. Eſay 45. 1.

RHEM. 18. [18. It is the number of a man] A man he muſt be, and not a Deuill or ſpirit, as here it is cleere, and by S. Paul 2. Theſſ. 2. where he is called the man of ſin. Againe, hee muſt bee one particular perſon, and not a number, a ſucceſſion, or whole order of any degree of men: becauſe his proper name, and the particular number, and the characters thereof be (though obſcurely) inſinuated. Which reproueth the wicked vanitie of Heretickes that would haue Chriſts own Vicars, the ſucceſſours of his cheefe Apoſtle, yea the whole order of them for many ages together, to bee this Antichriſt. Who by his deſcription here and in the ſaid Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, muſt bee one ſpeciall man, and of a particular proper name, as our Lord IESVS is. And whoſoeuer hee be, the Proteſtants vndoubtedly are his preculſors for as they make his way by ridding away Chriſts images, croſſe, and name, ſo they exceedingly promote the matter by taking away Chriſts chiefe miniſter, that all may be plaine for Antichriſt. Antichriſt ſhal be one ſpeciall man and of a peculiar name.

If the Pope had been Antichriſt, and had been reuea'ed now a good many yeares ſithence, as theſe fellowes ſay he is to them, then the number of his name would agree to him, and the prophecie being now fulfilled, it would euidently appeare that he bare the name and number here noted, for (no doubt) when he commeth, this count of the letters or number of his name which before is ſo hard to know, will be eaſie, for he will ſet vp his name in euery place, euen as wee faithfull men do now aduance IESVS. And what name proper or appellative of all or any of the Popes do they find to agree with this number, notwithſtanding they boaſt that they haue found this whole order & euery of them theſe thouſand yeares to be Antichriſt; and the reſt before euen from S. Peter, foreworkers toward his kingdom? The Pope cannot be Antichriſt.

CARTVV. 9. [18. It is the number of a man.] As an ancient Writer truely ſayd, that it belongeth not to one and the ſame man to taſte wine and to diſcerne of the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, may be much more truely ſaid of theſe Maſſe-merchants that it is not one mans worke to ſing Maſſe, and to expound the Scriptures. And therefore let the Reader marke what a diſſolute cauſe this is, which to proue Antichriſt to be one ſole particular man, alledgeth this place, whereby the Prophet meaneth not to ſet forth any particular name of Antichriſt, nor of any thing belonging to him. Although it be true that he is a man, and not a diuell, yet that is not proued out of this place, where by man is not meant Antichriſt, but man generally: For the Prophet by theſe words whetteth on the Reader to the ſearching out of the myſtery of Antichriſt, for that the number which diſcrieth him is no other then that which falleth within the compaſſe and reach of the diſcourſe and capacity of a man. And he tooke this manner of ſpeech (as others in this booke) from the Prophet, who calleth it the ſtile or writing of a man, which a man may well read and underſtand. Likewiſe, the Apoſtle calleth it a tentation, after the manner of men, which is no other then that which a man through the ſtrength, God aſſiſteth him with, is able to ouercome. Ierom in an Epiſtle of his. Eſay 8. 1. 1. Cor. 10. 13.

RHEM. 18. [18. The number 666.] For aſmuch as the ancient expoſitors and other do thinke (for certaine knowledge thereof no mortall man can haue without an expreſſe reuelation) that his name conſiſteth of ſo many, and ſuch letters in Greeke, as according to their manner of numbering by the Alphabet make 666. and for aſmuch as the letters making that number, may be found in diuers names both proper and common: (as S. Irenæus findeth them in Latinos and Teitan, H)ppolitus, in Græcanico, Aretas All framing of letters to expreſſe Antichriſt name, is vncertaine Ireneli 5. in fine.

Arctas in Lamptris, and some of this age in Luderus, which was Luthers name in Alman tongue:) therefore we see there can be no certaintie, & euery one frameth & applieth the letters to his own purpose, & most absurd folly it is of the Heretikes, to apply the word, Latinos, to the Pope, neither the whole order in common, nor euer any particular Pope being so called, and S. Irenæus the first that obserued it in that word, applied to the Empire and state of the Romane Emperour, with then was Heathen, and not to the Pope of his dayes or after him, and yet preferred the word, Teitan, as more agreeable, with this admonition, that it were a very perilous and presumptuous thing to define any certaintie before hand, of that number and name. And truly whatsoeuer the Protestants presume herein of the Pope, we may boldly discharge Luther of that dignity. He is undoubtedly one of Antichrists precursors but not Antichrist himselfe.

CARTVV 10. [18 The number 666.] The opinion that the Name of Antichrist shall stand of such and so many Greek letters, as according to the manner of numbring by the Alphabete of that tongue make 666. how great, and how many Patrones soever, old or new, it hath, is (by their good leaue) more beseeming the exposition of some Cabelist, then the Prophet of God: whereas the Prophet here handling an other matter then either Daniel, or other the old Prophets did: yet for the manner of handling of it treadeth in their steps. The whole Scripture affoording no such example as this, in carrying the knowledge of any future accident to the present Age wherein they lived after this sort; it is not to be thought that Iohn cut out an odde path wherein he would walke alone, singled from all the rest. And Irenæus himselfe which gaue occasion of this opinion utterly misliketh this kinde of handling the Scripture. Secondly, there being no Prophesie in this book but a man which is diligent and wise may come to the knowledge of, euen before it come to passe: and no man by this meanes being able to know who Antichrist shall be before he be extant in the world, it followeth that this is not the meane whereby the spirit of God would convey the knowledge of this mysterie.

Lib. 2. cont. valent. c. 40

If indeed there were but one Greek word that stood of such and so many letters as this number would arise of, then by this meane, a man throughly exercised in the Greek tongue might know what his name should be; but there being so many, it is impossible in this manner of proceeding, any certaine truth should be attained unto. There remaine the expositions which others giue of this number, which we refuse not in this place to set down, leaving them to the choice of the Reader, as having no certaine iudgement of any of them which wee are able to deliver with that assurance and warrant of reason that is meet for the Reader to relie upon. Howbeit we will not reckon up all other the expositions which the diversitie of mens spirits haue troubled the world with, but two alone: in one of which, the truth of this matter is like certainely to finde rest. The former of which is, that those yeres do note the time wherein the Antichrist of Rome, having been of long time (as monsters and great beasts use to be) shapen and framed in all his parts and members, as it were underhand, should haue a head to the accomplishing of the whole man of sinne. The other opinion, is of them which expound this to be the number of yeeres which shall come between the birth and death, or utter destruction of Antichrist.

Here is something wanting.

The Iesuites being a vermin or Grashopper that deuoureth all, and giveth nothing, yet here seeme to bee somewhat liberall. For see how franke they are, that haue acquitted Luther from being the Antichrist whom the Apostle speaketh of. We dare say they look not that we should discharge their Pope of this crime, when themselues (peradventure) if they would giue audience to their own hearts and consciences, would not set him free. Well yet, in yeelding to the truth, we would bee loath to be behinde them; and therefore as they affirme Luther to be the Precursor, or fore runner to Antichrist, so we confirme the same, that he was indeed his fore-runner, yet not to his birth, but to his death; not to paue the way to him, but to lay blockes and stops in it whereat he might stumble and fall, never to rise againe.

CHAP. XIIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 4 THESE are they which were not defiled with women. For thy are ‡ virgins These folow the Lambe whithersoeuer he shall goe, These were bought from among men, the first fruites ‡ to God and the Lambe:

RHEM. 1. [4. Virgin.] One state of life more excellent then an other, and virgins for their purity passing the rest, and alwayes accompanying Christ according to the Churches hymne out of this place. Quocunque pergis, virgines sequuntur.

RHEM. 2. [4. The first fruits.] This the Church applieth to the holy Innocents that died first for Christ.

CARTVV. 1. [4 Virgins.] These virgins here spoken of are not opposed to married persons, as the Iesuites most absurdly affirme, but are opposed and set against the fornicators with the whore of Babylon, as appeareth in the eigth verse of this chapter. Wherefore it is a notable spirit of slumber, which applieth that against holy matrimony which is said against filthy fornication: & yet more spodrowsie which transfateth that to the bodily fellowship of a man, with his wife, which is euidently ken of the fellowship of God with his Church. Vnlesse they had blindfolded themselues of purpose that they would not see the truth; how could they but vnderstand that the whole Church is compared to a virgin, through the Ministerie of the Church handfasted vnto Christ? And this may easily appeare to be meant here for that there is nothing said of these virgins, which agreeth not to all the faithfull:

2. Cor. 11. 2.

For

For firſt, they haue all the name of the lambe of his Father written in their fore heads: for not virgins onely, but al the ſeruants of our God are ſigned in their foreheads. Secondly, all the faithfull are both bidden, and do accordingly ſing the new ſong which is here ſong by theſe virgins. Or is there any of the faithfull that is not redeemed from the earth by the bloud of the Lambe, or that doe not follow the Lambe whereſoeuer he goeth? And is it not ſaid of all the faithfull Iewes (and not of the Children onely that were ſlaine by Herod) that they are the firſt fruits vnto God. Neither is there any guile in the mouth of thoſe whoſe ſinnes are forgiuen them: and in Jeſus Chriſt all the faithfull are without ſpot or blot, or any ſuch thing. Laſt of all this expoſition of the Ieſuites is flat againſt their own words, who affirme before in this Chapter that theſe are the ſame number of the elect that were ſigned Cap. 7, where in the margent they note, that by that number there ſpoken of are vnderſtood all the elect of the Iewes and of the Gentiles. Note alſo the wickednes of the Ieſuites, who, howſoeuer they hide and diſguiſe their hatred to the holy and honorable eſtate of marriage, yet here it hath euidently broken out, in that they account all married perſons defiled with women, whileſt they oppoſe virgins in a proper ſignification to all manner perſons whom they will haue to be branded by the holy Ghoſt in this place with this mark, that they are defiled with women.

Apoc. 7.3. Pſal. 96.2. Apoc. 5.9. 1 Cor. 6.19. Gal. 2.4. Ioh. 10.4. & 14.3. Iames 1.18. Pſal. 32.2. Cant. 4.7. Eph. 5.27.

Verſe. 8 And another Angel followed, ſaying, *Fallen fallen is that great ‡ Babylon, which of the wine of the wrath of her fornication made all nations to drink.

RHEM. 3. [8. Babylon.] The city of the deuil, which is the vniuerſall ſociety of the wicked miſbeleeuers and ill liuers in the world.

CARTVV. 3. [8. Babylon.] That this Babylon is not the vniuerſall ſocietie of wicked miſbeleeuers and euill liuers in the world, is manifoldly euident. For ſo ſhould not this booke bee any viſion or Reuelation of the ſpirit, which God gaue vnto his ſeruant Iohn as a ſpeciall gift and priuiledge aboue others; ſeing there is not the laſt or leaſt of the Saints and faithfull of God which knoweth not out of the generall doctrine of the Law and the Prophets, that the wicked ſhall periſh: neither needed Iohn to haue an Angell ſent him to tel him thereof as that which he knew of himſelf; or if he had not, he might haue been enformed of it by the leaſt in the kingdom of heauen. This fall alſo here foretold being before the end of the world, before which time there ſhall neuer be a fall of the Cittie of the Deuill generally of the whole ſocietie of miſbeleeuers and euill liuers: it is euident that Babylon in this place cannot be the vniuerſall ſocietie of wicked men. And this may ſuffice for confutation of this their friuolous interpretation. That Babylon is Popiſh Rome, it ſhall after more cleerely appeare in the proper place.

Verſe. 12 Here is the patience of ſaints, which ‡ keep the commandements of God and the faith of IESVS.

RHEM. 4. [12. Keepe the.] Faith is not enough to ſaluation, without fulfilling of Gods commandements.

CARTVV. 4. [12. Keepe the.] That faith, and keeping of the Commandements of God, go together appeareth out of this place; but that the fulfilling of the Commandements in our own perſon is required hath no ground out of this place, much leſſe that by the fulfilling of them wee are ſaued; the contrarie whereof is manifeſt out of this place: for if we could fulfill the Commandements, what need ſhould there be of Faith?

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe. 13 And I heard a voyce from heauen, ſaying to me, Write, Bleſſed are the dead which dy in our Lord † from hence forth now, ſaith the ſpirit, that they reſt from their labours. for their workes folowe them.

RHEM. 5. [13. From hence forth now.] This being ſpecially ſpoken of Martyrs (as not onely S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to take it, but the Caluiniſts themſelues, tranſlating, in domino, for our Lords cauſe) the Proteſtants haue no reaſon to vſe the place againſt Purgatory or prayer for the departed ſeeing the Catholike Church & all her children confeſſe that all Martyrs are ſtraight after their death, in bliſſe, and need no prayers. Whereof this is S. Auguſtines known ſentence. Hee doth iniury to the Martyr, that prayeth for the Martyr. Ser. 17. de verb. Apoſt. c. 1. and againe to this purpoſe hee writeth thus moſt excellently tract. 84. in Ioan. Wee keepe not a memory of Martyrs at our Lords table, as wee doe of other that reſt in peace, that is, for the intent to pray for them, but rather that they may for vs &c.

Bell. Praying for the dead and vnto Saints at the Altar. The place abuſed againſt Purgatory anſwered.

But if we take the words generally for al deceaſed in ſtate of grace, as it may be alſo, then we ſay that euen ſuch, though they be in Purgatorie and Gods chaſtiſement in the next life, and need our prayer, yet (according to the foreſaid words of S. Auguſtines) do reſt in peace, being diſcharged from the labours, afflictions, and perſecutions of this world, and (which is more) from the daily dangers of ſinne and damnation, & put into infallible ſecuritie of eternall ioy with vnſpeakable comfort of conſcience, and ſuch indeed are more happie and bleſſed then any liuing, who yet are vſually in the Scriptures called bleſſed euen in the middes of the tribulations of this life. Whereby we ſee that theſe words, from hence forth they ſhall reſt from their labours, may truely agree to them alſo that are in Purgatorie, and ſo here is nothing proued againſt purgatorie. Laſtly, this aduerbe, amodo, in Latine, as in Greek ἀπάρτι doth not properly ſignifie from this preſent time foreward, as though the Apoſtle had ſaid, that after their death and ſo foreward they are happie: but it noteth and ioyneth the time paſt togethet with time preſent, in this ſenſe, that ſuch as haue died ſince Chriſts aſcenſion, when he firſt, entring into heauen opened it for others, go not to Limbus patrum, as they were wont before Chriſts time, but are in caſe to go ſtraight to bliſſe, except the impediment be in themſelues. Therefore they are here called bleſſed, that die now in this ſtate of grace and of the new Teſtament, in compariſon of the old faithfull and good perſons.

Phoenix in Lexico.

CART VV. 5. [13. From henceforth now.] Although this place be especially spoken of those which giue their liues for the testimony of Christ: yet because all the faithfull die in Christ, as those which being members of the mysticall body of the Church whereof Christ is the head, cannot be severed from him in their death. And because also that as there is one faith, so there is one hope of the
Eph. 4 4. 5. life to come: the Protestants haue good reason to use this place against Purgatory, seeing unspeakeable happinesse followeth the one as well as the other, although it bee in some difference of glory in the life to come, according to the divers measures of graces which the Lord hath undeservedly bestowed upon them in this presentlife. Now granting that it is vnderstood of all the faithfull, let vs see what fine fuellers they be in the Popes kichen that they can make the Purgatorie fire so cunningly, that the findging heat thereof shall not trouble nor hinder the peace & blessed estate of the faithfull that are departed. They say therefore that notwithstanding they be in Purgatorie yet do they rest in Peace, according (say they) to the words of S. Augustine. Such peace bee to the enemies of God and of his Christ as is in purgatorie, where the torments differ nothing from the pains and tortures of hell it selfe, sauing onely for the durance of them. If this be the peace of the faithfull, then did the persecutions of Nero, Valerianus, Decius and other such monstrous Tyrants, and the spanish Inquisition also not inferiour to any of them, (if it counteruaile not the cruelty of all of them together:) nothing else but procure the peace and quiet of the faithfull. And if that be so, there may truly rise some credit to your fable that Traian the outragious Tyrant and persecutor was at Pope Gregories instance in prayer deliuered out of hell as one (belike) which being vniustly sent vnto hell for working the peace of the Church by cruell torments was afterward iustly restored to heauen as vnto his right place. But let vs heare the flaps of their reasons wherewith more sottishly then Terences foole they make wind to coole the extreme seething heat of the scalded parboild souls of Purgatorie. First (say they) for that they are discharged from their labours, afflictions and persecutions of this world. If you blesse your friends after this sort, keep your friendship to your selues. For what is this, but as it is said in proverbe, to fall out of the frying pan into the fire, from the hands of men into the hands of the Deuils; from a fire of thornes, to a fire of Iuniper coales; or rather from a painted fire (as your maisters vse to speake) to the fire that burneth indeed: the other being (in comparison) scarce a shadow of this fire of Purgatorie. Where by the way, you greatly forget your selues, which send men to purgatorie that haue suffered persecution, who are either Martyrs or confessours. Belike you thought to make vp the breach of purgatorie by enlarging the dominion thereof, which you made into it by commending (for shift of answer) the happie estate of purgatorie soules: which one voyce, if it come abroad, will do you more displeasure then you are aware of. For where to coine money, you haue wisely made the fire of Purgatory exceeding hot: now this cooling of it so much, will marre the Popish mint.

Secondly you say they are blessed for that they are discharged from the daily dangers of sinne and damnation, and put into infallible security of eternal ioy, and vnspeakable comfort of conscience: and such indeed (say you) are more happie then any liuing who are vsually called blessed euen in the middest of tribulations in this life. But first of all, wee aske you, how they know they are in security against the danger of condemnation? who shall tell them of it? The most of them neuer heard the voice of a preacher: and those that haue heard you preach, could neuer heare any thing at your mouthes but doubting of the fauour of God. So that vnlesse their Tormentors, (the Deuils will be more kind vnto them then you are, and help to comfort them against the downfall of dispaire, by telling them that they shall once certainly come out; wee see not how these poore soules can come to the knowledge of this security whereby they may vphold themselues in comfort. Secondly, how is it possible that they should be in either securitie from sinne, or from the Condemnation which belongeth thereunto; when being in the infinite torment of the damned soules, for the time, it cannot bee but that they must needs sin by horrible impatiency, and consequently look for the fearefull iudgement that belongeth thereunto? for seeing none was ever able to beare the wrath of God, but Christ, who was God himself, it is euident that they being but men, & sinful men, must needs fall vnder the burden of such a mountain of Gods wrath. Thirdly the Iesuits to proue their dreame of purgatorie bring another dreame of theirs that the faithfull in this life cannot be assured of their saluation, as if they would make cleane one filth with another. Although the reason wherewith they vphold the purgatorie soules in comfort, for that they are assured of a good end and issue of their troubles: proueth euidently against them that the faithfull in this life should otherwise bee ground to peeces as small as meale were it not that they were vnderlaid with the certaintie of the hope of euerlasting life which is laid vp for them: so that their words maintaining a discomfortable doubtfulnes of the faithfull in this life this their own reason standeth vp against them.

Thirdly, they say that these words forthwith or from henceforth do not signifie from this time foreward, but noteth a difference between them that died sithence the Ascention of Christ, that go not to Limbus Patrum, as they were woont before Christs time. But these are not the words of sobrietie, but of men that are drunken with the cup of the fornication of the whore of Babylon, whereby they are not able to speake a right word. For it is manifest that the Prophet opposeth the rest of the Martyrs to the restlesnes of those which die branded with the beasts marke v. 10. 11. Secondly, in the 12. verse he sheweth that the patience of the saincts consisteth in a due meditation of this blessednes. And therefore the Martyrs which died vnder the law, before the Ascention of Christ patiently bearing the crosse of Christ, as well as those vnder the Gospell; did it in the strength of the same promise made to them then, that is made to the Martyrs now. And if it should not haue relation from the moment of their death, to all the time that should follow, but as you would haue it; it should deprive many Martyrs of their happinesse that died between the time of Christs ascention, and the time wherein this was spoken vnto Iohn by the Angel.

Lastly, part of the blessednesse here spoken of standeth in that they that die, rest from their labours. If therefore you will haue that this sentence doth put a difference betweene those which died before Christs Christs ascension, and them which died sithence: it must follow that the Martyrs which died before Christ, were not onely deprived of the glory of God, which is your fabulous doctrine, but that they were also still in labour and paine, which is directly contrary to your own doctrine of Limbus patrum. Thus it is also seen how Limbus being brought as next neighbour to succour purgatory, lighteth vpon a knock it selfe, and releeveth Purgatory nothing at all.

Last of all, out of Augustine, Tract. 84. in Ioan. which mentioneth prayer for others that dye, and not for Martyrs, they would haue the Reader thinke, that because prayer was made for others, and not for Martyrs, that Augustine was then of opinion, that other of the faithfull were in Purgatory, as those that were eased by the prayers of the living. But it hath been shewed, that notwithstanding the superstition of prayer for the dead, be ancient yet that antiquitie maketh mention of divers other causes of prayers for the dead then Purgatory, and that they prayed also for such men as your owne doctrine exempteth from Purgatory. And to go no further then to this place of Augustine which you haue noted, it appeareth here, that in Augustines time they prayed for all the faithfull saving for the Martyrs, and yet you will not thereof conclude, that all faithfull (Martyrs excepted) went to Purgatory.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse. 1 AND I saw an other signe in heauen great and marueilous: seuen Angels hauing the seuen last plagues. Because in them the wrath of God is consummate.

RHEM. 1. [1. And I saw.] The tribulations about the day of judgement.

Verse. 2 And I saw as it were a sea of glasse mingled with fire, and them that ouercame the beast and his image and the number of his name, standing vpon the sea of glasse, hauing the harpes of God:

RHEM. 2. [2. A sea of glasse.] Baptisme.

Verse. 3 And singing the ‡ song of Moyses the seruant of God, and the song of the Lambe, saying, Great and marueilous are thy works Lord God omnipotent, iust and true are thy waies king of the worldes.

RHEM. 3. [3. A song of Moyses.] The song of Moyses and Christ, is the new Testament and the old.

CARTVV. 3. [3. A song of Moses.] The Iesuits cannot see the woods for trees: for notwithstanding that euen in this and the next verse the song of Moses and of the Lambe is here expressly set downe, thereby meaning a notable and singular song of thankesgiving for the rare deliverance that God gaue some times by the Ministery of Moses, and now by the ministery and power of the Lambe: yet these buzzards make a speculation here of the New and Old Testament, wherein they neither touch heaven nor earth.

CHAP. XVI.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 6. BEcause they haue shed the bloud of the Saints and Prophets, and thou hast given them bloud to drinke: for they are worthy.

RHEM. 1. [6. Because they haue.] The great reuenge that God will doe at the latter day vpon the persecutors of the Saints.

FVLK. This reuenge is before the latter day, whereof let the bloudy Papists make their account to taste.

Verse 9. And men boyled with great heate, and blasphemed the name of God, hauing power over these plagues, neither did they penance to giue him glory.

RHEM. 2. [9. Blasphemed the name.] The desperate and damned persons shall blaspheme God perpetually, which shall be such onely as do not repent in this life.

FVLK. He speaketh of the reprobate limbes of Antichrist being aliue, for they that are dead, are not in case to repent.

Verse 19. And ‡ the great Citty was made into three parts: and the Cities of the Gentiles fell. And Babylon the great came into memory before God, to giue her the cup of wine of the indignation of his wrath.

RHEM. 3. [19. The great Citty.] The Cittie or Common-wealth of the wicked, diuided into three parts: into Infidels, Heretickes, and evill Catholikes. This Citty is here called Babylon, whereof see the Annotation upon the next Chapter, vers. 5.

FVLK. The Citty is Rome, and the communaltie of Papists, that hold their faith and Religion of that Citty, as in the next chapter it is manifest.

CHAP. XVII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 1. AND there came one of the ſeven Angels which had the ſeven vials, and ſpake with mee, ſaying, Come, I will ſhew thee ‡ the damnation of the great harlot, which ſitteth upon many waters.

RHEM 1. [1. The damnation.] The finall damnation of the whole company of the reprobate, called here the great whoore.

FVLK. The finall damnation of the whole company of the reprobate is deſcribed cap. 20. 14. &c. Therefore the great Whoore in this chapter ſignifieth the congregation of Antichriſt, the members whereof be all ſpirituall Citizens of Rome: their whole faith and religion depending upon the Sea of Rome, and their head uſurping all his tyranny, by pretence of right of that Citty. A liuely image of which viſion God made manifeſt to the whole world, when a whoore was made head of the Romiſh Church, called Ioan the 7. and of ſome the 8. commonly Pope Ioane. Which ſo wringeth the Papiſts at the heart, that they haue no way to ſhift it of, but by impudent denying of that which is ſo notorious, even in their owne ſtories of their Popes liues.

Pope Ioane, a liuely image of the whoore of Babylon.

Verſe 8. The beaſt which thou ſaweſt, ‡ was, and is not, and ſhall come up out of the bottomleſſe depth, and goe into deſtruction: and the inhabitants on the earth (whoſe names are not written in the booke of life from the making of the world) ſhall maruell, ſeeing the beaſt that was, and is not.

RHEM. 2. [8. Was, and is not.] It ſignifieth the ſhort reigne of Antichriſt, who is the chiefe horne or head of the beaſt.

FVLK. The reigne of Antichriſt is ſhort in compariſon of the eternall reigne of Chriſt. Hee ſpeaketh of the Romane Empire which had been glorious, but then was in declining, and yet was not aboliſhed, but ſhould be aboliſhed in the Emperours, and raiſed out of hell by Antichriſt.

Verſe 12. And the ten hornes which thou ſaweſt: are ‡ ten kings, which haue not yet received kingdome, but ſhall receiue power as kings one houre after the beaſt.

RHEM. 3.]12. Ten kings.] Some expound it of ten ſmall kingdoms, into which the Romane Empire ſhall be divided, which ſhall all ſerue Antichriſt both in his life, and a little after.

FVLK. When the Romane Empire was aboliſhed to make roome for Antichriſt, theſe ſmall kingdomes were erected, which were made ſubiect to the Pope, but at length ſhall hate the Whoore of Babylon, and make her deſolate, as uerſ. 16. which is begun to be accompliſhed in theſe dayes.

ANNOTALIONS.

Verſe 5. And in her forehead a name written, Myſtery Babylon the great, mother of the fornications and abhominations of the earth.

RHEM. 4. [5. Babylon.] In the end of S. Peters firſt Epiſtle, where the Apoſtle dateth it at Babylon, which the ancient writers (as wee there noted) affirme to be meant of Rome: the Proteſtants will not in any wiſe haue it ſo, becauſe they would not be driuen to confeſſe that Peter euer was at Rome, but here for that they thinke it maketh for their opinion, that the Pope is Antichriſt, and Rome the ſeate and cittie of Antichriſt, they will needs haue Rome to bee this Babylon, this great whore, and this purple harlot, for ſuch fellowes, in the expoſition of holy Scripture, bee led onely by their preiudicate opinions and hereſies to which they draw all things without all indifferencie and ſinceritie.

The Proteſtants here will needs haue Babylon to be Rome, but not in S. Peters Epiſtle.

But S. Auguſtine, Aretas, and other writers moſt commonly expound it, neither of Babylon it ſelfe a cittie of Chaldæa or AEgypt, nor of Rome, or any one citty, which may be ſo called ſpiritually, as Hieruſalem before chap. 11. is named ſpirituall Sodome and Egypt, but of the generall ſocietie of the impious, and of thoſe that preferre the terrene kingdom and commodity of the world, before God and eternall felicity. The author of the Commentaries vpon the Apocalypſe ſet foorth in S. Ambroſe name, writeth thus. This great whore ſometime ſignifieth Rome, ſpecially when at that time when the Apoſtle wrote this, did perſecute the Church of God, but otherwiſe it ſignifieth the whole cittie of the deuill, that is, the vniuerſall corps of the reprobate. Tertullian alſo taketh it for Rome, thus, Babylon (ſaith hee) in S. Iohn is a figure of the citie of Rome, being ſo great, ſo proud of the Empire, and the deſtroyer of the Saints. Which is plainely ſpoken of that cittie when it was heathen, the head of the terrene dominion of the world, the perſecutor of the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours, the ſeate of Nero, Domitian and the like, Chriſts ſpeciall enemies the ſinke of idolatry, ſinne, and falſe worſhip of the Pagan gods. Then was it Babylon, when S. Iohn wrote this, and then was Nero and the reſt figures of Antichriſt, and that cittie the reſemblance of the principall place (whereſoeuer it bee) that Antichriſt ſhall reigne in, about the latter end of the world.

By Babylon (according to all the Fathers) is ſignified, partly the whole ſocietie of the wicked, partly the citty of Rome, onely in reſpect of the terrene and heathenish ſtate of them that perſecuted the Church. Lib. adverſ. Iud. 10.

Now to apply that to the Roman Church & Apoſtolike See, either now or then which was ſpoken onely of the terrene ſtate of that cittie, as it was the ſeate of the Emperour, and not of Peter, when it did ſlea aboue thirtie Popes Chriſts Vicars, one after another, and endeuoured to deſtroy the whole Church: that is moſt blaſphemous and fooliſh.

The Church in Rome was one thing, and Babylon in Rome an other thing, Peter ſate in Rome, and Nero ſate in Rome, but Peter, as in the Church of Rome: Nero, as in the Babylon of Rome: which diſtinction the heretikes might haue learned by Peter himſelf ep.1.c.5. writing thus. The Church ſaluteth you, that is in Babylon, coelect. So that the Church and the very choſen Church was in Rome when Rome was Babylon, whereby it is plain that, whether Babylon or the great whore do here ſignifie Rome or no, yet it cannot ſignifie the Church of Rome, which is now, and euer was differing from the terrene Empire of the ſame. And if, as in the beginning of the Church, Nero & the reſt of the perſecuting Emperours (which were figures of Antichriſt) did principally ſit in Rome, ſo alſo the great Antichriſt ſhall haue his ſeat there, as it may well be (though others think that Ieruſalem rather ſhall be his principall citty:) yet euen then ſhall neither the Church of Rome, nor the Pope of Rome be Antichriſt, but ſhall be perſecuted by Antichriſt, and driuen out of Rome, if it bee poſſible, for, to Chriſts Vicar and the Roman Church he wil beare as much good will as the Proteſtants now do, and he ſhall haue more power to perſecute him and the Church, then they haue. The Church of Rome is never called Babylon.

S. Hierom ep.17.c.7. to Marcella, to draw her out of the cittie of Rome, to the holy land, warning her of the manifold allurements to ſinne and ill life, that be in ſo great and populous a cittie alludeth at length to theſe words of the Apocalypſe, and maketh it to bee Babylon, and the purple whore, but ſtraight way, leſt ſome naughtie perſons might thinke he meant that of the Church of Rome, which he ſpeake of the ſocietie of the wicked onely, he addeth: There is there indeed of the holy Church, there are the triumphant monuments of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, there is the true confeſſion of Chriſt, there is the faith praiſed of the Apoſtle, and the Gentilitie troden vnder foote, the name of Chriſtian daily aduancing it ſelfe on high. Whereby you ſee that whatſoeuer may bee ſpoken or interpreted from Rome, out of this word Babylon, it is not meant of the Church of Rome, but of the terrene ſtate, in ſo much that the ſaid holy Doctor li.2.aduerſ. Iouian c.19.) ſignifieth that the holineſſe of the Church there, hath wiped away the blaſphemie written in the forehead of her former iniquitie. But of the difference of the old ſtate and dominion of the Heathen there, for which it is reſembled to Antichriſt, and the Prieſtly ſtate which now it hath, read a notable place in. S. Leo ſerm.1. in natali Petri & Pauli. Rom.1.

FVLKE. 4. In the end of S. Peters Epiſtle, for a poore helpe to proue that Peter was at Rome, you will needs haue Babylon to be taken for Rome, whereunto indeed the conſent of ancient Writers, moued with the light of this chapter, agreeth: Yet neither can it neceſſarily, nor probably be gathered out of that epiſtle, ſeeing there appeareth no reaſon why hee ſhould not call it Rome, being that Citie whereof hee was Biſhop (if we beleeue the Papiſts) and which ſhould be the head of Chriſtian Religion, and the Ieruſalem of Chriſtians, as the Papiſts affirme. There appeareth, I ſay, no reaſon why hee ſhould refuſe to call it Rome: (eſpecially ſeeing there is no other teſtimony in the Acts of the Apoſtles, of his comming thither) and why hee ſhould call it by the odious and infamous name of Babylon, which was the old enemy of the Church, and the ſeate of Antichriſt, rather then Saint Paul writing to the Romanes, or to Timothy of his perſecution at Rome. Except perhaps by the Spirit of Propheſie hee did foreſee how his ſucceſſors in that place ſhould abuſe his name, and the dignity of that Sea, to ſet up the Kingdom of Antichriſt there; and for that cauſe would admoniſh the faithfull, that they ſhould take Rome not for the Ieruſalem of Chriſtians, but for Babylon the Citie of Antichriſt, which in time to come, was to be reuealed in that place. But in this chapter where Rome is moſt plainely deſcribed under the name of Babylon, the Papiſts by all meanes would auoide that expoſition, becauſe they ſee manifeſtly, that Babylon which is Rome, is here deſcribed to be the ſeate and Citie of Antichriſt. Babylon is Rome.

Theſe are the fellowes that in expoſition of the holy Scriptures, be led onely by their preiudicate opinions and hereſies to which without any reaſon and ſincerity, they draw all things. And if you marke their notes from the beginning to the end, you ſhall ſee that in very few they haue any colour out of the words of the Text, to conclude their Notes, but for the moſt part, they bring their preiudicate opinions to the text, and ſo draw not their notes out of the Scripture; but draw the Scriptures to their opinions, which can never be concluded out of the Scripture. As for Peters being at Rome, we affirme it cannot be proued out of the Scriptures: yet for the conſent of ancient Writers, we yeeld vnto it, as to a matter of ſtorie, but no Article of our faith. And if Peters being at Rome were as certaine out of the Scriptures, as Pauls comming thither and being there, it could make nothing for the Antichriſtian authority, which the Pope claimeth vnder colour of his being there: Who if hee were there, was the chiefe Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, and not of the Gentiles, as it is manifeſt by the holy Scripture, Galathians 2. And what prerogatiue ſoeuer hee had, being an Apoſtle, it ceaſed with the death of his perſon, as the Apoſtleſhip of Paul, and of the reſt; although the fruite of theirs labours in Preaching and Writing, ſhall continue to the end of the world.

But S. Auguſtine (you ſay) and Arethas expound not this place of Rome, but of the ſociety of the vngodly. S. Auguſtine indeed ſaith often, that Babylon repreſenteth the ſociety of the vngodly, as Ieruſalem the Church of the faithfull, but yet he acknowledgeth the old Citie of Babylon in Aſſyria, to haue been the head citty of that ſociety before Chriſt, and Rome to be the head Citie of the ſame ſociety, ſince the comming of Chriſt: And this hee doth commonly inſinuate in his bookes De Civit. Dei, as I haue ſhewed before. Among which, this one teſtimony ſhall ſerue vs to repeate: We ought where need is to make report of the Aſſyrian Kings, that it may appeare how Babylon which was the firſt Rome, commeth forth in the world with this ſtranger the Citie of God. And the affaires which wee muſt enter into this booke, for the compariſon of both the Cities, the earthly and the heauenly, we muſt take out of the Greeks and Latines, where Rome it ſelfe is, which is the ſecond Babylon. You ſee therefore moſt euidently that as old Babylon of the Aſſyrians was the head of the ſociety of the impious, againſt the Church of the Iewes: ſo Rome of the Latines, is the head of the ſocietie of the vngodly, againſt the Church of the Chriſtians: For this cauſe hee calleth Rome an other Babylon, the ſecond Babylon, the Weſtern Babylon, the daughter of the elder Babylon.

diſſemble their iudgment, that by Babylon is ſignified old Rome. But being a Grecian liuing far from Italy, and out the tyrannie of the Romiſh Antichriſt, and knowing more diſorder in Conſtantinople in his time then he did in Rome, he declareth that in his opinion, it ſignifieth rather Conſtantinople which was called new Rome, then old Rome in Italie. Yet becauſe all things could not agree to Conſtantinople, he inclineth to that opinion, that Babylon ſignifieth the world of wicked men. Neuertheleſſe he confeſſeth: That other writers hauing diſcuſſed this reuelation, haue interpreted it to be old Rome, or an vniuerſall kingdome, which extendeth to the ſecond comming of our Lord. And in the end hee leaueth it to the Readers diſcretion to take it for old Rome or new Rome, or the time of the life of Antichriſt. Therefore neither S. Auguſtine nor Arethas deny it to be expounded of Rome, but rather confirme that moſt ancient expoſition, which alſo is cleere by the text it ſelfe, verſ. 9. & 18. As for the latter Writers, that liued vnder the tyranny of the Romiſh Antichriſt, they were glad to wreſt it any whither, rather then to incurre the hatred of Rome, by diſciphiring it to bee the cittie of Antichriſt: yet ſometime there haue not wanted they, that hane been bold to tell the Pope openly that Rome is Babylon. For the Church of Leodium being miſerably afflicted by Pope Paſcall the ſecond, doth thus write againſt him: In times paſt I was woont to interpret, that Peter by Babylon would ſignifie Rome, becauſe Rome at that time, was confuſed with idolatrie and all filthines. But now my ſorrow doth interpret vnto me, that Peter calling the Church gathered together in Babylon, foreſaw (by ſpirit of prophecie) the confuſion of diſſention, wherewith the Church at this day is rent in peeces. As for the poore men of Lyons whom they called by the name of Waldenſes, Leoniſtæ, and ſuch like opprobrious names, do plainly affirme, and conſtantly beleeue, that the Church of Rome is this whoore of Babylon, and the Pope Antichriſt, as Reinerius an inquiſitor witneſſeth of them, which liued moe then three hundred yeares agoe. And ſaith they were more pernicious to the Romiſh Church then to all other ſects, for three cauſes. The firſt, Becauſe it hath been of longer continuance. For ſome ſay it hath indured ſince the time of Sylueſter. Other ſay it hath indured ſince the Apoſtles time. The ſecond cauſe is, becauſe it is more generall. For there is almoſt no land, in which this ſect doth not creepe. The third cauſe, for that all other ſects doe bring in an horrour with the heinouſneſſe of their blaſphemies againſt God. This ſect of the Leoniſts, hath a great ſhew of godlineſſe, becauſe they liue iuſtly before men, and beleeue all things well concerning God, and all the articles which are contained in the Creed, they blaſpheme and hate onely the Church of Rome. This is the teſtimony of a cruell enemy and perſecutor of them, by which you may ſee, that Antichriſt after he was diſcloſed, was acknowledged by many true Chriſtians, to be that he is, although many were alſo deceiued by him (though none of the elect finally) to their deſtruction.

The authour of the commentary in S. Ambroſes name, and Tertullian, you confeſſe to underſtand this Babylon to be Rome, to whom afterward you adde S. Hierome: ſo might you haue done Primaſius, and Victorinus, elder then S. Hierome, and Ambroſius Auſbertus, who did write about 700 yeares agoe. But you ſay Rome was Babylon when it was heathen, as in Tertullians time, and when Saint Iohn wrote this. Very good, that which was Babylon in Saint Iohns time, is the ſame that hee prophecieth to be the chiefe Citie and ſeate of Antichriſt, as it is manifeſt to all that reade the Propheſie. But Rome was then Babylon, ergo, Rome is the Citie which hee propheſieth that it ſhould bee the ſeate of Antichriſt. But in the daies of Victorinus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Hierome, Primaſius, &c. Rome was not heathen, yet of them taken to be Babylon, therefore of them taken to be the Citie where Antichriſt (when he was reuealed) ſhould ſit, and not a reſemblance onely of it. Eucherius de ſpiritualibus formulis c. 10. Babylon aut mundus, aut Roma in Apocalipſi: Et Babylon magna venit, &c. Paulinus ep. 10. ad Severum, calleth Rome Babylon and the daughter of Babylon. Ep. 31. Poteras Roma intentas ſibi illas in Apocalypſi minas non timere, ſi talia ſemper ederent munera Senatoris tui, ad Alotbium. But to apply that to the Romane Church, and Apoſtolick Sea, either now or then (you ſay) it is moſt blaſphemous and fooliſh. Indeed to apply it to the true Romane Church, or the right ſucceſſion in the Apoſtolike ſee, which was in the dayes of S. Iohn, or in the time of the Chriſtian Emperours, it were both folly and blaſphemie: but to apply it to the Church of Rome, and counterfeite ſucceſſion of Popes, it is wiſedom and holineſſe. For Saint Iohn Propheſieth not onely of the cruelty of the terrene eſtate of that Citie, but alſo of the falſe Prophet and Antichriſt, which ſhould uſurpe an Eccleſiaſticall ſtate and dignity in that Citie. The Church of Rome indeed was one thing, and Babylon in Rome was another thing, while the Church of God was at Rome, and was perſecuted by the Heathen Emperours. But when the Emperour of Rome was Chriſtian, one of the heads of the beaſt was wounded to death, as c. 13. even that ſixt head, which was the perſecutor in the time of Saint Iohn: But this head was healed in Conſtantius the hereticke Emperour, Valens, and Iulian the Apoſtata, &c. and ſtill the ſeventh head was to come, But great preparation was made for him, while the Biſhop of Rome grew beyond the limits of a Chriſtian Miniſterie, into forreine and heatheniſh dominion as Socrates teſtifieth, lib. 7. c. 11. in the time of the Chriſtian Emperours. And when the myſterie of iniquity wrought not ſo cloſely in that See, but the forgery of the Biſhops was diſcouered in the Africane Councell, unto which they obtruded a counterfeit Canon of the Councell of Nice for their primacy; And while Leo Biſhop of Rome will not obey the decree of the generall Councell of Chalcedon, which gaue equall priuiledge of dignity to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, which was new Rome, with thoſe which the Church of Rome before had claimed as peculiar to her alone. ſeſs. vltim. In the beſt and moſt Chriſtian times of Rome therefore, when the head of the Heathen Empire was wounded to death, it was counted of the ancient Fathers to be Babylon here ſpoken of, becauſe of the ſeuenth head which is the Kingdom of Antichriſt, that was looked for, to come in place of the ſixth head, which was the terrene ſtate of heatheniſh, hereticall and perſecuting Emperours: Therefore not the true Church in Rome, but Rome the perſecutor of the Saints, firſt in the Heathen and Hereticall Emperours, afterward in the prowd Popes, and the Kings ſubiect to them, is Babylon the mother of all abhominations. And ſo great is the force, and ſo manifeſt is the light of truth, that you are compelled to confeſſe in the end, that Antichriſt ſhall haue his ſeate in Rome, though upon the eleventh chapter you were reſolute of Ieruſalem.

But that you would discharge the Pope and the Popish Church, to whom all the prophecies do so aptly agree to bee Antichrist and his cittie, you labour in vaine. For the blasphemous pride and heresies of the Pope and his Church, with the most abhominable liues of both, wil easily conuince that he is the seuenth head of the beast, which was to come, & we are not to look for any other. That you adde out of Hierom, proueth that he iudged not the Church of Rome in his time to be the whoore of Babylon, but yet you cannot auoid, but he iudged the citty of Rome, to bee the whore of Babylon spoken of in this prophecie, in which Antichrist should haue his chiefe seate of tyrannie. But aduers. Iouin. li. 2. (you say) hee signifieth that the holinesse of the Church of Rome had wiped away the name of blasphemie, written in the forehead of her former iniquitie. Indeed he saith to Rome, that she had by confession of Christ put away the name of blasphemy, writen in her forehead, which in his epistle to Algasia q. 11. he saith was Roma aeterna, To Rome eternall. But that he meaneth this in respect of the true Church only that was there in his time, and yet looketh for this prophecie of the kingdome of Antichrist, & the fall of Babylon to be fulfilled there: he saith to Rome in the same place: The curse which our Saviour hath threatned to thee in the Apocalypse, thou mayest escape by repentance, hauing the example of the Ninivites. You see he doth acknowledge the damnation of the great whoore of Babylon to be behind, not yet accomplished in his time, when the dominion of the heathen was altogether subuerted. The sermon of Leo extolleth the conuersion of Rome from Gentilitie to Christian tie, by the preaching of Peter and Paul, but this question of Antichrist and his seat, he doth not once touch.

RHEM. 5 [5. Mystery] S. Paul calleth this secret and close working of abomination, the mysterie of iniquitie 2. Thes. 2. and it is called a little after in this chapter v. 7. the Sacrament (or mysterie) of the woman, and it is also the marke of reprobation and damnation. Mystery.

FVLK. 5. Beda saith: It is declared that this name is mysticall, because it is discerned onely by Wisdome. As for the mark of reprobation is not openly carried in the forehead, where this mysticall name is written, which S. Ierom interpreteth to be that inscription, Roma aeterna. To Rome eternall. So the heathen writers called the Citty commonly Vrbs aeterna, The eternall citty, supposing that the Emperour should be eternall. Whom the Papists succeeded when the civill Empire was removed from thence, setting the Ecclesiasticall tyranny of Antichrist under the colour of Peters see, and the eternall rocke of the Church, against which the gates of hell shall not prevaile. So blasphemously perverting the most comfortable promise of Christ touching the perpetuity of his Catholicke Church builded upon the doctrine, faith, and confession of Peter and the rest of the Apostles, to the Bishops personall succession of Peter in the pontificall see of Rome, where neither the doctrine nor example of Peters life is to be found, nor any such power was ever in Peters person. And that prerogatiue which he had descended not by succession to any other, more then Pauls prerogatiue, or that which Iames, or that which Iohn enioyed in their Apostleship, did descend to any of the Bishops that afterward succeeded in those Churches which they planted or instructed. The name of blasphemy. Peters prerogatiue descended not.

Verse. 6. And I saw the woman drunken of the bloud of the Saints, and of the bloud of the Martyrs of Iesus. And I marvelled when I had seen her, with great admiration.

RHEM. 6. [6. Drunken of the blood.] It is plaine that this woman signifieth the whole corps of all the persecutors that haue and shall shed so much bloud of the iust: of the Prophets, Apostles, and other Martyrs from the beginning of the world to the end. The Protestants foolishly expound it of Rome, for that there they put heretickes to death, and allow of their punishment in other Countries: but their bloud is not called the bloud of Saints, no more then the bloud of theeues, man-killers, and other malefactors: for the shedding of which by order of iustice, no Common-wealth shall answer. Putting heretickes to death is not to shed the bloud of Saints.

FVLK. The great abundance of bloud that Rome hath shed, first under the heathen Emperours, and then under the Antichristian Popes, more then ever Babylon of the East did powre out, is sufficient to make her drunk with the bloud of the Saints. For which cruelty she deserueth as well as Ierusalem, that all the righteous bloud that hath been shed since the bloud of righteous Abel, should be iuputed to her, and required at her hands. They whom you call heretickes, for the most part, and that are in any great number put to death at Rome, and by the tyranny of the Romish Inquisition: are the true Christians and Saints here spoken of, whose godly way you call heresie, as the persecuting Iewes called it in S. Paul. Act. 24. 14. Therefore, though we allow the punishment of heretickes both in our own country and in others, yet we abhorre the cruelty of Antichrist and his Church, which condemne true Christians, and murdereth them under colour of heretickes, himselfe and his false prophets being the greatest and most blasphemous heretickes that ever were. Rome drunke with the Saints bloud.

Verse. 9. And here is understanding, that hath wisdome. These seven heads are seven hils, upon which the woman sitteth, and they are seven kings.

RHEM. 7. [9. Seven hils.] The Angell himselfe expoundeth these seven hils to bee all one with the seuen heads and the seuen kings: and yet the heretickes blinded exceedingly with malice against the Church of Rome, are so mad to take them for the seuen hilles literally, upon which in old time Rome did stand: that so they might make the unlearned beleeue, that Rome is the seat of Antichrist. But if they had any consideration, they might marke that the Prophets visions here are most of them by Sevens, whether he talke of Heads, Hornes, Candlestickes, Churches, Kings, Hilles, or other things: and that he alluded not to the hills because they were iust seven, but that Seven is a mysticall number, as sometime Ten is, signifying vniversally all of that sort whereof he speaketh: as, the seven heads, hilles, or kingdomes (which are here all one) should bee all the kingdomes of the world that persecute the Christians: being heads and mountaines for their height in dignity aboue others. And some take it, that there were seven speciall Empires, Kingdomes or States, that were or shall bee the greatest persecuters of Gods people, as of Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Persians, and Greekes, which be fiue: sixthly, of the Romane Empire, which once persecuted most of all other, and which The Protestants madnes in expounding the seven hilles of Rome: the Angell himselfe expounding it otherwise.

(as the Apoſtle here ſaith) yet is, or ſtandeth; but the ſeuenth, then when S. Iohn wrote this, was not come, neither is yet come in our dayes: which is Antichriſts ſtate, which ſhall not come ſo long as the Empire of Rome ſtandeth, as S. Paul did propheſie, 2 Theſ. 2.

Rome is deſcribed plainly

FVLKE. 7. The Angell doth not expound thoſe ſeuen hilles to be all one with the ſeuen heads, and the ſeuen kings: but ſheweth moſt plainely, that the ſeuen heads of the beaſt doe ſignifie ſeuen hilles, vpon which the woman ſitteth, that is, the cittie is builded. For the woman v. 18. is interpreted to be a citty. Alſo theſe ſeuen heads do ſignifie ſeuen kings. Therefore hilles are taken literally for hilles in one ſignification, as kings are in the other. For both theſe words, hilles and kings, are in the interpretation of his word, heads. And it had been very ſuperfluous to haue added, that they are hilles, and vpon which the woman ſitteth, when he ſhould meane nothing thereby, but they are kings on which the cittie doth not ſit, but rather kings vpō the cittie, for euery interpretation muſt be more plaine and cleere then that which is interpreted, Therefore it ſhould be a monſtruous interpretation, to ſay the ſeuen heads do ſignifie ſeuen hils: whan he meaneth no hils but kings, for it is more plaine to vnderſtand that heads are kings, then that hils are kings. This is therefore a brutiſh wrangling againſt ſo cleere light of truth, ſeeing you haue alſo confeſſed before, that it may well be that Antichriſt ſhall haue his ſeate at Rome, ſect. 4. And if wee bee blinded with malice againſt the Church of Rome, and ſo made to take them for ſeuen hils litterally, what were ſo many of the ancient fathers, as affirmed Rome to be the ſee of Antichriſt, by the cleere deſcription of her in this chapter? Eſpecially Victorinus and S. Hierome. The ſeuen heads (ſaith Victorinus) are ſeuen hils, vpon which the woman, that is, the cittie of Rome, doth ſit. The other ſaith Ep. 17. I ſuppoſe this place is holier then the Tarpeian rocke, which hauing been ſo often ſtricken with thunder and lightnings from heauen, ſheweth that it diſpleaſeth the Lord. Read the Apocalypſe of Iohn, and conſider what is there ſaid of the woman clothed in purple, and the blaſphemie written in her forehead, the ſeuen hils, the many waters, and the departure from Babylon. Were theſe ancient Fathers alſo vnlearned? that thus vnderſtood and taught the cittie of Rome to be the ſeate of Antichriſt, and the ſeuen hils to be taken litterally for thoſe famous hils by which Rome hath been notoriouſly diſcerned from other citties, euen when it hath not been named: as Virgil in his Georgikes, ſaying: Septem quæ vna ſibi muro circundedit arces. She being but one, hath compaſſed ſeuen hilles within her wall, is vnderſtood of all men to be the cittie of Rome, although the Poet doth not there expreſſe her name. But in old time, you ſay, Rome did ſtand vpon thoſe hils, whereby you would inſinuate, that Rome doth not now ſtand vpon them, but for feare of another ſequel &c.

D. Sanders not fearing that conſequence (for what ſhould he feare, that was not afraid to raiſe warre againſt his ſoueraigne in her own realme of Ireland) counteth it a childiſh argument, by the ſeuen hilles to proue the ſee of Antichriſt to be at Rome: becauſe the cittie is now gone from the hilles, and ſtandeth in the plaine of Campus Martius, and the Pope ſitteth on the other ſide of the riuer vpon the hil Vaticane hard by S. Peters Church, by whom he holdeth his chaire, not at all deriuing his power from the ſeuen hilles, &c. But if the Pope ſit now in another Rome then Peter the Apoſtle ſate, how will Sanders perſwade vs that hee ſitteth in the chaire of Peter? For that Rome where Peter ſate, was builded vpon the ſeuen hilles, and not gone down into the plain of Campus Martius, nor ouer the riuer. Therefore, if the Pope do not at all deriue his power from the ſeuen hils, he deriueth it not at all from Peters ſeate, for that it was in the cittie builded vpon ſeuen hilles. Beſides this, it is plaine, that although many of the people of late time haue remoued their habitations from the hils into the plaine, and the Pope his pallace of pleaſure on the other ſide of the riuer: yet hath he not remoued his ſeate from them: for on them bee ſtill to this day, his Churches, monaſteries and courts. For on the mount Cælius is the monaſterie of S. Gregorie the firſt, biſhop of Rome, builded by himſelf, where his fathers houſe ſtood: the Church of S. Iohn and Paul, where was a ſtately pallace, inhabited by diuers Popes in times paſt. There is the hoſpitall of S. Saviour, the Church of S. Marie in Dominica, The Church of S. Stephan the round. The Church of the foure crowned, with a notable pallace belonging to it. The monaſterie of Eraſmus. The great cathedrall Church or minſter of Laterane, which is ſaid to keep the heads of the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, where are the goodlieſt building of the world. And that pallace (ſaith Blondus) as it is the principall ſeate of the Popes of Rome, ſo of moſt of them it was in times paſt inhabited, euen vntill the dayes of pope Nicholas the ſecond, which was almoſt 1100. yeares after Chriſt.

On the ſame hill did Eugenius the fourth build a moſt ſumptuous Monaſtery, and repaired the old Palace, as the principall ſeat of his Popedome. There is alſo an houſe of Charterhouſe Monkes, with the Church of S. Croſſe in Ieruſalem. Beſides this, there is not one of the hilles at this day, in which the Popes Religion is not practiſed in Churches and Abbies. The Mount of Auintine hath three Monaſteries, of Sabine, Boniface and Alexius. The mount Exquilinus, hath the famous Minſter of S. Maria maior, the Churches of Antonie, Praxidis, Vitus, Euſebius, the forty Martyrs, Clemens, Peter ad Vincula, and Martin in Montibus: beſides the old ruines of S. Cyriacus Church, which is yet a title of a Cardinalſhip. The Mount Viminalis hath the Churches of S. Laurence in Paliſperna & Potentiana. The Mount Tarpeius or Capitolius hath a houſe of Friers called Ara Cœli, and a brick houſe builded by Boniface the ninth, for keeping Courts. The Mount Palatine hath the Churches of S. Nicholas, and S. Andrew. To the Mount Quirinalis belongeth S. Maria, De Populo, &c. But if wee had any conſideration, we might marke (you ſay) that the Prophets viſions are moſt by ſeuens, and that hee alluded not to the hils, becauſe they were iuſt ſeuen. Wee know ſeuen to be a myſticall number of perfection as tenne, ſignifying univerſality of the thing ſpoken of: but when the Prophet himſelfe expoundeth the number of heads, of ſeuen hils, and knowing that the ſaid great Citie ſate upon ſeuen hils, we muſt underſtand that he calleth them ſeuen hils becauſe they were iuſt ſeuen: as the ſeuen Candleſtickes, and the ſeuen Starres do ſignifie the ſeuen Churches, and the ſeuen Biſhops of them to whom hee writeth, becauſe they were iuſt ſeuen, as they be rehearſed by name, c. 1. 11. and c. 2. & 3.

Likewiſe the ſeuen Kings or Kingdomes, which is another interpretation of the ſeuen heads, are called ſeuen, becauſe they are iuſt ſeuen in number, as it is manifeſt by the accompt that the Angell maketh of them; ſaying fiue are fallen, one is, and the ſeuenth is not yet come. And although some take it for seven speciall Kingdomes that persecuted Gods people, yet it is manifest by the whole discourse of the chapter, that the Apostle meaneth of seven heads, or principall rulers of the Romane Empire, as Kings, Consuls, Decem viri, Tribuni militum, Dictators, Emperours, Popes: whereof fiue were fallen before S. Iohns time, the Emperour then was, the Pope was yet to come: which is the tyrannie of Antichrist long since discovered, and is now not a little consumed with the Spirit of the Lords mouth, which is his holy Word, Preached in these daies, and shall bee utterly abolished by the comming of our Saviour Christ to iudgement, as S. Paul did Propheſie, 2. Thess. 2.

Verse. 11. And the beast which was, and is not: I the same also is the eight, and is of the seven and goeth into destruction.

RHEM. 8. [11 The same is the eight.] The beast it selfe being the congregation of all these wicked persecutors, though it consist of the foresaid seven, yet for that the malice of all is complete in it, may be called the eight; or, Antichrist himselfe, though he be one of the seven, yet for his extraordinary wickednesse shall be counted the odde persecutor, or the accomplishment of all other and therefore is named the eight. Some take this beast called the eight, to be the Devill. What is the eight beast.

FVLK. The kingdom of Antichrist being one of the seven, that is a Romane tyrannie, yet for that it is after another sort then the other six, persecuting the true Church under the colour of the head of the Church, is also called the eight kingdom.

Verse. 18. And the woman which thou sawest: is I the great Citie, which hath kingdom over the Kings of the earth.

RHEM. 9. [18 The great Cittie.] If it be meant of any one Citie, and not of the universall society of the Reprobate (which is the Citie of the devil, as the Church and the universall fellowship of the faithfull is called the Citie of God) it is most like to be old Rome, as some of the Greekes expound it, from the time of the first Emperours, till Constantines daies, who made an end of the persecution, for by the authority of the old Romane Empire, Christ was put to death first, and afterward the two chiefe Apostles, and the Popes their successours, and infinite Catholike men throughout the world, by lesser Kings which then were subiect to Rome. All which Antichristian persecutions ceased, when Constantine reigned, and yeelded up the Citie to the Pope, who holdeth not the Kingdom or Empire over the world, as the Heathen did, but the fatherhood and spirituall rule of the Church. Howbeit the more probable sense is the other, of the Citie of the devill, as the author of the homilies upon the Apocalypse in S. Augustine declareth. The double interpretation of Babylon.

FVLK. 9. Without all peradventure the great Citie which in S. Iohns time had the dominion over the kings of the earth, was none other but the Citie of Rome, and so it is expounded, not onely of some Greekes, but of the most of the Latine Writers, as Irenæus, Tertullian, Ambrose, Victorinus, Ierome, Augustine, Primasius, as hath been been shewed before. Prosper also, a Latine Writer, de prom. & pred. cap. 7. saith: Who cannot understand, what Citty hee saith doth carry a cup full of the abhomination of vncleannesse, and fornication of the whole earth: when it is called eternall which is temporall, verily it is a name of blasphemy: when mortall men, though kings, therein are called Divi, that is, Gods, and their supplicants say vnto them: To your divine power, to your Altars, to your eternity, &c. This the learned know to be the Citty of Rome, which which was called The eternall Citty, and wherein the Emperours were called gods, and the people flattered them with Altars and blasphemous titles of divine power and eternity, as they doe now their Popes with the like blasphemous tearmes of the most holy, and your holinesse. Who haue also as blasphemous tokens of divinity, as any of the heathen Emperours had: in their triple crowne, their riding on mens shoulders, hauing their attendance of Kings and Emperours, their thrones in the Churches higher then the Altars, and such like blasphemous pompes of heathenish and Antichristian pride. Ambrosius Ansbertus also, a latine Writer, 700. yeares since, in his Commentary upon chap. 14. vers. 8. calleth Rome the second Babylon, and upon this chapter vers. 3. hee writeth thus: The Angell admonished us to know, that by the sence of wisedom following, the seven heads are seven hills, and seven kings, that he might shew that vnto the similitude of those kings, he had brought Rome, which sitting aloft upon seven hills, sometimes governed the monarchy of the whole world: that in the name of that Citty hee had figured the power of the whole earthly kingdom. Rome plainely described.

Seeing therefore the consent of most ancient writers, and your own confession added to the cleernes of the text, acknowledgeth that the cittie here spoken of, is the cittie of Rome: you cannot avoid but the same cittie is the seat of Antichrist the seuenth head, as well as it was of the heathenish persecutors that were the sixth head. And although those heathenish persecutions did cease while Constantine reigned in wounded to death, yet were they renewed in his sonne Constantius, and his nephew Iulian the apostata, who raised persecution afresh against the Church of God, though not so cruell as before. Where you say that Constantine yeelded the cittie of Rome to the Pope, in your meaning it is false, for he and his successours for many yeares after, held the dominion of that cittie. But in trueth, by remouing the seate of the empire partly to Constantinople he yeelded place for the mystery of iniquity, to worke more easily toward the open manifestation of Antichrist. But the pope (you say) holdeth not the kingdom or empire ouer the world as the heathen did, but the fatherhood and spirituall rule of the Church. That the Pope hath held the empire ouer the kings of the earth, and practised as great pride and tyranny euen against them that beare the name of the Roman emperors, and against other Kings of the earth: the stories are full of examples. And that he still claimeth the same Empire and kingdom, his blasphemous bull giuen out against the Queen of England, with other his antichristian practises against her crown and dignitie, do manifestly declare. It is not therefore a fatherhood and a spirituall rule, which he claimeth most blasphemously ouer all the Church, but vnder colour and pretense thereof, a temporall kingdom, and an earthly empire ouer the kings of the earth. And as his predecessours the heathen emperours vnder title of their earthly empire, vsurped the auctoritie ouer all religion, and were called Pontifices maximi, that is, the chiefe gouernours of religion: So the Popes under the title of the cheefe government of religion vſurp all ſouereintie of earthly dignity and temporall dominion. And ſeeing you confeſſe that by the authority of the Romane Empire Chriſt was put to death, it is eaſie to conclude, that not Ieruſalem, but Rome which is ſpiritually called Sodoma and Egypt, is that great cittie which is ſpoken of chap. 11. which as it crucified our Lord, ſo alſo it killeth his Prophets & Saints. Therfore without controuerſie Babylon is Rome, the head and chiefe of all perſecutors of the Church of Chriſt, as old Babylon was of his people the Iewes, as S. Auguſtine himſelf plainly teacheth. And ſo may the auctor of thoſe homilies in Auguſtine be vnderſtood: that one cittie is principall in perſecution of the Church, though the Chuch hath many enemies beſide that citty, and them that hold of it.

CHAP. XVIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 21. AND one ſtrong Angell tooke vp as it were a great milſtone, and threw it into the ſea, ſaying, With this violence ſhall ‡ Babylon that great cittie be throwen, and ſhall now be found no more.

RHEM 1. [21. Babylon that great.] By this it ſeemeth cleere that the Apoſtle meaneth not any one Cittie, but the vniuerſall company of the reprobate, which ſhall periſh in the day of iudgement: The old Prophets alſo naming the whole number of Gods enemies myſtically, Babylon.

Ierem. 52.

FVLK. 1. The Angell ſheweth, that whereas Babylon boaſted that ſhe was eternall, ſhe ſhall be vtterly deſtroyed, and neuer riſe again. Therefore here is nothing to proue, that hee meaneth not any one Cittie, but rather that hee meaneth the cittie and kingdom of Rome, the ſee of Antichriſt, of whoſe vtter deſtruction, the Angell ſpecially prophecieth. For the deſtruction of the vniverſall company of the reprobate, inthe day of iudgement, is deſcribed afterward, Cap. 20. 11. and ſo to the end of the Chapter. And Ieremy cap. 52. doth nothing elſe but hyſtorically deſcribe the captivity of Babylon, by Nabuchadnezzer and his power, and the advancing of Ieboiachim by Euilmerodoch King of Babylon, as euery man will confeſſe that readeth the chapter.

Rome is Babylon.

CHAP. XIX.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe 3. AND ‡ againe they ſaid, Alleluia, and her ſmoke aſcendeth for ever and ever.

RHEM. 1 [3. Againe they ſaid.] This often repeating of Alleluia in times of reioycing, the Church doth follow in her ſervice.

FVLKE 1. The Popiſh repetition of Alleluia is but a mockery of the Saints in heaven, when neither the Prieſt commonly, nor the people underſtand what they meane, by that often repetition of Alleluia.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 4. And the foure and twenty ſeniors fell down, and the foure beaſts, and adored God ſitting vpon the throne, ſaying, Amen, Allelu-ia.

אמן הללויה Amen Alleluia is not tranſlated.

RHEM. 2. [4. Amen, Alleluia.] Theſe two Hebrew words (as other elſe where) Both in the Greeke and Latin text are kept religiouſly, and not tranſlated, vnleſſe it bee once or twiſe in the Pſalmes. Yea and the Proteſtants themſelues keepe them in the text of their Engliſh Teſtaments, in many places, and maruell it is why they vſe not them in all places, but ſometimes turn, Amen, into Verily, whereof ſee the Annotation Ioan. 8 v. 34. and in their Seruice book they tranſlate Allelnia, into Prayſe ye the Lord, as though Alleluia, had not as good a grace in the Act of ſeruing God, (where it is indeed properly vſed) as it hath in the text of the Scripture.

Alleluia often vſed in the Church, ſpecially in Eaſter time. Epiſt. ad Ian. cap. 17. & cap. 15.

The Church Catholike doth often & ſpecially vſe this ſacred word, to ioyn with the Church triumphant conſiſting of Angels and Saints, who here are ſaid to laud and praiſe God with great reioycing, by the word Alleluia, and by often repetition thereof: as the Catholike Church alſo vſeth namely in Eaſter time euen till Whitſontide for the ioy of Chriſts reſurrection, which (as S. Auguſtine declareth ep. ad Ianuarium) was the general vſe of the Primitiue Church, making a greater myſterie and matter of it, then our Proteſtants now doe. At other times of the yeare alſo hee ſaith it was ſung in ſome Churches but not in all, and S. Hierom numbereth it among the hereſies of Vigilantius. That Alleluia could not be ſung but at Eaſter. Aduerſ. Vigilant. c. 1.

It ſignifieth more then (as the Proteſtats tranſlate it) Praiſe yee the Lord.

The trueth is, by the vſe of the Scripture it hath more in it then, Praiſe ye the Lord, ſignifying with laude, glorifying, and praiſing of God, a great reioycing withall, mirth, and exultation of heart in the ſingers thereof, and that is the cauſe why the holy Church ſaith, Laus tibi Domine, Prayſe bee to thee O LORD, in Lent and other like times of penance and mourning, but not Alleluia, which as (Saint Auguſtine alſo declareth) is a terme of ſignification, and myſterie ioyned with that time, and then vſed ſpecially in the Church of God, when ſhee repreſenteth to vs in her Seruice, the ioyes and beatitude in the next life: which is done ſpecially at Eaſter by the ioyfull celebrating of Chriſts glorious Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, after the penall time of Lent wich repreſenteth the miſerie of this life. See S. Auguſtine Ser. 1. & 5. c. 9. & 6. c. 9. de Diuerſis tom. 10. And his enarration vpon the 148. Pſalme, for in the titles and ends of diuers holy Pſalme this Alleluia is ſufis full of mysterie and sacred signification. Where we must aske the Protestants, why they haue left it out altogether, being in the Hebrew, saying neither Allelnia, nor, Prayse ye the Lord, in the Bible 1577: and that nine times in the six last Psalmes.

False translation.

Moreouer the said holy Doctor (l.2.de doct. Christ. c.11. affirmeth that Amen and Allelnia be not translated into any other language propter sanctiorem authoritatem, for the more sacred authority of the word so remaining, and ep.278. he saith that it is not lawfull to translate them. Nam sciendum est &c. for it is to be known (saith he) that all nations do sing Amen and Allelnia in the Hebrew words which neither the Latin man nor the barbarous may translate into his own language. See S. Hierom also ep.137. And namely for our Nation S. Gregorie will beare vs witnesse that our Country receiued the word Allelnia with their Christianitie saying thus li.27. Moral. c.6. Lingua Britannia quæ nihil aliud nouerat quam barbarum frendere, iamdudum in Diuinis laudibus hebraum capit resonare Allelnia, That is, The Brittan tongue which knew nothing els but to mutter barbarously, hath begun of late in Gods diuine lauds and prayses to sound the Hebrew Allelnia. And for Italie, S. Hierome ep.17.c.7. writeth that the husbandmen at the plough sang Allelnia which was not then their vulgar speach. Yea he saith that in Monasteries the singing of Allelnia was in steed of a bell to call them together ad collectam in Epitaph. Paulæ c.10.

Amen and Allelnia not to be translated into vulgar tongues.

All nations in the Primatiue Church sung Amen & Allelnia.

This word is a sacred, Christian, mysticall, and angelicall song, and yet in the new Seruice Book it is turned into, Prayse ye the Lord, and Allelnia is quite gone, because they list neither to agree with the Church of God, nor with the vse of holy Scriptures, no nor with their own translations, but no marueil that they cannot sing the song of our Lord and of Angels in a strange Country, that is, out of the Catholike Church, in the captiuitie of schisme and heresie. Lastly, wee might aske them whether it bee all one to say Mat. 21: Hosanna, and saue us we beseech thee: whereas Hosanna is withall a word of exceeding congratulation and ioy which they expressed toward our Sauiour, euen so Allelnia hath an other manner of sense and signification in it, then can be expressed by, Prayse ye the Lord.

The Protestants prophane this word by translating it, and diminish the signification thereof. Psal.136.

FVLK. 2. For the Latine text, it is not to be regarded, nor the Greek of the old Testament, how it pleased the interpreters to leaue these words untranslated. But in the Greeke of the new Testament, which is indighted by the Holy Ghost, it is materiall to consider, that these words (as commonly vnderstood, and easie to be vnderstood of all Christians) are many times kept in their naturall sound, and not translated into Greek. Partly because they were as well vnderstood of them that professed the religion, either of the Iewes or Christians, as the Greeke words themselues: partly to expresse in relation of things done, more liuely the zeale of them that either affirmed any thing, or praised God in these tearmes. But where you say, they be not translated, vnlesse it be once or twice in the Psalms, it is false. For Amen is vsed but in the end of foure Psalmes, which are according to your account, Psal.40 71.88.105. And in euery one of these places it is translated in the Greeke γένοιτο, γένοιτο, in Latine Fiat, Fiat, which is in English So be it, So be it, where in the Hebrew it is Amen, Amen: except in the last, where Amen is but once in the Hebrew. So is Alleluiah twice at the least translated into Greek and Latine, Psal.134.3.146.1. αἰνεῖτε τὸν κύριον, in Latine Laudate Dominum, which is in English, Praise ye the Lord. And we also retaine those tearmes in many places of the new Testament, where they cannot conueniently be translated, because they are so left in the Originall. Why we translate Amen sometimes Verily, in the place by you quoted, I haue declared enough to stay your marvelling. But in our Service-bookes (say you) we translate Alleluiah into Praise yee the Lord, as though it had not as good a grace in the act of serving God, as in the text of the Scripture. Surely we are perswaded, that Praise ye the Lord, which euery man vnderstandeth, hath a better grace, and more agreeable to the doctrine of S. Paul. 1. Cor. 14. in the act of the publicke service of God, then Alleluiah not vnderstood but of the learned, although it be in the text of the Scripture. As we thinke of all other Hebrew words, which are to be translated into the vulgar tongue, that the Church may take edifying by them. We may rather marvell what moued the Greek and Latine Translators, to leaue it so often in the Psalmes untranslated, and yet some times to translate it. And if Alleluiah in the act of seruing God, haue such a grace aboue Praise yee the Lord, it hath the same aboue Laudate Dominum, which you your selues vse in your daily service. But it is a great matter that you vse this holy word Alleluiah, to ioyne with the Church triumphant, between Easter and Whitsontide: by which reason you are dis-ioyned from the Church Triumphant, from Septuagesima to Easter, in which time you may not vse it, as Durand saith. But what a vaine reason is this, that you ioyne with the Church triumphant by using this terme, we may consider a little. First Arethas, Beda, and other interpreters, vnderstand the praise given to God, to be of the Church militant in this world, & not of the Church triumphant. Which Church militant is said to be in heaven, because the conversation of the faithfull living on the earth, is notwithstanding in heaven. Secondly, admit it should be meant of the Church triumphant, seeing the Angels and holy soules vse no sound of words in praising of God, why should you thinke you ioyne with them in the sound of Alleluiah, rather then in the sound of Laudate Dominum, or Praise yee the Lord? Thirdly, if the Angels & blessed Spirits did vse the sound of the Hebrew word, yet they vse that speech which they all vnderstand. But most times your Priests, yea and Bishops, are ignorant of the vnderstanding of that word, as appeareth by Durand, which hath so many fond interpretations of it, as would moue laughter to any man that hath but small sight in the Hebrew tongue, How much more therefore are your people ignorant thereof? Wherefore using that tearme which you vnderstand not, you ioyne not with the Church triumphant, which vnderstandeth the tongue of Angels, and praiseth not God without vnderstanding. But Saint Augustine ad Ian. maketh a greater matter of it then we do.

Vaine calling confuted.

Verily he sheweth, that it was vsed in his time, being as commonly vnderstood as the rest of the publicke service, but other necessarie matter he maketh not of it, neither thinketh the sound to be holier in Hebrew then in Latine. If Vigilantius thought Alleluiah might never be sung but at Easter, hee held a superstitious opinion: but the matter is not of such weight to make an heresie of it. More like it is that Vigilantius misliked the innouation attempted to be brought in by Hierom, who as some write, brought the common vse of Alleluiah from Ierusalem. But the truth is (you say) that by the vse of the holy Scriptures, it hath more in it, then Praise yee the Lord: which if it be true, your vulgar Latine translation hath erred as much as the Proteſtants, in tranſlating it Laudate Dominum: for that hath no more in it, then Praiſe yee the Lord. And whereas this terme hath but two words in it, the Verbe & the Noune: your vulgar Tranſlator doth commonly (and for ought I know) alwayes tranſlate the Hebrew verbe, by the Latine verbe, Laudo, Laudate, Laudet, Laudent, Laudat, &c. In all which he hath ſhamefully erred, if our tranſlation of Alleluiah be not right to ſay, Praiſe ye the Lord. As for the ioy wherewith the praiſe of God ought to be ſet forth in his Church, muſt be taught by Preachers, but cannot be expreſſed by Tranſlators. If you would reply, becauſe it cannot be expreſſed, therfore the word muſt not be tranſlated, it is eaſie to reioyn upon you, that then the ſame verb muſt be left untranſlated, ſo often as it is uſed in the Scripture, which were too great an abſurdity. Wherfore this is nothing elſ but a malicious, fooliſh, & unlearned quarrel, againſt the uſage of our Church in praiſing the Lord in that ſound of words which the people underſtandeth. As for your ſuperſtitious and childiſh difference between Alleluiah and Laus tibi Domine; the one for Lent, the other for Eaſter, I leaue to your ſelues, as meete for your hypocriticall ſeruice, which is in ſound of lippes and outward ſhew, not in ſpirit and truth.

The new found Sermon of Auguſtine de diverſis, are matter meete for ſuch a queſtion. In Pſalme 148. he maketh no ſuch fond difference between Laus tibi Domine, and Alleluiah, but ſheweth that the Church before Eaſter ſpending the time in faſting and prayer, did celebrate the ſtate of this life, but in praiſing God at Eaſter, did ſignifie the life to come, which yet was not in poſſeſſion: For this is Alleluiah which we ſing (ſaith he) which is interpreted as you know, Laudate Dominum, Praiſe yee the Lord. Here you ſee all the people underſtood Alleluiah, as well as Laudate Dominum, and as well as our people underſtand, Praiſe yee the Lord. But it is a queſtion to be asked, why we leaue it out altogether, no leſſe then 9. times in the Bible 1577. in the 6. laſt Pſalmes. To anſwer you (for my part) I know no ſuch tranſlation that leaveth it out as you ſay: for that Bible which I haue, printed 1577. hath Praiſe yee the Lord, ten times in the fiue laſt Pſalmes: for ſo many times Halleluiah is in the Hebrew. But in Pſalme 145. it is not in the Hebrew, and therefore not in the Engliſh, except peradventure in ſome books of Pſalms, printed for the ſpeciall uſe of reading and ſinging in the Church, it is omitted by the Printer, as all other titles and inſcriptions of the Pſalms, which are not uſually read or ſung in the Church ſervice. Which if it be ſo great a matter, we muſt aske the Papiſts, why they haue left out Alleluiah altogether in their Portuis, ſecundum uſum Eccleſiæ Sarum, In euery Pſalm where it is both in the Hebrew and in their owne vulgar Latine tranſlation, not onely in thoſe ſixe laſt Pſalmes, but alſo in twelue other Pſalmes, namely, Pſalm. 104.105.106. likewiſe Pſal. 110.111. 112 113.114.115.116. finally, Pſal. 134. and 135. But S. Auguſtine (you ſay) affirmeth, that Amen and Alleluiah be not tranſlated into any other language for the more holy authority of the words ſo remaining. Indeed he ſaith, that the knowledge of the Hebrew and Greeke tongues are needfull for men of the Latine ſpeech, to underſtand ſuch words which are often found untranſlated, as Amen, Alleluiah, Racha, Hoſanna. Of which he ſaith, the antiquity of the two former is kept for a more holy authoritie, meaning that they doe ſet forth more liuely, the godly affection of them that uſed it in the Scripture: as if men in Engliſh will tell a ſtory of a French man or German, when it commeth to his ſpeech, they will expreſſe a word or two of his countrey language, to make the narration ſeeme more liuely. But hee doth not affirme, that they be not tranſlated into any language, for then he ſhould ſpeake untruely, as I haue proued in the beginning, ſeeing they were in his time tranſlated into Greeke and Latine, and he himſelfe in Pſalm 148. tranſlateth Alleluiah, Laudate Dominum. Euſebius Alleluiah in Latinum ſonat, Laudate Dominum. Iuſt: lib. 2. c. 2. Amen verè ſine fideliter. Remigius in Pſal. 104. Interpretatur Alleluiah, Laudate Dominum. Neither doth he meane, that there is more holineſſe in the ſound of Hebrew ſyllables, then of the Latine. But as the Hebrew tongue is called the holy tongue, becauſe the holy Scriptures of the old teſtament were firſt written in it, which yet may bee, and haue been in all good times of the Church, tranſlated into many other languages. In the ſecond place, Epi. 178. anſwering the like quarrels of the Arrian Paſcentius (which cavilled that the Greeke word Homouſion was not found in the Scripture) S. Auguſtine proveth, that the ſence and meaning thereof is found in the Scriptures, and this terme he uſeth, becauſe it was agreed upon in the Councell of Nice, where the Greek Biſhops were the chiefe that confuted the hereſie of Arius.

Now ſeeing the Church had received this Greeke terme, he thought it meete to be uſed: and not not to be altered. ſo long as it were underſtood and knowne to haue the ſence in the Scriptures. As for example, when the Church of all nations had receiued to ſing Amen and Alleluia in the Hebrew tongue. it was not lawfull for the Latine man, or the barbarous man to tranſlate them into their owne language he meaneth in the publike ſeruice, ſeeing the people underſtood them, and the cuſtome of the Church is not without cauſe to bee broken: but that they might not be tranſlated into other ſpeeches, or pronounced in other languages, if the people underſtood them not, it is far from S. Auguſtines meaning.

S. Hierom Epiſt. 137. rendring a reaſon why theſe words and ſuch other were retained in the Scriptures, ſaith, That the Septuaginta, or the Apoſtles provided, that ſeeing the firſt Church was gathered together of the Iewes, they would innouate nothing that might offend the beleevers, but deliuered as they had receiued from children: but afterward when the Goſpell was inlarged into all nations, things once received could not be changed. Although Origen ſay, that becauſe of the propriety of every language that they could not ſo well bee expreſſed in other tongues as in their owne, it is much better to leaue them untranſlated, then by tranſlating to diminiſh the force of them.

But notwithſtanding this opinion of Origen, he doth tranſlate both Amen as the 70. doe Fiat, or as Aquila did faithfully, and Alleluia, Laudate Dominum, Praiſe ye the Lord. But Gregory will beare you witneſſe that our Nation, with their Chriſtianity received the Hebrew word Alleluiah. And what of that, ſo long as they underſtood it? That the Ploughmen in Paleſtine ſang Alleluia, S. Hierome reporteth, which they underſtood becauſe it is all one in the Hebrew and Syrian language, which was their vulgar tongue: and therefore they might well underſtand it in the Monaſtery which was commonly underſtood in all the world abroade. But it is a ſacred, Chriſtian, myſticall and angelicall ſong, and yet in the new Service it is turned into, Praiſe ye the Lord. Why Sirs? Is not Praiſe ye the Lord a ſacred, Chriſtian, myſticall, and Angelicall ſong? doth nothing pleaſe you but that which the people underſtand not? That which the Angels ſung in the Syrian tongue to the Shepheards at the nativity of Chriſt was a ſacred, Chriſtian, myſticall and Angelicall ſong: yet you ſing it in your Maſſe, neither in the Syrian tongue in which they pronounced it: nor in the Greek tongue in which S. Luke did write it, but in Latine, and yet not in the Latine of your authenticall tranſlation, nor indeed truly tranſlated, for you ſing in Excelſis, and not in Altiſſimis, and yet I think it were but a ſinall matter to pick a quarrell againſt you.

Therefore Alleluiah is not quite gone, as you ſay falſly, when we haue the full ſence and meaning of it in our language, much better then you haue of that Angels ſong, which you call Gloria in excelſis, we ſing therefore the Lords ſongs (His name be praiſed for euer) in our own Counrry, and in our owne langurge, and in the unity of the Church of God, out of the filthy ſinke of Babylonicall ſuperſtition.

But laſt of all you thinke you may aske us whether it be all one to ſay Mar. 11. Hoſanna, and ſaue us we beſeech thee. And we thinke we may anſwere you, that it is not all one: for Hoſanna ſignifieth, Saue we beſeech thee, not ſaue us. The people therfore prayed for the proſperity and increaſe of the kingdome of Chriſt, as the Prophet taught them long before. And the Apoſtle to expreſſe their godly zeale, uſeth the very word which they uttered. That it was a word of exceeding congratulation and joy, it is not in the ſignification of the verbe, but in the ſpeciall uſe of it, and ſo in the word Alleluia. It is one thing to tranſlate, another thing to giue the ſenſe according to the circumſtance of the Text tranſlated.

Therefore Alleluia is as truly tranſlated, and may as well be expreſſed in Engliſh by, Praiſe ye the Lord, as it is in Latine by Laudate Dominum, witneſſe S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, and your own vulgar Latine Interpretour, who prophane and diminiſh the ſignification thereof, by Laudate Dominum, as much as we doe by Praiſe ye the Lord. I doubt not but your owne friends will bee aſhamed in their hearts to ſee you thus wrangle without any iuſt cauſe about ſo vaine a quarrell.

Verſe 8. And it was given to her that ſhe cloath her ſelfe with ſilke glittering and white. For the ſilke are the | iuſtifications of Saints.

RHEM. 3. [8. Iuſtifications of Saints] Here the Hereticks in their tranſlation could not altar the word Iuſtifications into ordinances and conſtitutions, as they did falſly in the firſt of Saint Luke, whereof ſee the Annotation there verſ. 6. But they are forced to ſay in Latine iuſtificationes, as Beza, and in Engliſh righteouſneſſe, (for iuſtifications they will not ſay in any caſe for feare of inconuenience.) yea and they cannot deny but thoſe iuſtifications bee the good workes of Saints, but where * they make this gloſe, that they be ſo called, becauſe they are the fruits or effects of faith, and of the iuſtice which we haue by onely faith, it is moſt euidently falſe and againſt the very Text, and nature of the word: for there is no cauſe why any thing ſhould be called a mans iuſtification, but for that it maketh him iuſt. So that iuſtifications, be the vertues of faith, hope, charity and good deedes, iuſtifying or making a man iuſt, and not effects of iuſtification. Neither faith onely, but they altogether bee the very ornaments and inward garments, and beauty and iuſtice of the ſoule, as heere it is evident.

Beza. Iuſtifications are good workes, not as the effects of faith iuſtifying, but becauſe themſelues alſo with faith iuſtifie a man

FVLK. 3. For our tranſlation of this word δικαιώματα, Luke the 1. the Reader may be reſolved in that place. We tranſlate a word that hath divers ſignifications, diverſly, as the underſtanding of every place requireth: So here we tranſlate it iuſtifications, righteouſneſſe or iuſt deedes, as the authour of the Homilies in S. Auguſtine tranſlateth them, Iuſta facta, or any thing that hath the ſame ſenſe. And we feare no inconvenience to tranſlate it iuſtifications in Engliſh: for our iuſtification before God by faith onely, will never be overthrown by that terme, though we deny not, but theſe iuſtifications be the good workes of Saints. But where we ſay they be ſo called, becauſe they are the fruits of faith, and of the iuſtice which we haue by faith onely (you ſay) it is moſt euidently falſe, and againſt the very text and the nature of the word: Concerning the text it is this, To her was granted that ſhee ſhould bee cloathed with fine linnen or ſilke, cleane and ſhining: for the fine linnen or ſilke, are the iuſtifications of Saints.

Iuſtification by faith onely

This text compared with Apocalypſe 7. 14. ſheweth whence the beautie of this garment commeth, verily, not of the iuſtice of men, but of the bloud of the Lambe, and the merite of his ſacrifice. Therefore the text hath no euidence for you. But the narure of the word affordeth you a ſtrong argument: for there is no cauſe (you ſay) why any thing ſhould be called a mans iuſtification, but for that it maketh him iuſt. Here you reaſon childiſhly of the etymologie of the Latin word iuſtifico, which ſignifieth indeed properly to make iuſt, but in Scripture is often vſed, to account iuſt, to declare iuſt, to acquit in iudgment as infinite words, are vſed vnto other ſignifications, then can bee taken out of their preciſe etymologie, or deriuation.

Therfore you muſt reaſon (if you wil gain any thing) of the nature of the Greek word δικαιώματα, except you will allow iuſtifications to be taken in as many ſignifications as δικαιώματα be. If you will do ſo as reaſon would enforce you, there is cauſe why a thing may be called a mans iuſtification, which doth not make him iuſt but declare him to be iuſt. In the Pſalmes oftentimes your vulgar Latine tranſlation uſeth this word Iuſtificationes tuas, for Gods iuſtifications, and Luke 1. Iuſtificationibus Domini. in the Inſtifications of the Lord might you not as well ſay? there is no cauſe why any thing ſhould be called the Lords iuſtification, but for that it maketh him iuſt.

If there be cauſe why any thing may be called the Lords iuſtification, which doth not make him iuſt, there is alſo cauſe, why a thing may be called a mans inſtification, which doeth not make him iuſt, but declare him to bee iuſt: and ſo are good workes the iuſtifications of Saints becauſe they declare him to bee iuſt, not becauſe they make them iuſt before God, as wee haue proued more at large Iac. 2. Wiſedom is iuſtified of her own children, and yet ſhee is not made iuſt by them. The Publicans and ſinners iuſtified God, yet they made not God iuſt. Hieruſalem hath iuſtified her ſiſter Sodoma, yet ſhe hath not made her iuſt, wicked iudges ſomtimes iuſtifie the vngodly men, yet they make them not iuſt. The phariſes iuſtified thẽſelues, yet they made not themſelues iuſt. The Lawyers call that a mans iuſtification, which maketh neither the man nor his cauſe iuſt, but declareth them to be iuſt. Againe the word is not iuſtification, but iuſtifications in the plurall number, wherupon you may as wel conclude, that euery good work is a mans iuſtification by making him iuſt, and ſo you haue not two iuſtifications making a man iuſt, according to your new diſtinction, but infinite iuſtifications. But in truth all theſe iuſtifications are theffect of one iuſtification, which is by faith, only in the merits of Chriſt, and are the ornament and outward garment, declaring the inward iuſtice of the ſoule, For Garments are all without the thing clothed with them, and are not called inward, in reſpect of the thing clothed, but in reſpect of more outward garments. Therefore this pure ſhining garments is the light of good works, proceeding from inward faith, and ſhining outwardly, to the glory of their heauenly Father.

Verſe. 10. ¶ And I fell before his feete, to adore him. And he ſaith to me, See thou doe not: I am thy fellow-ſeruant, and of thy brethren that haue the teſtimony of IESVS. Adore God. For the teſtimony of IESVS, is the ſpirit of prophecy.

S. Iohns adoring of the Angell, explicated againſt the Proteſtants abuſing the ſame.

RHEM. 4 [10. And I fell] The Proteſtants abuſe this place, and the example of the Angels forbidding Iohn to adore him being but his fellow ſeruant, and appointing him to adore God, againſt all honor, reuerence, and adoration of Angels, Saints, or other ſanctified creatures, teaching that no religious worſhip ought to be done vnto them. But in truth it maketh for no ſuch purpoſe, but onely warneth vs that diuine honor & the adoration due to God alone, may not be giuen to any Angels, or other creatures, S. Auguſt. de vera relig. cap. vltimo. And when the Aduerſaries replie that ſo great an Apoſtle as Iohn was, could not be ignorant of that poynt, nor would haue giuen diuine honour, vnto an Angell (for ſo he had been an Idolater) and therefore that he was not reprehended for that, but for doing any religious reuerence or other honour whatſoeuer to his fellow ſeruant; we anſwer that by the like reaſon S. Iohn being ſo great an Apoſtle, of this later kind if reuerence had been vnlawfull and to be reprehended, as the Proteſtants hold it is, no leſſe then the other, could not haue been ignorant thereof, nor would haue done it.

S. Iohn erred onelyin the perſon, miſtaking the angell to bee Chriſt himſelfe, and ſo adoring him as God. Apoc. 1. Eſay 9. in Græco Malac. 3.

Therefore, they might much better haue learned of S. Auguſtine (q. 61. in Geneſ.) how this fact of S. Iohn was corrected by the Angel, and wherein the errour was. In effect it is thus, That the Angell being ſo glorious & full of Maieſtie repreſenting Chriſts perſon, and in his name vſing diuers words proper to God, as, I am the firſt and the laſt, and aliue and was dead, and ſuch like, might well be taken of S. Iohn, by errour of his perſon, to be Chriſt himſelfe, and that the Apoſtle preſuming him to be ſo indeed, adored him with Diuine honour: which the Angell correcting, told him he was not God, but one of his fellowes, and therefore that he ſhould not ſo adore him, but God. Thus then wee ſee Iohn was neither ſo ignorant, to thinke that any vndue honour might be giuen to any creature: nor ſo ill, to commit idolatrie, by doing vndue worſhip to any Angell in heauen: and therefore was not culpable at all in his fact. but onely erred materially (as the Schoolemen call it) that is, by miſtaking one for another, thinking that which was an Angell, to haue been our Lord: becauſe he knew that our Lord himſelfe is alſo *called an Angel, and hath often appeared in the viſions of the faithfull.

S. Iohn ſinned not in this adoratiõ. Another explication of this place.

And the like is to be thought of the Angell appearing in the 22. of the Apocalypſe, whether it were the ſame or an other, for that alſo did ſo appeare, that Iohn could not tell whether it were Chriſt himſelfe or no, till the Angell told him. Once this is certain, that Iohn did not formally (as they ſay) commit idolatry, nor ſin at all herein, knowing all dueties of a Chriſtian man, no leſſe then an Angell of heauen, being alſo in as great honour with God, yea and in more then many Angels. Which perhaps may be the cauſe (and conſequently an other explication of this place) that the Angel knowing his graces and merites before God, would not accept any worſhip or ſubmiſſion at his hands, though Iohn againe of like humilitie did it, as alſo immediately afterward chap. 22. which belike hee would not haue done, if hee been preciſely aduiſed by the Angell but a moment before, of errour and vnductifulneſſe in the fact. How ſoeuer that be, this is euident, that this the Angels refuſing of adoration taking nõt away the due reuerence and reſpect wee ought to haue to Angels or other ſanctified perſons and creatures, and ſo theſe words, See thou do it not, ſignifie rather an earneſt refuſall, then any ſignification of crime to be committed thereby.

FVLK. 4. This place is not abuſed by Proteſtants, but invincibly proveth againſt Papiſts, that all religious worſhip and ſervice, belongeth to God, and may not be yeelded to any creature, But you ſay, it maketh for no ſuch purpoſe, but onely warneth vs that diuine honour, and the adoration due to God alone, may not be giuen to any creature: yet the Text is plaine, that all religious worſhip and ſervice is due to God alone, and to no creature. For the Angell ſaith not, worſhip God onely with this kinde of ſervice, but worſhip God: ſignifying that this ſervice was due onely to God. And this is that which S. Auguſtine ſaith: De vera religione cap. vltimo. Quare honoramus eos, &c. We honour the Angels with loue, not with ſervice, neither do we buil'd temples to them: for they will not be ſo honoured of vs, becauſe they know that we our ſelues, when we are good, are the Temples of the higheſt God. Therefore it is rightly written that a man was forbidden by the Angell, that he ſhould not worſhip him, but one God onely, vnder whom hee was a fellow ſeruant with him. But they which inuite vs that we ſhould ſerue them and worſhip them as Gods, are like proud men, which if they might, would likewiſe be worſhipped: but to ſuffer theſe men it is leſſe perillous, but to worſhip the Angell it is more dangerous. Afterward he concludeth in theſe words, Let Religion therefore binde vs to one God omnipotent, becauſe betweene our minde by which we vnderſtand him to be the Father and the truth, that is, the inward light by which we vnderſtand him, there is no creature interpoſed.

By which ſentences it is manifeſt that he meaneth, that all Religious worſhip and ſervice, is due onely to God, and that whoſoeuer Angell or man, requireth or receiveth any religious worſhip or ſervice, he uſurpeth that which is due onely to God. Where it is to be noted, that he overthroweth your distinction of Latria and Dulia, seeing hee denyeth religious Dulia or service, to be due unto Angels, who are to be honoured with loue, not with service. But where we reply, that S. Iohn so great an Apostle could not be ignorant, that no Angell is to be worshipped as God, and therefore intended not to worship the Angell as God. You answer by the like reason, if this latter kinde of reverence had beene unlawfull, he could not haue beene ignorant thereof, nor would haue done it. Heere againe we reply, it is manifest by his own confession, that hee was twice deceived in this point, not of ignorance, but of forgetfulnesse in this extasie of minde, while hee beheld the glory of the Angell that shewed him these things. But the other errour of worshipping the creature as the Creator was too grosse an errour, to enter into any so religious and wise an heart as the Apostle had. Athanasius cont. Ar. lib. 2. Angelus in Apocalipsi ad Ioannem qui volebat ipsum adorare, vide inquit, ne feceris, &c. Quare Deus solus est adorandus id quod vetuit etiam ipsi Angeli. Quamvis enim inter eos alius alij gloria antecellat, omnes tamen creati sunt, ideoque non adorari, sed adorare dominum debent. Euthym. Panopl. par. 1. tit. 11. Greg. Nyssen. Orat. ad Simpl. de filio. Qui creatum esse ipsum dicit a veri Dei natura alienum facit. Quid igitur faciunt qui creatum asserunt, adorant ne illum nec ne? Si non adorant, Iudæos imitantur, qui Christi negant adorationem. Si adorant, sunt Idolatræ, cum alienum adorent a vero Deo. Euth. Pan. par. 1. tit. 11. Cyrillus Thesaur. lib. 2. Quomodo non est Deus quem & Angeli naturæ Deum agnoscunt? Si enim ut inconsiderate isti dicunt, sactus est, apparet non solum nos, sed ipsas celestes decepi virtutes, adorantes rem creatam præter creatorem. Quod si absurdum est dicere, Sanctos Angelos errare, sed vera potius in illis est cognitio Dei, & adorant eum ut naturæ filium: non est igitur creatus aut factus. Gegorius Bœticus de fide ad Gallan. Plac. Ang. Ergo & hinc Deus verus ostenditur filius, cum adoratur. Dei enim est adorari Si quidem & alibi docet Apostolus de filio Dei esse scriptum. Et adorant eum omnes Angeli Dei, scilicet quia verè Deum & Dominum.

Wee might haue learned (you say) of S. Augustine, how this fact of Iohn was corrected by the Angell. S. Augustine indeed answering the question, how the civill adoration yeelded by Abraham to the people of the Land, might stand with that saying of Christ (Thou shalt adore the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue) sheweth, that Civill adoration is not there forbidden, but Religious adoration and service which is proper to God. Neither let it moue (saith he) that in another place in a certaine Scripture, the Angell forbiddeth a man to adore him: for the Angell seemed or appeared to be such an one as hee might be adored insteed of God: and therefore the worshipper was to be corrected. Whereby hee meaneth no more, but that the glorious apparition of the Angell deceived Iohn, to thinke that hee might be adored with religious worship, which pertaineth onely to God; whereas Angels are to be honoured (as he said before) with loue, not with religious service. But you say, the Angell was so full of Maiestie representing Christs person, and in his name using divers words proper to God, As I am the first and the last, and aliue and was dead, that hee might well be taken by S. Iohn, by errour of his person, to be Christ himselfe. But this could not be for divers causes. For this was not the same person that appeared in the first chapter, like to the Sonne of man, which was Christ himselfe, and no Angel that represented his person. As Christ himselfe appeared in his own person to S. Paul Acts 9. And at other times, so did he there unto Iohn.

Secondly, S. Iohn confesseth, that this Angell which shewed him these things, was one of the seuen Angels that had the seuen vials Chap 17. 1. Therefore he could not bee deceiued in his person, to thinke he was Christ. Thirdly, he willed him immediately before, to write, Blessed are they that are called to the Supper of the Lambe, which S. Iohn was not ignorant to be Christ, according to the vision which he reporteth Chap. 5. Therefore it is manifest, that Iohn knew this Angel not to be Christ, and therefore erred not in his person to think he was Christ: and not intending to worship him as Christ, but to worship him as an heauenly Angel that had shewed him these things, & opened these great mysteries vnto him. Therefore in vaine you go about to excuse his fault with your shamelesse distinction, which he doth plainely confesse, to the glory of God and the edifying of the Church in the true and sincere worship of God. Where you say, he was not culpable at al in his fact, and sinned not in this adoration you will belike remoue the crime from Iohn to the Angell, who forbade him the fact, wherein he sinned not, nor was culpable at all, and it is a very grosse errour of your Schoolemen to hold, that if a man worship a deuill in the shape of an Angell, hee sinneth not, nor committeth idolatry formally but onely erreth materially. As though sinne of ignorance and errour were no sinne, because it is not so great, as sinne against knowledge: and as though men were not bound to learn to know God, that they worship none in stead of God, nor with the worship that is due onely to God. The man of God that beleeued the old Prophet which lyed vnto him, sinned grieuously, as appeared by his punishment, because he transgressed the word of the Lord and did not examine his propheeie, by that which he was assured by the word of God. 1. Reg. 13. So if Iohn had worshipped the Angel as Christ, he was culpable, because hee did not first consider whether he were Christ indeed. But in truth he did so appeare to be one of the 7. Angels, that Iohn could not be ignorant that he was not Christ. But where you defend him by his knowledge of all duties of a Christian man, your labour is vaine to excuse him, seing not only in this place, but also after this admonition, he comitted the same offence, as he confesseth Cap. 22. of human frailtie and forgetfulnes, though not of generall ignorance of Christian duty. Vpon which place Ambrosius Ansbertus writeth thus: It is greatly to be marueiled why Iohn contrary to the prohibition of the Angell, would haue worshipped him the second time. For before in like maner he had forbidden him to adore him, and taught that God only is to be adored. What meaneth it therefore, that contrary to his commandement, who verily as a messenger of truth, hath told him before, that this honour of reuerence was of duty to be offered not to a creature, but to the Creator, he would now honour him againe? Vnlesse perhaps hee ioyned this and the former vision together, and repeateth the same things which he did before: or els being stricken with great astonishment of the visions, he confesseth that he had forgotten that which the Angell commanded him before, and so would haue adored him againe.

That you affirme, Iohn to haue been in as great honor with God, yea and in more then many Angels: You shew your boldnesse, to pronounce so confidently of that which no mortall creature knoweth. The word of God telleth vs of the dignity of the children of God after the resurrection to be equall with Angels, but in this frailtie of life whereto they are subiect, they must needs bee inferiour to Angels, seing Christ himselfe in whom there was no frailtie of sinne, was made inferiour to the Angels, by the suffering of his death. Heb. 2. 9. Your second explication is yet more absurd, that the Angell and S. Iohn should strein courtesie (as men do) in yeelding & refusing reverence one of another. But the words of the Angel do plainly confute this fond glos. For rendring a reasō why he wil not be adored by Iohn, he saith that he himselfe is his fellow seruant, not that Iohn is in graces and merits before God as good as he, but is a seruant as wel as he, bound to worship God their common Lord as much as he is: nor to receiue worship of his fellow seruants. Secondly he saith, that he is fellow seruant not onely of Iohn, but of the rest of his brethren that haue the testimony of Iesus. And (cap 22.) of them also that keepe the words of this booke, that is, of all true Christians. Therefore hee streineth not curtesie in respect of Iohns great graces and merits: for he will not receiue this worship of any Christian, by the same reasō that he refuseth it of Iohn. Therefore as the words are manifest, Iohn is precisely admonished of the Angell of errour and undutifulnes in the fact, yet soone after of forgetfulnesse falleth into the same error & undutifulnes againe. But howsoeuer that be (you say) this is euident, that this the Angels refusing of adoration, taketh not away the due reuerence and respect wee ought to haue to Angels, or other sanctified persons and creatures. This should be easily granted if you could stay heere: for we would not by any meanes take away the due reverence and respect we ought to haue to holy persons and things, whatsoever be sanctified by God. But it is evident that this the Angels refusing of adoration taketh away all religious adoration or seruice of Angels or other creatures whatsoever, which is due onely to God. But where you say these words, See thou doe it not, signifie rather an earnest refusall, then any signification of crime committed thereby, it is very absurd. For these words be not onely of refusall, but of prohibition, (as every childe knoweth) and S. Augustine in the places before mentioned doth testifie. Seeing therefore they prohibit that which was not to be done, (as S. Augustine also confesseth) the doing of that which the Angell forbiddeth, must needs be a crime, whosoever committeth it, and the greater after so earnest a prohibition.

The Protestants by conference of Scriptures might finde religious adoration of creatures. Aug. de vera relig. c. 55. השתחוה προσκυνεῖν.

RHEM. 5. And marvell it is that the Protestants making themselues so sure of the true sense of every doubtfull place by conference of other Scriptures, follow not heere the conference and comparing of Scriptures that themselues so much or only require. We will giue them occasion & a method so to do, thus: Hee that doubteth of this place, findeth out three things of question which must be tried by other Scriptures. The first, whether there ought to be, or may be any religious reverence or honour done to any creatures, taking the word religion or religious worship not for that speciall honour which is properly and onely due unto God, as S. Augustine sometime useth it, but for reverence due to any thing that is holy by sanctification or application to the service of God. The second thing is, whether by use of Scriptures, that honour be called adoration in latine, or by a word equivalent in other languages, Hebrew, Greek, or English. Lastly, whether we may by the Scriptures fall down prostrate before the things, or at the feet of the persons that we so adore. For of civill duty done to our Superiours by capping, kneeling, or other curtesie, I think the Protestants will not stand with us; though indeed, their arguments make as much against the one as the other.

1. Religious worship of creatures. Ps. 5. 137. Da. 6. 10. Ios. 7

2 The same is called adoration.

But for religious worship of creatures (which we speak of) let them see in the Scriptures both old and new: first, whether the Temple, the Tabernacle, the Arke, the Propitiatory, the Cherubins, the Altar, the bread of proposition, the Sabboth, and all their holies, were not reverenced by all signes of devotion and religion: whether the Sacraments of Christ, the Priests of our Lord, the Prophets of God, the Gospell, Scriptures, the name of IESVS, and such like (which be by use, signification, or sanctification, made holy) are not now to be reverenced: and they shall finde all these things to haue been reverenced, yea they shall finde them to haue beene reverenced of all the faithfull, without any dishonour of God, and much to his honour. Secondly, that this reverence is named adoration in the Scriptures, these speeches do proue, Psal. 98. Adore ye his footstoole, because it is holy, Heb. 11. He adored the top of his rod. Thirdly, that the Scriptures also warrant us (as the nature of the word adoration giueth in all three tongues) to bow down our bodies, to fall flat on the ground at the presence of such things, and at the feet of holy persons, especially Angels, as Iohn doth here, these examples proue. Abraham adored the Angels that appeared to him, Moses also the Angell that shewed himselfe out of the bush, who were creatures, though they represented Gods person, as this Angell here did that spake to S. Iohn. Balaam adored the Angell that stood before him with a sword drawne, Numb. 22. Iosua adored, falling flat down before the feet of the Angell, calling him his Lord, knowing by the Angels own testimony, that it was but an Angell, who refused it not, but required yet more reverence, commanding him to pluck off his shooes, because the ground was holy, no doubt so made by the presence onely of the Angell.

3 Falling prostrate before the persons or things adored Gen. 18. Ex. 3. Ios. 5. Adoring of Angels.

Yea not onely to Angels, but even to great Prophets this devotion was done, as to Daniel by Nabuchodonosor who fell flat upon his face before him, and did other great offices of religion, which the Prophet refused not, because they were done to God rather then to him, as Saint Hierom defendeth the same against Porphyrie, who charged Daniel with intollerable pride therein, and the said holy Doctor alledgeth the fact of Alexander the great, that did the like to Ioiadas the high Priest of the Iewes. Howsoever that be (for of the sacrifice there mentioned there may be some doubt, which the Church doth alwayes immediatly to God, and to no creature) the fact of the Prophets (4. Reg. 2.) to Eliæus, is plaine: where they perceiving that the double grace and spirit of Elias was given to him, fell flat down at his feet and adored. So did the Sunamite. To omit that Achior adored Iudith, falling at her feet, as a woman blessed of God, and infinite other places.

* or Iaddus.

4 Reg. 4. Iudith. 13.

All which things, by comparing the Scriptures, our adversaries should haue found to bee lawfully done to Men and Angels, and soveraigne holy creatures; whereby they might convince themselues, and perceiue, that that thing could not be forbidden S. Iohn to do to the Angell, which they pretend: though the Angell for causes might refuse even that which S. Iohn did lawfully unto him, as S. Peter did did refuse the honour given him by Cornelius, according to S. Chrysostomes opinion, hom. 23 in c. 10. Act. yea even in the third chapter of this booke (if our adversaries would looke no further) they might see where this Angell prophesieth and promiseth that the Iewes should fall downe before the feet of the Angell of Philadelphia, and adore. See the Annot. there.

FVLKE. 5. Concerning the expounding of doubtfull places of scripture by conference of other cleare places, wherein you deride us: S. Augustine saith, Nothing almost is fetched out of those absurdities, which is not found else where, to be uttered most plainly, de doct. Christ. lib. 2. c. 6. Now this text is so cleere and evident of it selfe, as it is one of those places, which may serue to expound the obscurity or difficulty of other texts, where any doubt may arise concerning religious adoration and service which is due onely to God. But seeing you will be blinde in the cleere light of the Sunne at mid-day, and make doubt of this place where none at all needeth, but to cloake your shamefull idolatry, yeelding religious worship and service to creatures: Let us consider your three doubts or questions: First, whether there ought to bee or may be any religious reverence or honour done to any creature. But here (because you haue S. Augustine flat against the grand question) you distinguish of this word Religion and Religious by petition of principle, or begging the matter in controversie, that there is one kinde of Religious worship proper to God, and another to creatures: where as the question is, whether all religion and religious worship and service be due onely to God. But because I will not striue with you about a terme, if we might agree about the matter: So that you will grant with S. Augustine in the place by you quoted, That we may haue no religion or religious worship and service of the workes of men, that is of Images, for the workemen themselues that make such things are better then their workes, whom yet we ought not to worship. That we ought to haue no religion or religious worship and service of dead men: For if they lived godly, they are not so taken that they seek such: but they will haue him to be worshipped of us, by whose illumination they reioyce, that we are fellow seruants of their dignitie or worthinesse. Therefore they are to be honoured for imitation sake, they are not to be adored for Religion.

Finally, that we ought to haue no religion of Angels, whom we honour with loue, not with seruice: I say, so that you will grant all this with S. Augustine, I will not hold you so hard at the staues end for this terme Religious, but answer your question. That there is a religious reverence due to such things as are holy by sanctification, and application to the service of God, in respect that they are by God sanctified and applied to his seruice. But this due reverence and estimation of such things, is no religious adoration, worship or seruice of those things, or due to those things. Therefore the Temple, the Tabernacle, the Arke, the Propitiatory, the Cherubims, the Altar, the bread of proposition, the Sabboth, and all their holies, were esteemed and reverenced as holy things, but not adored, worshipped, or served, by religious kneeling to them, bowing to them, or praying to them. Likewise the Sacraments of Christ, are to be reverently esteemed and honoured, as the seales of Gods promises: but not to be adored, worshipped, served, kneeled to, or prayed unto.

For to omit the Lords Supper because it is in controversie, what true Catholike ever said, that Baptisme, or the water thereof is to be adored, worshipped, served, by bowing or kneeling to it, or by praying to it? The like I say of the Gospell, Scriptures, or the name of Iesus, to which no religious adoration, worship, or service is due, although they are to be honoured and religiously esteemed for God and Christs sake, whose Word and Name they are. And although men may kneele while the Scripture is read, or bow while Iesus or Christ is named, yet to the bookes, or the sound of the name, no adoration is to be given, but onely to God. As for Gods Priests and Prophets, they are to be honoured with civill reverence for religions sake, with charity, as S. Augustine saith of Angels, not with religious service, with duties of the second table, not with any duty of the first Table.

Your second question is, Whether that honour be called adoration in Latine, or be a word equivalent in other languages. Whereto I answer, That in the Scripture that religious reverence and due estimation of holy things, is never called adoration, worship or service of those things, nor by any other word equivalent. For the Prophet, Psal 98. saith not, Adore his footstoole, but Adore yee at, or before his footstoole: because he is holy. For that 5. vers. is plainly expounded in the last verse of the Psalme, even in your vulgar translation. But in the Heb. text it is plaine as I said before. Likewise Heb. 11. the text is not, That Iacob adored the top of his rod, but that he adored vpon the end of his staffe, that is leant vpon his staff, as is proued in the answer to your notes upon that text. Your last question is, Whether we may by the Scriptures fall down prostrate before those things, or at the feet of the persons that we so adore? To this quest. I answer first, that with religious adoration we may not adore any thing or person, but God onely. But wee may fall downe prostrate, or kneele in adoring of God, before those holy things and persons. Where you say, that our arguments make as much against civill duety, as religious, it is utterly false. For wee distinguish duties of adoration, according as God himselfe hath distinguished them by the two Tables of his Law. And in the first Table of Religion we finde but one duty of adoration, which is prohibited to be given to any creature, and commanded to be given onely to God. But that the Scriptures do warrant us, to bow down our bodies at the presence of them, or at the feet of holy persons, specially Angels, you haue examples to proue. I might answer you, that examples are no warrant against a law, except they be allowed by the law, or the law maker. Although some ancient writers thinke, that before Christ came in the flesh Angels might be adored, but not since. But to examine your examples, first you say, Abraham, adored the Angels that appeared to him, Gen. 18. Whereto I answer, he adored them with civill adoration, as honourable and reverend personages, because they came in the shape of men, supposing them to be men, as his preparation for them declareth: yet one of them was Christ, whom hee might haue worshipped with divine honour. Secondly, you say, Moses adored the Angel that shewed himselfe out of the bush, which was a creature, although he represented Gods person, Exod. 3. as the Angell that spake heere to S. Iohn. Concerning the Angell that spake to S. Iohn, I haue answered before. But touching Moses, your vulgar Latine Text is plaine, that it was the Lord himselfe, and the Hebrew text calling him the Angell of the Lord, meaneth plainly Christ, and no creature. So doth S. Paul call him expresly. 1. Cor. 10. 9. And Exod. 13. 21. he is called the Lord which led his people out of Egypt, that sometimes is called the Angell, because he is the Angell of the Couenant, as Malachy calleth him, Malach. 3. 1.

Thirdly, Balaam adored the Angell that stood before him with his sword drawn, Numb. 22. I might answer peradventure, that Balaams example is meete for Balaamites to follow. But indeed the Hebrew Text saith not, that he adored the Angell, but that he inclined his head, and bowed himselfe upon his face: adoring God when he saw his Angell ready to take vengeance of him. But Iosua adored falling flat down before the feet of the Angell, calling him his Lord, knowing by the Angels own testimony that it was but an Angell. I answer, hee knew by the Lords testimony that it was Christ himselfe, the Prince of the Armies of the Lord, that appeared to him in the similitude of a man. And within three verses after hee is called Iehoua, the Lord himselfe. Wherefore neither this, nor any other examples you can bring, proveth that it is lawfull, to adore, worship, or serue Angels.

Yet you proceed and say, that not onely to Angels, but also to great Prophets, this devotion was done, as to Daniel by Nabuchodonosor.

I answer, that no religious adoration was ever lawfully given to any Prophet, but civill adoration of loue, not of Religious service (though in respect of God, whose servants they were) as all civill honour given to earthly Kings and other persons in authority, is in respect of God, whose Ministers they are, yet is no religious adoration, worship or service. And therefore it was shamefull idolatry that Nabuchadnezar would haue offered sacrifice to Daniel, who (without doubt) did withstand him, though it be not expressed: yet it is easily to be gathered, not onely by the piety of Daniel, that would never admit such a sacriledge, but also by the 47. verse of that Chapter, where the Kings answer to Daniel is rehearsed, acknowledging that the God of the Iewes, is the onely God, to whom onely all religious service and worship is due. Therefore you do shamefully slander the holy Prophet, in saying that hee did not refuse that adoration and outward offices of Religion, yea and S. Hierome that he doth defend the same. And last of all, though Porphire was a wicked blasphemer; yet it is a shame to belie the devill: For neither did Porphire charge Daniel with intollerable pride, but said it was incredible, that such a proud King would adore his captiue.

Therefore these be the words of S. Hierom vpon Daniel 2. 46. At this place Porphyrie doth cauill, that the most proud King neuer would haue adored a captiue. As though the Lycaonians also would not haue offered sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas, because of the greatnesse of their miracles. Therefore the errour of the Gentiles, which thinke all that is aboue themselues to be Gods, ought not to be imputed to the Scripture, which doeth report all things simply as they were done. But also we may say this, that the King himselfe did declare the causes of adoring and offering of hosts, incense, and sacrifice, saying vnto Daniel: Verily your God, is the God of Gods &c. Therefore he doth not so much adore Daniel, as God which reuealed the mysteries in Daniel. As wee read that Alexander the great, King of the Macedonians did, in the high Priest Iehoiada. But if this interpretation be misliked, we must say, that Nebuchodonozar being confounded at the greatnesse and astonishment of the wonders, knew not what he should do: as he that vnderstood who was the true God, and Lord of Kings, and adored his seruant and burned incense to him.

You see plainely that S. Hierom doeth not defend this religious seruice to haue been lawfully offered to Daniel, but yeeldeth reasons that might moue the proud King to worship Daniel, as the Lycaonyans would haue honoured Paul and Barnabas, or thinking to worship God in him, as Alexander did in giuing reuerence to Iaddus the high Priest. Finally the falling down before Elizæus by the children of the Prophets, and by the Sunamite, was ciuill and not religion, so I say of Achior adoring Iudith. Therefore by comparing the Scriptures, we do not finde that religious adoration, worship, or seruice, may bee done to any creature, how holy soeuer, but onely to God and Christ: which S. Iohn was manifestly forbidden to do to any other, But you say, The Angel for causes, might refuse that which S. Iohn did lawfully doe vnto him. But the Angell might not forbid that which was lawfull to be done except you will set him to schole, and teach him such diuinity as hee neuer learned in heauen. For he doth here straightly forbid him; saying, See thou do it not, And addeth a reason why neither hee ought to receiue such adoration, nor Iohn to offer it, because hee is fellow seruant with him, and all true Christians, to whom no such adoration is due: But onely to God. Which if it had not been his expresse meaning, he should haue induced Iohn into an errour, and caused him to thinke that God onely is to be adored, which is an errour by your doctrine, if Saints, Angels, Images, reliques, &c, may be adored with religious adoration. And if there were causes, known to you, why the Angel might refuse that which Iohn did lawfully vnto him, why doth he not rather expresse those causes, then these which you hold to be no causes. If you know not those causes why do you dream of that you know not, and deny those to bee causes which the Angell doeth expresse? Namely, because hee is a seruant, not the Lord; a creature, not God, to whom onely Religious seruice is to be giuen.

But you coniecture there were causes why the Angell might refuse, that Iohn might lawfully giue to him, as Peter did refuse the honour giuen him by Cornelius according to S. Chrysostomes opinion. But you without shame slander S. Chrysostome: for there is no word to proue that Cornelius did lawfully offer to adore Peter, not that Peter might lawfully take such kind of adoration, as I haue shewed. Act. 10. Sect. 7. For adoring of the Angell of Philadelphia, see the place Chap. 3. Sect. 6. Where Christ himselfe, and not this Angell, foreshewth that adoration.

To conclude, Arethas saith, VVorship not mee (saith the Angel) as foreshewing things to come, for this vtterance of prophecy is not mine &c. By which you see that he meaneth, that Iohn worshipped him as an Angell, which had foreshewed these things, not as God, not supposing that he was Christ. Ambrosius Ansbertus saith in the person of the Angell: Take heed that thou go not about to yeeld vnto a creature the honour which is proper to God onely, but rather consider and giue thankes, because hee whom thou goest about to adore, is in nothing thy superiour, is in nothing now found more excellent then thou, because we are fellow seruants of one Lord, & fellow cittizens of one cittie, although according to the dispensation of the mysterie, he seemeth now to be preferred before thee. And hereof certainly thanks are to be giuen to the redeemer of us al, because that nature, which before did worship Angels:

and was not forbidden: now by his comming, is both forbidden to adore them, and also is iudged in nothing inferiour to them. And leſt we ſhould thinke that this dignity is proper onely to Iohn, when the Angell ſaid vnto him: See thou do it not, I am thy fellow ſeruant, immediately hee added and ſaid: and of thy brethren, hauing the teſtimony of Ieſus.

CHAP. XX.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 1 AND he apprehended the dragon the old ſerpent, which is the Deuill and 2 Satan, and ‖ bound him for a thouſand yeares.

RHEM. 1. [2. Bound him.] Chriſt by his Paſſion hath abridged the power of the Deuill for a thouſand yeares, that is the whole time of the new Teſtament, vntill Antichriſts time, when he ſhal be looſed again, that is, be permitted to deceiue the world, but for a ſhort time onely, to wit three yeares and a halfe.

FVLK. If a thouſand yeares ſignifie no certaine number of yeares, but the whole time of the new Teſtament, neither do the 42. moneths of Antichriſts raigne, ſignifie a certaine number of three yeares and an halfe, but rather the whole time of his raigne, which is but ſhort in compariſon to the eternall raigne of Chriſt. The time of Antichriſts raigne.

Verſe. 4. And I ſaw ſeates: and they that ſate vpon them, and iudgement was giuen them and the ſoules of the beheaded for the teſtimony of IESVS, and for the word of God, and that adored not the beaſt, nor his image nor receiued his character in their foreheads or in their hands, and haue liued, and raigned with Chriſt, ‡ a thouſand yeares.

RHEM. 2. [4. I ſaw ſeates.] S. Auguſtine (li. 20. de Ciuit. Dei. c. 9.) taketh this to be ſpoken not of the laſt iudgement, but of the Sees or Conſiſtories of the Biſhops and Prelates themſelues by whom the Church is now gouerned. As the iudgement here giuen, can be taken no otherwiſe better, then of that which was ſaid by our Sauiour Mat. 18. Whatſoeuer you binde in earth, ſhall bee bound in heauen, and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, What haue I to doe to iudge of them that are without? Biſhops conſiſtories and indiciall power. 1 Cor. 5.

FVLK. 2. S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh not of Popiſh Sees and Conſiſtories, in which the Prelates of the Antichriſtian Church take their eaſe in the one, & ſerue their couetouſnes, or exerciſe their cruelty in the other: but he ſaith, they are to be vnderſtood of ſedes præpoſitorum, the ſeates of the ouerſeers or gouernours of the Church, and of the gouernours themſelues, which execute iudgement by preaching the word of God, and exerciſing Chriſtian diſcipline.

RHEM. 3. [4. And the ſoules.] He meaneth (ſaith S. Auguſtine in the place alleaged) the ſoules of Martyrs, that they ſhall in the meane time, during theſe 1000 yeares, which is the time of the Church militant, being in heauen without their bodies, and reigne with Chriſt, for, the ſoules (ſaith he) of the godly departed are not ſeparated from the Church, which is euen now the kingdom of Chriſt for elſe there ſhould bee kept no memorie of them at the altar of God in the communicating of the body of Chriſt: neither ſhould it auaile to haſten to Baptiſme in the perils of death, for feare of ending our life without it: nor to haſten to be reconciled, if we fortune for penance or of ill conſcience to be ſeparated from the ſame body. And why are all theſe things done, but for that the faithfull departed alſo be members of the Church? And though the Martyrs be onely named here, yet it is meant of others that die in the ſtate of grace. During a 1000. yeers, (that is the time of this militant Church.) ſaints raigne with Chriſt in ſoule onely.

FVLK. 2. Ergo the reſt of the ſoules fry not in purgatory, while the martyrs raigne in heauen with Chriſt. For although (ſaith S. Auguſtine) they are not yet with their bodies, yet their ſoules do euen now raigne with him, while theſe thouſand yeares do runne, wherefore it is read elſe where in the ſame booke. Bleſſed are the dead, which die in the Lord, from hence forth now, euen ſo ſaith the ſpirit, that they may reſt from their labours: for their works follow them. So the Church reigneth now, firſt with Chriſt in the liuing & in the dead. For therefore as the Apoſtle ſaith Chriſt dyed that he might haue dominion ouer the quick and the dead. But he maketh mention of martyrs ſoules onely, for that they as chiefe do raigne being dead, which haue fought for the truth to the death: But of a part we vnderſtand the whole, euen the reſt that are dead which perteine to the Church, which is the kingdom of God. Purgatory.

Verſe. 5. ‖ The reſt of the dead lived not, till the thouſand yeares be conſummate, ‖ This is the firſt reſurrection.

RHEM. (5 The reſt liued not.] The reſt which are not of the happy number aforeſaid, but liued and died in ſinne, raigne not with Chriſt in their ſoules during this time of the new Teſtament, but are dead in ſoule ſpiritually, and in body naturally, till the day of iudgement, S. Auguſt. Ibidem. The reſt are dead and damned in ſoule, during the ſame time.

RHEM. 4. [5 This is the firſt reſurrection.] As there bee two generations, one by faith, which is now in Baptiſme: and another according to the fleſh, when at the latter day the body ſhall be made immortall and incorruptible: ſo there are two reſurrections, the one now of the ſoules to ſalvation when they die in grace, which is called the firſt, the other of the bodies at the latter day, S. Auguſt. lib. 20. de Ciuit. cap. 6. The firſt reſurrection of the ſoule onely.

FVLK. 4. Regeneration in the elect is ſealed to them by Baptiſm. But ſeeing Baptiſm may be giuen out of the Church, which ſhall afterward bee effectuall in the Church, when they that were baptized by heretickes, come to the Catholike Church, it is manifeſt that regeneration is not made in Baptiſme ex opere operato of the work wrought. For they may haue the right ſeale of regenera- Opus operatum. The works wrought.

tion, which yet haue not the right faith and Spirit of GOD, whereby they ſhould be regenerated.

Verſe. 6. Bleſſed and holy is he that hath part in the firſt reſurrection, in theſe the ſecond death hath not power: but ‖ they ſhall be Prieſts of God and of Chriſt: and ſhall raigne with him a thouſand yeares.

Prieſts, ſome properly ſo called, ſome unproperly. 1. Pet. 2.

RHEM. 5. [6 They ſhall be Prieſts.] It is not ſpoken (ſaith S. Auguſtine lib. 20. de Civit. c. 10) of Biſhops and Prieſts onely, which are properly now in the Church called Prieſts: but as we call all Chriſtians, for the myſticall chriſme or ointment, ſo, all Prieſts becauſe they are the members of one Prieſt: of whom the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, a holy people, a Kingly Prieſthood. Which words bee notable for their learning that thinke there be none properly called Prieſts now in the new Teſtament, no otherwiſe then all Chriſtian men and women, and a confuſion to them that therefore haue turned the name Prieſts into Miniſters.

The name of Prieſts.

FVLK. 5. Becauſe the common people in S. Auguſtines time, did commonly and ſpecially call them in Latine Sacerdotes, which were Biſhops and Elders, as the Scripture nameth them: hee giueth warning that the word Sacerdotes in this place, doth not ſignifie thoſe ſpeciall officers of the Church, but all true Chriſtians, which are all Sacerdotes, that is, Sacrificers, becauſe they are members of that one high Sacrificer, Chriſt. But you thinke his words notable, becauſe hee ſaith, that Biſhops and Elders are now properly called Sacerdotes, where he meaneth not, that this terme is properly appertaining to them, but that they were now, that is in his time, ſo called peculiarly, whereas the name is generall to all Chriſtians: For hee meaneth not that Biſhops and Elders be called Sacerdotes, that is, ſacrificers properly, and all other Chriſtians unproperly: but the adverbe properly is oppoſite to generall, and ſignifieth no more then ſpecially or peculiarly. Therefore this place is rather a reproving then allowing of them that call the Miniſters of the Church properly, or peculiarly by the name of Sacerdotes, which is common to all Chriſtians, men and women. Neither is it any confuſion to them which refuſe not the name of Prieſt, when it ſignifieth no more then the Greek word importeth, which the Holy Ghoſt uſeth, and from whence it is derived: but onely when by perverſe uſage of our Engliſh ſpeech, it is taken to ſignifie a ſacrificer, which indeed it doth not ſignifie. As for the name Miniſters, being uſed in Scripture, no man ought to refuſe, but rather the name of Sacerdotes, which the Scripture of the new Teſtament, never uſeth for a Biſhop, Elder, or Prieſt of the new Teſtament.

Verſe. 7. And when the thouſand yeares ſhall bee conſummate, ‖ Satan ſhall bee looſed out of his priſon, and ſhall go forth and ſeduce the nations that are upon the foure corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, and ſhall gather them into battell, the number of whom is as the ſand of the Sea.

The binding and looſing of Sathan explicated by S. Auguſtine.

RHEM. 6. [7. Satan ſhall be loſed.] In the whole 8. chapter of the ſaid 20. booke de ciuitate Dei in S. Auguſtine, is a notable commentarie of theſe words. Where firſt hee declareth, that neither this binding nor looſing of Satan is in reſpect of ſeducing or not ſeducing the Church of God: prouing that whether he be bound or looſe, he can neuer ſeduce the ſame. The ſame, (ſaith he) ſhall be the ſtate of the Church at that time when the Deuill is to bee looſed, euen as ſince it was inſtituted, the ſame hath it been and ſhall be at all time in her children that ſucceed each other by birth and death. And a little after. This I thought therefore to be mentioned, leſt any man ſhould thinke, that during the little time wherein the Deuill ſhall be looſed, the Church ſhall not be vpon the earth, he either not finding it here when he ſhall bee let looſe, or conſuming it when hee ſhall by all meanes perſecute the ſame. Secondly, hee declareth that the Deuill to bee bound, is nothing elſe but not to bee permitted by God to exerciſe all his force or fraud intentations: as to bee looſed, is to bee ſuffered by GOD for a ſmal time, that is, for three yeares and a halfe, to practiſe and proue all his power and artes of tentations, againſt the Church and her children, and yet not to preuaile againſt them. Thirdly, this Doctor ſheweth by what great mercy our Lord hath tied Satan and abridged his power during the whole millenarie or thouſand yeares, which is all the time of the new Teſtament vntill then: and with what wiſdom hee permitteth him to breake looſe that little time of three yeares and ſix moneths, toward the latter day, which ſhall be the reigne of Antichriſt. Laſtly, he ſheweth what kind of men ſhall be moſt ſubiect to the Deuils ſeduction, (euen ſuch as now by tentation of Heretikes go out of the Church) and who ſhall auoyd it.

The ſhort reigne of Antichriſt.

Millenarij, or Chiliaſte.

By all which wee may confute diuers falſe expoſitions of old and late Heretikes, firſt, the ancient ſect of the Millenaries, that grounded vpon theſe thouſand yeares named by the Prophet, this hereſie, that there ſhould bee ſo many yeares after the reſurrection of our bodies, in which wee ſhould reigne with Chriſt in this world, in our bodies, in all delights and pleaſures corporall, of meates, drinks, and ſuch like, which they called the firſt reſurrection, of which hereſie Cerinthus was the author. Epiph. har. 77. in fine. Hiero. Comment. c. 19. Mat. Auguſt. har 8. ad Quod vult Deum. Euſebius alſo (li. 3. hiſtoriæ c. 33.) ſheweth that ſome principall men were in part (though after a more honeſt maner concerning thoſe corporall delicacies) of the ſame opinion, by miſconſtruction of theſe words of S. Iohn. Whereby wee learne and all the world may perceiue the holy Scriptures to bee heard, when ſo great Clearkes did erre, and that there is no ſecuritie but in that ſenſe which the Church alloweth of.

The Scriptures hard.

By S. Auguſtines foreſaid explication is euidently deduced againſt

The late Hereticks alſo by the ſaid S. Auguſtines words are fully refuted, affirming not only that the Church may be ſeduced in that great perſecution of the Deuils looſing, but that it hath been ſeduced euen a great peeece of this time when the Deuill is bound: holding that the very true Church may erre or fall from truth to errour and idolatrie, yea (which is more blaſphemie) that the chiefe gouernours of the Church is Antichriſt himſelfe and the very Church vnder him, the whoore of Babylon: and that this Antichriſt, which the Scriptures in ſo many places, and here plainly by S. Auguſtines expoſition sition, testifie, shall reigne but a small time, and that toward the last iudgment) hath been reuealed long sithence, to be the Pope himselfe, Christs own Vicar, and that he hath persecuted the Saints of their sect for these thousand yeares at the least. Which is no more but to make the Deuill to bee loose, and Antichrist to raigne the whole thousand yeares, or the most part thereof, that is, almost the whole time of the Churches state in the new Testament (which is against this and other Scriptures euidently, appointing that, to be the time of the Deuils binding.) Yea it is to make Antichrist and the Deuill weaker toward the day of iudgement then before, and the truth better to be known, and the faith more common, the neerer we come to the same iudgment, which is expresly against the Gospel and this prophecie of S. Iohn the Protestants, that the Church cannot erre, and that the Pope cannot possibly be Antichrist. An invincible demonstration.

We see that the Sects of Luther, Calvin, and other, be more spred through the world then they were ever before, and consequently the Pope and his religion lessened, and his power of punishing (or, as they call it, persecuting) the said Sectaries, through the multitude of his aduersaries, diminished. How then is the Pope Antichrist, whose force shall be greater at the latter end of the world, then before? or how can it be otherwise, but these Sect-masters should be Antichrists neere precursors, that make Christs chiefe Ministers, and the Churches chiefe gouernours that haue been these thousand yeares and more, to bee Antichrists, and themselues and their Sects to be true, that come so neere the time of the Diuels loosing and seduction, and of the personall reigne of Antichrist?

FVLK. 6. S. Augustine saith, which you doe fraudulently omit, to haue a simple colour of his authority against us, If this be to the Diuell, to be bound and shut up, not to be able to seduce the Church, then shall this be his loosing, that he may be able. God forbid. For the Church shall neuer be seduced by him, being predestinated and elected, before the constitution of the world; of which it is said, The Lord knoweth who are his. And yet the Church shall be here euen in that time in which the Diuell is to be loosed: as since the time it was instituted, it hath been here and shall be at all times in her children or members which by birth succeed them that dye.

By this it is manifest, that S. Augustine speaketh not of the visible estate of the Church, in which are many hypocrites, but of the congregation of the elect, that shall never faile, while the world standeth. Now let us see what you gather out of him. First, against the old heretickes the Chiliastes. In which errour certaine great Clarkes were intangled: whereupon you inferre, that the Scriptures are hard, and that there is no security, but in that sence which the Church holdeth. Concerning the hardnesse of the Scripture, it is a sorry conclusion: but because one prophesie of things to come is hard, therefore the whole Scriptures generally are hard. But although we grant unto you, that many things are hard in the scripture, yet it will not follow, that all things are hard therein. S. Augustine doth plainly teach you, De doct. Christ. lib 2. c. 6. That the holy Ghost hath so magnifically tempered the Scriptures, that by plaine and easie places he might prouide against famine, and by hard places he might wipe away lothsomnesse, that commonly ariseth of plenty and abundance easily gotten. And whence the security of understanding those difficulties is to be obtained, he sheweth, when he saith, That nothing almost is with any great study gained out of those obscurities, which is not found elsewhere to be uttered in the Scriptures most plainly. Meaning that all things necessary to saluation, are most plainly deliuered in the holy Scriptures, though there be some things, pertaining either to the times that are past, or to the time to come, which are not necessary for us to know, that are difficult or hard to be understood. There is therefore undoubted security in the plain text of the Scripture, though they that boast themselues to be the Church, doe hold the contrary. Therefore the sence which the Church holdeth, must be grounded upon the Scriptures, if it be true, if it be not grounded upon the Scripture, there is no security in holding it.

The difficulty of the scriptures. Interpretation of the Church.

And seeing the Church is oftentimes as uncertaine as the question to be decided by the authority thereof, what security can there be in the sense which the Church holdeth, before it bee certaine which is the Church? And if there be so easie a rule for security of truth in the sense which the Church holdeth, it is marvaile that it was unknown to Papias, Irenæus, and so many of the ancient Fathers of the primitiue Church, which erred in this point: Of the Kingdom of Christ to continue on earth for a thousand yeares: which S. Augustine iudgeth to comprehend all the time of the Church upon the earth, since the death of Christ to the end: although it may bee well taken for a thousand yeares after Christ, during which time, the deuill had no such power to obscure the grace of Christs redemption, as he hath obtained since by the Popes doctrine of merites, satisfaction, and iustification by workes. And as in Pope Ioane was a liuely image of the whore of Babylon, so of the loosing of Satan in Pope Sylvester the 2. who being a coniurer and sorcerer, by the devils meanes was made Popes, as it is famous even in the Popish stories, a number also of whose Necromanticall schollers, (as Benno the Cardinall, who lived not long after him, affirmeth) by the devils meanes obtained the seate of Antichrist.

But to returne to your obseruations: you say, The late heretickes are by the said words fully refuted, not onely affirming that the Church may be seduced, but also holding that the very true Church may erre, and fall from truth to error and idolatry. What licentiousnesse of lying and slandering is this, that you usurpe so commonly? which of us ever said, that any one of Gods elect might fall from Christ to idolatry finally? much lesse the whole Church of the elect and predestinate, of which S. Augustine speaketh. But this we say with S. Augustine, that They which being ouercome, do follow the Diuel, pertained not to the predestinated number of the sonnes of God. And that it is to be confessed, that when iniquity aboundeth, the charity of many waxeth cold: and that through the vnaccustomed and most grieuous persecutions and deceits of the diuell, when he is loosed, they which are not written in the booke of life, are many that should yeeld. Wee say not therefore that the whole Church, or any true member thereof should be seduced unto destruction, but that many of the visible Church, whose names are not written in the book of life, haue been seduced by Antichrists persecutions and deceits, especially after Satan was let loose. We say also that the Pope, who is the devils Vicar, and not Christs, is Antichrist, which hath no lawfull government of the Church, but usurpeth tyrannie against the true Church of the Elect: and that he with his Clergie which seduce the world, with his blasphemous doctrine are the whore of Babylon, and not the Church of Christ. We say further, that the Kingdom of Antichrist is but a short time, in compariſon of the eternall Kingdom of Chriſt, yet hath it continued many hundred yeares, though not alwaies in like pride and tyrannie But that he hath perſecuted the Saints, for a thouſand yeares at the leaſt, we ſay not: For after he was firſt revealed in Pope Boniface the third, he did fortifie the errours of Purgatorie, and Invocation of Saints, the uſe of Images, and ſuch like, which were ſowed in the Church before him, and added many other errours unto them. Seducing, firſt by hypocriſie and counterfeiting of faſting and continencie, forbidding meates and marriage: having a ſhew of Chriſtian ſimplicity, expreſſed in the viſion of the beaſt with two hornes like the lambe, yet ſpeaking like a dragon, and procuring the full inſtauration of the decayed Romane Empire, (which is the beaſt with ſeven heads and ten hornes) in the See of Rome: Which once obtained, he wallowed in all filthy pleaſures of the fleſh, like an harlot, poyſoning, and alluring the Kings of the earth to commit fornication with him, and having bewitched the earthly Princes, to be come obedient unto him, then at length Sathan was looſed. And the true Church, which deteſting thoſe abhominations, and not able any longer to abide the corruptions in doctrine and manners of his wicked retinue, departed out of Babylon, was moſt cruelly perſecuted, in thoſe whom they called Albigenſes, Waldenſes, paupres de Lugduno, Picardi, &c. and that more cruelly, then ever the Heathen Emperours perſecuted the Chriſtians before Conſtantinus time. For in thoſe heatheniſh perſecutions for the moſt part, the Chriſtians were accuſed and condemned in ſome forme of Law, but in theſe cruelties, bloudie warres were held, and cruell battels fought againſt them to deſtroy them utterly, if it had been poſſible.

After which moſt cruell wars, when they were often driuen into mountaines and deſert places of the Alpes, Appennine, Hercinia ſilua and other corners of the world, or elſe diſperſed and kept cloſe in all regions of Europe, the bloodie inquiſition was ſet vp againſt them, which alſo hath conſumed many thouſands of them. Yet was it neuer able ſo to ouercome them, but that not onely diſperſed members, but euen whole Churches of them continued in the deſert corners, vntill it pleaſed God in this laſt time, to haue his Goſpell openly preached, and his word to make warre againſt Antichriſt, and to haue the victorie as in the chap 19. verſ. 11 to the end of the chapter which prophecy is now in fulfilling, and ſhall be accompliſhed, let Antichriſt, and all that take his part, rage neuer ſo much againſt it. We do not therefore aſſigne, the whole thouſand yeares, or the moſt part to Antichriſts raigne. For we hold that the chiefe tyrannie of Antichriſts (though he ſhewed himſelfe in clayme and vſurpation in part, and deceiued many before, began at the end of the thouſand yeares, when Satan was let looſe, after which time the Popes crueltie was greateſt, when his hereſie by the Schoolemen and the new ſects of fryers were moſt ſtoutly defended.

But that Antichriſt & the Deuill ſhall be weaker toward the day of iudgment, then they were before and the truth better be known, and the faith more common among many, after Antichriſt is begun to be conſumed with the breath of our Lords mouth, which is his holy word, it agreeth not onely with the prophecie of S. Paul but it is moſt cleerely deſcribed in the chapter 19. verſ. 11. to the end. Yea through the whole chapter: which is a prophecie of the ioy of the Church, after the condemnation of Antichriſt and the whore of Babylon is known therein: and of the preparation of the Church which is the Bride to the day of her marriage: of the victorie of the word of God againſt Antichriſt, of the vaine attempts of Antichriſt, and the kings of the earth to reſiſt the word of God and the kingdom of Chriſt. Againſt which there is nothing contrary in the Goſpell or in this prophecy of S. Iohn For though faith ſhall be hard to be found at the comming of our Sauiour Chriſt, & in few, in compariſon of the vnbeleeuers, both open enemies and counterfect Chriſtians, yet faith ſhall be found in the elect, whom he ſhall find at his comming as it is manifeſt 1. Theſ. 4. 17. though they be not ſo many in number, as haue been in other ages, that were before Antichriſt, nor ſo few, as were during the time of his greateſt tyrannie & perſecution. And ſeeing you ſee and confeſſe, that the Pope & his religion is leſſened, & his power of crueltie diminiſhed, I would (if it be poſſible) that you might alſo ſee that the Pope is Antichriſt, who is now conſumed by the breath of the mouth of Chriſt, which is his holy word: and with the two edged ſword that proceeded out of the mouth of him, that ſitteth on the white horſe, whoſe name is the word of God, and is rightly called King of Kings and Lord of Lords. Againſt whom it is folly to ſtriue, for all his enemies muſt bee made his footſtoole. And by him Antichriſt is leſſened, and his cruelty diminiſhed, ſo that his force ſhall not bee greater but daily leſſer, vntill he be vtterly deſtroyed and throwen into hell fire with the deuill and his angels according to this prophecie. For it is not the impudent claime that he maketh to be Chriſts chiefe miniſter, and head of his Church, being the king of pride and the enemie of Chriſts Church, that can any longer hide his wickedneſſe, which is layed ſo open by the preaching of his Goſpell, that all the elect of God may eaſily ſee it: though ſuch as the God of this world hath blinded will not open their eyes, but obſtinately refuſe the light that is offered to their own deſtruction.

The camp of Saints is the Catholike Church through the world.

Verſe 8. And they aſcended upon the bredth of the earth, and compaſſed the camp of the Saints, and the beloved Citie.

RHEM. 7. [8. The campe of the Saints.] S. Auguſtine in the ſaid 20. book de Civit. Dei, c. 11. It is not (ſaith he) to be taken that the perſecutors ſhall gather to any place, as though the Campe of the Saints, or the beloved Citie ſhould be but in one place, which indeed are no other thing but the Church of Chriſt diſperſed through the whole world. And therefore wheresoever the Church ſhall then be (which ſhall bee in all Nations euen then, for ſo much is inſinuated by this latitude of the earth here ſpecified) there ſhall the tents of Saints be, and the beloved Citie of God, and there ſhall ſhe be beſieged by all her enemies, which ſhall be in euery Countrey where ſhe is, in moſt cruell and forcible ſort. So writeth this profound holy Doctor. Whereby we ſee, that, as now the particular Churches of England, Scotland, Flanders, and ſuch like, bee perſecuted by their enemies in thoſe countries, ſo in the time of Antichriſt, the Churches of all nations, as of Italy, Spaine, France, and all other which now be quiet, ſhall be aſſaulted as now the foreſaid are, and much more, for that the generall perſecution of the whole, ſhall be greater then the particular perſecution of any Churches in the world.

FVLK. 7. That which you falſly ſay to be perſecution in the Church of England, Scotland, Flanders, &c. is in trueth the leſſening and diminiſhing of Antichriſt and his religion, which daily proceedeth euen in Italy, Spaine, France, and whereſoeuer he maketh moſt cruell warres againſt the word of God. And that which you ſay ſhall be, that the Church of all nations is to be aſſaulted moſt grieuouſly, hath already been performed by Antichriſt the Pope. Although the battell heere ſpoken of, is a more generall conſent of all the enemies of the Church, inward and outward, ſecret and open, to make aſſault againſt it, though not in one place nor time, nor after one manner. But the univerſall hatred of all the reprobate, is figured under the names of Gog and Magog, in which the Papiſts and Mahometiſts are the chiefe, though enemies one to the other; yet agreeing as the Phariſees & Sadduces in hatred of Chriſt, ſo theſe in perſecuting his Church. By this viſion therefore the Church is comforted, that as ſhee is inſtructed in the former viſions, that neither the heathen perſecutors without the Church, nor Antichriſt ſitting in the middeſt of the Temple of God, ſhould prevaile to deſtroy her, no more ſhould all the enemies of the Church, conſiſting of hypocrites and infidels, which ſhould bee the greateſt number toward the end of the world, though they ioyned in one againſt her, be able to overthrow her, but in fighting againſt her, they ſhould gaine their owne undoubted deſtruction.

Verſe. 9. And ‖ there came down fire from God out of heauen: and deuoured them.

RHEM. 8. [9. There came downe fire.] It is not meant of the fire of Hell (ſaith S. Auguſtine lib. c. 12. into which the wicked ſhall be caſt after the reſurrection of their bodies, but of an extraordinarie helpe that God will ſend from heauen, to giue ſuccourſe to the Saints of the Church that then ſhall fight againſt the wicked: or, the very feruent and burning zeale of religion and Gods honor, which God will kindle in the hearts of the faithfull, to be conſtant againſt all the forces of that great perſecution. What is meant by fire from heauen.

Verſe. 12. And I ſaw the dead, great and little, ſtanding in the ſight of the throne, and bookes were opened: and ‖ and another booke was opened, which is of life: and the dead were iudged of thoſe things which were written in the books according to their works.

RHEM. 9. [12. An other book.] This is the book of Gods knowledge or predeſtination, wherein that which before was hid to the world, ſhall bee opened, and wherein the true record of euery mans works ſhall be conteined, and they haue their iudgement diuerſly according to their works, and not according to faith onely, or lacke of faith onely, for, all infidels (as Turks, obſtinate Iewes, and Heretikes) ſhall neuer come to that examination, being otherwiſe condemned. The booke of euery mans workes opened in the day of iudgement.

FVLK. Men ſhall be iudged according to their works which are the fruits of faith or infidelitie. But in the book of life is not conteined record of euery mans works, but the names of the elect only: for which record there are other bookes opened before. Where you ſay infidels are otherwiſe condemned then for lacke of faith onely, it is true, and yet if they had that faith onely, by which God iuſtifieth the vngodly, they ſhould not be infidels, but faithfull and fruitfull in good workes, and not condemned, but glorified with the reſt of the elect.

CHAP. XXI.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe. 22. AND ‡ Temple I ſaw not therein. For our Lord the God omnipotent is the Temple thereof, and the Lambe.

RHEM. 1. [22. Temple.] All externall ſacrifice which now is neceſſarie duty of the faithfull, ſhal then ceaſe, and therefore there ſhall need no materiall Temple.

FVLK. 1. There is no externall ſacrifice of propitiation any more required, nor any materiall Temple, but the ſpirituall ſacrifices of mortification, praiſe, thankeſgiving, prayer. For teaching, and the publicke exerciſes whereof, the Church hath now need of houſes of aſſemblies, which then ſhall be needleſſe, yet praiſe and thankeſgiving ſhall never ceaſe.

Verſe 27. There ſhall ‡ not enter into it any polluted thing, nor that doth abhomination, and maketh lie, but they that are written in the booke of life of the Lambe.

RHEM. 2. [27. Not enter into it.] None not perfectly cleanſed of their ſinnes, can enter into this heavenly Ieruſalem.

FVLK. 2. All that are cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt, are perfectly cleanſed, and need no purgatory paines to make them cleaner.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 18. And the building of the wall thereof was of Iaſper ſtone: but the Citty it ſelfe ‖ pure gold, like to pure glaſſe.

RHEM. 3. [18. Pure gold.] S. Gregory (lib. 18. Moral. c. 28) ſaith, the heauenly ſtate is reſembled to gold, pretious ſtones, Chryſtall, glaſſe, and the like, for the purity, clarity, glittering of the glorious bodies: where one mans body, conſcience, and cogitations are repreſented to another, as corporall things in this life are ſeene through Chryſtall or glaſſe. The ſtate of glorified bodies.

CHAP. XXII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 2. IN the mids of the ſtreet thereof, and on both ſides of the river, ‡ the tree of life yeelding twelue fruits, rendring his fruits every moneth, and the leaues of the tree for the curing of the Gentiles.

RHEM.1. [2. The tree of life.] Chriſt is our tree of life: in the Church, by the B. Sacrament: and in heaven, by his viſible preſence and influence of life everlaſting, both to our bodies and ſoules: of whom Salomon ſaith: The tree of life to all that apprehend him. Prou.5.

FVLK.1. Chriſt is our tree of life, not onely by the Sacrament of his ſupper (for then they onely ſhould be partakers of life in him which are partakers of the Sacrament) but by faith, and participation of his ſpirit, which laſt is common to all his elect, euen infants, which through infirmitie of their age, haue not faith actually.

Verſe 8. And I Iohn which haue heard, and ſeen theſe things. And *after I had heard and ſeen. I fell down ‡to adore before the feet of the Angell which ſhewed me theſe things.

RHEM.2. [8. To adore before.] You ſee it is all one to adore before the feet of the Angell, and to adore the Angell: though, to adore him, bee not expreſſed as in the 19. chap. See the Annotation there v.20.

Adoration. FVLKE.2. We ſee both are taught, when they are beſide the word of God, as to adore an idol, and to adore before an idol, yet are they not all one. For ſome outwardly boweth before an idol, that in his hart deteſteth it. But to adore before the ark, propitiatory, altar &c. which God by his word alloweth, is not to adore the arke, propitiatory, altar, &c. But God in thoſe places, or in preſence of thoſe things.

Verſe 11. Hee that hurteth, let him hurt yet: and hee that is in filth, let him bee filthy yet: he that is iuſt, and *let him be iuſtified yet: and let the holy be ſanctified yet.

RHEM.3. [11. Let him be iuſtified yet.] Man by Gods grace and doing good works, doth increaſe his iuſtice.

Iuſtification. FVLK.3. Man doing good works by Gods grace, doth increaſe that iuſtice which is a fruit of iuſtification by faith. But that iuſtice by which hee is iuſt in the ſight of God, hee encreaſeth not by good works: for it is perfect in Chriſt, in whom we are iuſt through faith. Iuſtus autem adhuc iuſtiora faciat. Fulg. de rem pec. c.17. Remig. in Pſ.10. Chriſt ſaith, Fecit vt qui iuſti ſunt iuſtificentur adhuc, & qui in ſordibus, ſordeſcant adhuc: illi ad maius præmium, hi ad maiorem damnationem.

Verſe 12. Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, *to render to euery man ‡according to his works.

RHEM 4. [12. According to his works.] Heauen is the reward, hire, and repaiment for good works, in all the Scriptures yet the aduerſaries will not ſee it.

Merite. EVLK.4. Heauen is the reward freely giuen to our good works by the grace of God, not of the merite of workes, nor as an hire to him that worketh. Rom.4.4. But as an inheritance to the children of God, Math.25.34. Rom.8.17. And it is ſaid to bee due, and rendred or repayed, not becauſe it is merited or deſerued by vs, but by Chriſt, and promiſed to vs. And this is the doctrine of all the Scriptures howſoeuer the enemies of Gods grace labour to obſcure it.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM.5. [11. He that hurteth.] It is not an exhortation, but a commination or threatning, that how far ſoeuer the wicked increaſe in naughtines, God hath prouideth anſwerable puniſhment for them.

Verſe 18. For I teſtifie to euery one hearing the words of the prophecie of this book, if any man ſhall adde to theſe things, God ſhall adde vpon him the plagues writ ten in this booke.

The curſe againſt adding or diminiſhing is againſt heretikes, not Catholike expoſitors. RHEM.6. [18. If any man ſhall adde.] The author of the commentaries vpon this booke, bearing the name of S. Ambroſe ſaith thus of this poynt. Hee maketh not this proteſtation againſt the expoſitors of his prophecie, but againſt Hereticks, for the expoſiter doth adde or diminiſh nothing, but openeth the obſcuritie of the narration, or ſheweth the morrall or ſpirituall ſenſe. He curſeth therefore Hereticks that vſed to adde ſomewhat of their own that was falſe, and to take away other things that were contrary to their hereſies. So ſaith this ancient writer. And this was the propertie of them in all ages, and ſo it is of ours now as wee haue noted through the whole Bible, and as we haue in ſundry places ſet forth to the ſight of all indifferent readers in the new Teſtament, that all the world may ſee that the Apoſtles curſe is fallen vpon them, and may beware of them.

FVLK. You ſhall neuer be able to proue that wee haue added any thing that is falſe, or taken away any thing which is true in the whole Bible. What you haue done euen in this tranſlation, and in your annotations, I leaue to the iudgement of the indifferent Readers that will peruſe this anſwere, as alſo the defence of our tranſlations againſt the ſlanderous booke of Gregorie Martine.

Verſe. 20.

Verse. 20. So he saith that giueth testimony in these things. Yea I come quickly, Amen
Come Lord IESVS.

A briefe petition vnto Iesus Christ, to come quickly, as S. Iohn here speaketh, and to iudge the cause of Catholickes and Protestants.

RHEM. in. [20. Come Lord Iesus.] And now O Lord Christ, most iust and mercifull, we thy poore creatures that are so afflicted for confession and defense of the holy, Catholike, and Apostolike truth, conteined in this thy sacred booke, and in the infallible doctrine of thy deere spouse our mother the Church, we cry also vnto thy Maiestie with tenderneſse of our hearts vnspeakable, COME LORD IESVS QVICKLY, and iudge betwixt vs and our Aduersaries, and in the meane time giue patience comfort and constancy to all that suffer for thy name, and truth in thee. O Lord God our onely helper and protector, tarry not long. AMEN.

FVLK. The words of your prayer be good and godly, but that they proceed not from a faithfull heart, not onely your wilfull and obstinate maintaining of errours, against the most cleere light of the truth with your intollerable licentiousneſse of lying and slandering the Saints of God, doe sufficiciently declare: but also your horrible practises of treason and murther, of our most gracious Soueraigne Lady, your naturall liege Queen, by your emissaries, Campion, Parsons, and other like trumpets of sedition, and other ministers of your wickedneſse, Throckmorton, Somarvil, Parry, Sauage, Babington &c. and the Spanish inuasion by you procured and intended against your countrey, doth openly cry against you, that you are men voyd of all feare of God faith, good conscience and religion, so that euery true Christian man may say of you with the Prophet Psal. 36. The wickedneſse of the vngodly hath said in my heart, there is no feare of God, before his eyes, &c. Therefore though you can speake good words in hypocriſie, yet your hart knoweth, and your cauterized conscience can not but beare witneſse that you dare not abide the triall of Gods iudgment, howsoeuer (as all wicked offenders doe commonly) you doe presumptuously appeale vnto it: I will say no more, but with the whole Church of God conclude: COME LORD IESVS, Amen.

God be praised.
